fear of enemies not less than through unworthy jealousy; and no better understanding at the moment seems possible. There are terrible crimes to be expiated, and a bitter awakening must prepare the way. But I that am born of a German mother, cannot believe that the whole of that people is corrupted by the poison of an insolent pride or the passion of unprincipled aggression or the senseless ambition of world dominance. The better elements of a noble race, closely akin to ours, still are there, and surely the time will come, sooner, perhaps, than we yet dare to hope, when the nation will be delivered, will achieve its own deliverance, from an iron-handed tyranny, and take its place in the happier concord of the world.

But that is a hope seen only through the lurid clouds and the stress of this fearful conflict. We have now to fight, to liberate and restore a people cruelly oppressed, to vindicate the right, and if it may be to make an end of war, at least between civilised nations, which make any claim to be Christian. With that conviction we face the duty of the hour, and pray that the sacrifice may not be in vain.

The sons and brothers of our people have fallen and still are to fall, before the end is achieved, in a noble cause. We honour them, and hold them in undying gratitude. What the country feels was expressed in moving words of farewell by Henry Newbolt, when last September three British cruisers were destroyed by an enemy submarine:—

Mother, with unbowed head
Hear thou across the sea
The farewell of the dead,
The dead who died for thee.
Greet them again with tender words and grave,
For, saving thee, themselves they could not save.

To keep the house unharmed
Their fathers built so fair,
Deeming endurance armed
Better than brute despair,
They found the secret of the world that saith,
"Service is sweet, for all true life is death."

Dying for their country they entered into life. It was a service gladly rendered. Sweet it is so to give oneself: and for them, there at the post of duty, it was the only way of life. "Service is sweet, for all true life is death."

So greet thou well thy dead
Across the homeless sea,
And be thou comforted
Because they died for thee.
Far off they served, but now their deed is done,
For evermore their life and thine are one.

That is true of the soldier in the trenches, no less than of the sailor at sea; and in that spirit, with the mother heart of England, let all who sorrow bear their loss. We bear it with them, in undying gratitude and deepest sympathy.

And not for the people of the Homeland only is this noble word spoken, but for our brothers of Canada, of Australia, of New Zealand, of India and of Africa—for all who have united in single-hearted loyalty, in this our union of free peoples, who believe in liberty and justice, and mutual confidence, who desire the welfare of all nations and the peace of the world.

Their death is sacred, and we who remain must be anew consecrated to the same high service—that they shall not have died and we shall not have suffered in vain—but the Divine purpose may be accomplished in us and in the world through this dreadful time, and through the sacrifice of love and loyalty the kingdom may be established, the kingdom of the children of God, in which the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and confidence for ever.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE USE OF GAS AS A WEAPON.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I point out that, not only would it be foolish, it would be immoral to refrain now from using poisonous gas against the enemy. The complaint against the Germans, in this connection, is not that they used a barbarous weapon. All weapons are barbarous when the fighter's object is, as in war it must be, to destroy his enemy; and it is open to doubt whether on a human frame not wholly destroyed the effect of poisonous gas is more disastrous than often is the wound from a single bullet, as in terrible cases which I have seen. The reproach against the Germans is that, in order to gain for themselves an advantage, they used a weapon which they had solemnly promised never to employ. War's necessity, they hold, knows no law. But the conventions signed by the Powers were not concerned with Peace conditions. There was no meaning in them except they were to restrain war's necessity and, just then, to become operative when the peace had been broken. By shameful perfidy our enemies gained an advantage. To allow them to keep it, and continually to improve upon it, would be directly to encourage nations to sign, in peaceful times, undertakings with the direct intention of breaking them, and so taking at a disadvantage more honourable nations, in time of war. This would be immoral. It would be ever to increase the horrors and barbarities of war and to set back the progress of humanity, for very soon no agreements would be made. If for no other reason than that of proving to a foe, who recognises no higher argument, that dishonesty is not good policy, this "retaliation" must, in these stern times, be employed.

"Retaliation" is not, however, the right word to use. "Self-defence" is a more accurate term. Not to arm our soldiers with the gas is permanently to cripple their defence, to leave them helpless against the savageries of an unscrupulous enemy and to jeopardise the righteous issue of the struggle. When our military authorities sent out larger guns to match the huge surprise artillery of the Germans, there was, rightly, no protest made against this "retaliation." There should be no protest now when our brave defenders are being supplied with gas to overcome attacks by gas. It must certainly be revolting to have to smoke your enemy out of his trenches, just as it is to be obliged to stand miles away from him and drop shells where you hope he is. If wars must be fought, as still, it seems, they must, one would prefer to use only weapons for hand to hand fighting—say swords and pikes. Of weapons devised by modern devilry the more we can agree to eliminate from use the better. But only by undertakings honorably kept by all the nations can any be laid aside. Of course there are forms of retaliation which can in no sense be classed as self-defence. To avenge the babies drowned in the Lusitania by wrecking Russian barbers' shops, or even German bakers' property, is obviously wicked; but to class this outbreak of violence by exasperated mobs with the serious and considered decision to protect our army in the field against the result of the enemy's gross breach of faith is absurd. The enemy has broken the agreement. It now binds nobody.—Yours, &c.

A. GOLLAND.

London, N.W., May 24th, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I read with dismay, in THE INQUIRER of May 22nd, your advocacy of the use of poisonous gases under the plea of "military necessity"—a phrase which to most people has become infamous. You have been telling your readers for months past that it is necessary that lives should be given to uphold justice and public right; the time has now come, it would seem, to tell you that lives must be given, if necessary, to uphold right in the choice of the weapons to be used in the frightful business of war. We have, as a nation, to decide whether or not the reasons adduced against the use of poisonous gases still hold good—the fact that Germany has broken her compact in the matter leaves us free, I admit, to use them if we think fit. Our people in general, according to what one reads and hears, believe the effects of poisonous gases to be far more dreadful than the effects of the accredited weapons, and, therefore, if we employ them, we have deliberately chosen to follow Germany in her descent, and, moreover, are giving the sanction of our powerful name to the use of a "diabolical" method of warfare. It was a relief to turn from your paper to a secular paper, The Nation, and there read in the course of a noble article these words:—"To descend, under the pressure of some passing peril, to methods of savagery, is nothing else than to jeopardise the entire spiritual fabric of civilisation and all that it signifies in humanity and efficiency of character."—Yours, &c.,

A. B. STAINER.

18, Burford Road, Nottingham,
May 23, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The horror of gas-poisoning does not lie, as you would almost seem to suggest, in the fact that it is prohibited by the Hague Convention. It lies in its cruelty and cowardice, which oppress our hearts, and the hearts of those who are fighting for us. It is perhaps little wonder that our military leaders should make it a first duty to preserve our armies, and should seize upon the most obvious method of defence and retaliation. But let the nations show them that they value honour and humanity above victory! My beloved son is now in the trenches. Should he fall, let him do so as one "Sans peur et sans reproche," and not as one who has been commanded by his country to stain hand and heart with an indelible shame!—Yours, &c.,

C. ALICIA ROSCOE.

Crockham Hill, Kent, May 24, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Many of your subscribers must read with profound disgust appeals from the Archbishop of Canterbury and your own two correspondents on behalf of lenience to the "huns." Perhaps none have had near relatives poisoned by them. When they can persuade the Germans to cease murdering our troops with their pestilential gas, we are well assured the Allies will gladly refrain from all thought of what from necessity is now forced upon them: till then, I hope the Allies will soon be able to give back to the Prussians a full dose of their own foul physic.—Yours, &c., J. MOTT.

King's Heath, May 24, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I earnestly hope that Miss Martineau's suggestion will be taken up by our churches and a protest made against our adopting German methods of inhuman warfare. We, many of us, feel we must fight, we must go on fighting, we should be wrong not to fight, in this war; but do let it be with clean hands; do let us strive to quench revengeful thoughts, and remember that we are still brothers. I cannot put it in half such good words as those of the Archbishop, but should like to add my little word in agreement with Miss Martineau's letter.—Yours, &c.,

A. DOWSON.

Melton Mowbray, May 25.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Neither your correspondents or yourself quote quite correctly what Lord Kitchener said on the subject of poisonous gases. He did not say that the Allies would resort to the same methods, but to similar ones, a not unimportant distinction. Presumably what his Lordship meant to convey was that the Allies would use a gas which causes temporary paralysis, but no permanently bad after effects.—Yours, &c.,

FREDERICK G. JACKSON.

[We have only been able to publish a selection of the letters which we have received on this subject. We refer to the matter in our Notes of the Week.—ED. of INQ.]

RESPIRATORS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It may interest your readers who are working for the war relief to know that Prof. Haldane says the only useful anti-gas respirators are those made in the Government factory, where they are being turned out at the rate of 70,000 per day. The amateur respirators he pronounces to be positively harmful, as the soldiers rely on them, and too late discover they are not protective.—Yours, &c.,

FLORENCE H. MUSGRAVE.

Shelwood House, Oxford, May 26, 1915.

SOCIAL SERVICE SUMMER SCHOOL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you allow me to draw the attention of your readers to the advertisement appearing in this week's issue of the forthcoming Summer School of the Interdenominational Conference of Social Service Unions, to be held at Swanwick, Derbyshire, at the end of June? The question chosen for discussion, "International Relationships in the Light of Christianity" provides an exceptionally interesting programme, both as to subjects and speakers, and it is of the utmost importance that all the Churches should be well represented in this attempt to discuss from a religious point of view the grave and difficult issues of the times that lie before us.—Yours, &c.,

CATHERINE GITTINGS,

President, N.C.U.S.S.

6, Salisbury Road, Leicester, May 24, 1915.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

UGO BASSI,

THE ITALIAN PATRIOT.

UGO BASSI, the soldier priest and comrade of Garibaldi was the son of an Italian father and a Greek mother, inheriting the finest qualities of both races. Of noble stature and beautiful face, brilliant talents and with the heart of a hero. Writer, musician, and poet, and carrying, it was said, the whole of Dante's 'Divine Comedy' in his memory; as a preacher his was the most prophetic voice in the land.

He was sent to school at Bologna, which he adopted as his home, and which became the scene of his love, his labour, and his martyrdom. As a youth he sought in vain a girl's love—then, with wounded heart entered a monastery in Rome, plunged into arduous study, and finally was ordained a priest. Returning to Bologna he drew the people to him by his moving appeals from the pulpit, and then extended his field of work by travelling all over Italy preaching, helping the poor, and nursing the sick, so poor himself as to be sometimes almost starving. No wonder the people idolised him. And so genuine a champion of the poor was not backward in exposing the vices of the rich and the tyranny of those in high places. He was regarded with suspicion by Rome and sent to Sicily, where, it was thought, he would not be able to do any harm to the existing order which was sacred to the authorities. Indeed, he did a vast amount of good, for while he was there the cholera broke out, and Ugo Bassi's devoted work for the stricken people in Palermo is a bright page in Italy's history.

When the revolution occurred in Lombardy, and the north Italians rose to throw off the yoke of Austria, the patriot priest joined in the struggle for liberty. Not only did he give untiring service in the hospitals, but distinguished himself greatly in battle, at Treviso being thrice wounded. Taken to Venice he recovered, and then, unarmed himself, led the volunteers against the Austrians outside the walls. Thence to Rome, where he joined Garibaldi as his chaplain, donning the red shirt, and taking part in every battle where his fiery enthusiasm moved the intrepid defenders to still greater ardour. In the intervals of the fighting, and under fire, he was tending the wounded and dying with womanly devotion. In the memorable retreat from Rome he played a conspicuous part and when at last the Garibaldians were dispersed and their leader was driven to hide among the swamps of the Adriatic shore, Bassi, with one companion, the brave Livraghi, was captured and taken to Bologna, where he was known and loved so well. On the wall of his prison he drew, in pencil, a beautiful figure of Christ, with the words "Ugo Bassi here endured somewhat, glad of heart in feeling himself innocent. Livraghi, Captain of Garibaldi, was present and with him through all." They were both condemned to death. It would give him the greatest joy, Bassi had said, to die for Garibaldi. Before the Governor of Bologna he declared, "I am guilty of no crime, save that of being an Italian like yourself. I have risked my life for Italy, and your duty is to do good to those who have suffered for her." Like Pilate, the governor would fain have set his captive free, but dare not, and handed him over to the Austrians. And the ecclesiastics rejoiced in their hearts that this Christ-like man was brought to destruction, and they insisted that before his execution the crown of his head and the palms of his hands, on which the oil of consecration had been poured at his ordination, should be flayed. This frightful device was carried out in the prison chapel, covering him with blood.

A mile outside the city gate is a conspicuous hill crowned by the Church of the Madonna. Here, on that August morning of 1849, the cart which conveyed these two martyrs for liberty stopped and they were taken out to die. Turning to one of the guard, "This handkerchief," said Bassi, "is not mine, but it belongs to Padre Filippo, a bare-footed Augustinian of Palermo, my intimate friend, let it be returned to him, and tell him that it has wiped the tears of my agony." It was a souvenir of the cholera days when the two monks had worked side by side.

The officer who was to give the order to fire had not the heart to do his duty, and another took his place. As the soldiers were taking aim, Ugo Bassi cried, "I die innocent. I die for liberty. I forgive my murderers. Viva Jesu! Viva Maria! Viva Italia!" and on the last word he fell. His aged mother heard of his death without a tear, but repeated his name thrice and fell dead.

"That night [says Trevelyan] Ugo Bassi's grave, which was dug near to the spot where he fell, was found covered with flowers and garlands; the people regarded him as a saint and martyr; visions of him descending from the clouds in an aureole of light were accredited by the pious and simple; and his tomb outside the gate became a place of pilgrimage, until the Papal authorities thought it wise to dig up the body and hide it away. But that did not cause Bologna to forget him."

The gentle, self-denying spirit of Ugo Bassi is finely preserved in Mrs. Hamilton King's poem, 'A Sermon in Hospital.'

H. M. L.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. EVAN CEREDIG JONES.

ON Tuesday, the 18th inst., Mr. Ceredig Jones passed away after a long illness, at his residence, Tannerdy, Ciliau-Aeron, in the very spot where he was born, August 14, 1850. From early life Mr. Jones had set his mind on the ministry, but he found it no easy matter to secure the necessary training. When he had been some years at a local elementary school, he started a school of his own, and after a time found himself able to go to the Rhydowen Grammar School, kept by the Rev. T. Thomas, J.P., to prepare for the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, which he entered in 1872. In 1876, having won a Dr. Williams' scholarship, he went to Glasgow, where in due course he obtained his M.A. During the summer holidays of 1873-4-5, he occupied the vacant pulpit at Cefn-coed. His first settlement was at Maidstone, 1880-84; his only other settlement was at Bradford, Yorkshire, where he had a very happy time and laboured long and successfully, and won the attachment and respect of old and young. During his stay nearly £3,000 were spent on the chapel and schools and the membership of the church was doubled. Owing to failing health he resigned the pulpit in 1909, and retired to his old home in Cardiganshire, where he had built himself a suitable dwelling. Here for a time he lived a happy country life—attending to his beautiful garden and looking after his chickens, and on the Sunday it was his delight to help a brother minister who might be in want of a pulpit supply. This he continued to do until he was ultimately incapacitated. He devoted his spare time to the study of local antiquities, and writing an account of his travels in America, Belgium and elsewhere. These were printed in The Ymofynydd month by month, his last appearing in the May number.

His contributions to the press include a lecture on Free Inquiry, 1881; a volume of anthem words, 1890, with special additions for Leeds and Stockport; a volume of Services of Public Prayer, 1905. He wrote a good number of hymns for the new Welsh Hymn and Tune Book, now in course of preparation. His Christmas greeting will be known and appreciated by many of your readers. Mr. Jones was secretary of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, 1885-95; and president of the South Wales Unitarian Association, 1904-5. His address on the occasion appears in The Ymofynydd. The restoration of the church at Ciliau, the oldest Nonconformist fabric in the county, where he attended as a youth, is chiefly due to his efforts. The new building was opened for public worship free of debt in 1900, and Mr. Jones's sermon appears in The Christian Life for May 26, 1900. In the burying ground attached to this chapel his remains were laid on Saturday last. The Revs. R. C. Jones and John Davis took the introductory part and the pastor, the Rev. Lewis Williams gave a short address. The Revs. Gwilym Evans, E. O. Jenkins, Simon Jones, T. Lloyd Jones, T. Arthur Thomas, and J. Davies paid affectionate tributes of respect. The Rev. T. C. Davis officiated at the graveside. A deputation from Chapel Lane, Bradford, attended, and floral tributes were sent by the several organisations connected with that church.

R. J. J.

CAPTAIN A. C. COOPER.

As briefly recorded in our obituary columns last week, Capt. Arthur C. Cooper, son of Mr. E. F. Cooper of Leicester, was killed in action in Belgium on the 16th inst. Few men were more widely respected or more sincerely loved in his native town. A Memorial Service was held at the Great Meeting, Leicester, last Sunday morning. There was a large gathering of his family and friends and representatives of various public bodies with which he had been connected.

In the course of his sermon, the Rev. Edgar Fripp said on the previous day he read Kingsley's sermons entitled 'Discipline,' the owner of which was the late Capt. Arthur C. Cooper, whom he always associated with Kingsley. Different as they were—they were strikingly different in many respects—yet they had this in common, they were the layman and clergyman combined. With those two the temporal and the spiritual, which were so often apart, ruinously apart, and sometimes regarded as inconsistent, not to say antagonistic, were one world, larger, more beautiful and richer for their union. One was the layman in the pulpit and the other was the clergyman in the pew. Both were muscular Christians. Kingsley favoured a physical and moral training as the means of transforming the natural lawlessness of man, and that was the teaching of Arthur Cooper, in word and by example, both among his young men at home and his soldiers in the field. Whether in business or cricket, his companions, while admiring his abilities and skill, felt there was something stronger than muscle or brain; the power of a pure, restraining, undemonstrative, devout and affectionate nature. From a child Arthur Cooper had been associated with the Great Meeting, having been brought up in its ideals and fed upon its beliefs. He was always most loyal to its traditions, very happy in its good work, and to them his death was an irreparable loss.

He was always struck with two of his qualities, one being his gentleness. He had very rarely seen him angry, in spite of the fact that he had sometimes very obstinate and exasperating material to deal with. Personally, he wished Capt. Cooper had blazed out occasionally. The other quality was his generosity. What he spent and what he lent must have been great, but his left hand was unaware of the openness of the right. He was always disposed to give a fellow a chance. He was known and respected far beyond the Great Meeting and its institutions. He belonged essentially to Leicester, its sports, charities, politics, and commerce. He understood his fellow-townsmen, and they understood him. It had been his privilege to read many of the letters of sympathy, and some of them revealed the public confidence in his judgment and integrity. Now England had claimed him, and inscribed his name on her roll of fame. He laid down his life for the highest cause in which this country had ever been engaged. Bitter was the price, but what true Englishman could refuse to pay it?

The circumstances attending his death were best told by a brother officer, who had written saying that about 10.30 P.M. on Saturday week, Capt. Cooper left with a party to put down some wire entanglements. Things were quiet, but shortly after a telephone message was received saying he had been badly hit. First aid was rendered immediately, and after being given some morphia he spoke quite cheerfully to those who had the good fortune to be with him. He was hit by a stray bullet, in the little finger of the left hand and in the left thigh, but the wound was not considered serious. However, he died on the following morning from shock. He was buried in a quiet little place at the rear of their headquarters, where many other of the men whom he loved so well were also buried. He was the best-loved and most respected man in the battalion, and in point of character he was head and shoulders above any one else.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

19TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	3,983	14	8
Miss Esther Case	10	0
Mrs. Ronalds	2	0
Miss Fryer	5	0
Miss Russell	2	2
Miss L. A. Russell	2	2
"Without a name" (second donation)	2	2
Dr. and Mrs. Chalmers, per F. P.	2	0
Miss E. Fitzsimmons	1	0

	£	s.	d.
Hornsey County Secondary School, per Dr. Piggott ..	5	0	0
Infants' Dept., Norton Road (Letchworth), C.C. School, per Mr. C. A. Pease ..	10	0
Girls of Miss L. B. V. Bolton's Bible Class ..	12	0
Anon. (Heath End) ..	2	0	0
Per Mrs. Garrod from a Belgian Fund (weekly donation) ..	2	0	0
Mrs. A. H. Laws ..	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry ..	1	1	0
Mr. J. G. Johnson ..	1	1	0
Miss E. Pritchard (second donation) ..	5	0	0
H. J. ..	1	0	0
Per Mrs. French ..	1	0	0
Per Mr. A. C. Whitmee (proceeds of lecture) ..	20	11	9
Mrs. Chas. Booth, Jun. ..	3	3	0
A member of Rosslyn Hill Chapel ..	1	0	0
Mr. Ronald P. Jones (special donation for ambulance) ..	125	0	0
Mr. G. W. Chitty (fourth donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss Rebecca Gardner ..	10	0
Miss M. E. Melby ..	1	0	0
Staff of Central School, Haverstock Hill, N.W., per Mr. F. Chappell (fourth monthly donation) ..	1	5	0
M. W. B. ..	1	1	0
Miss Ellen Hibbert (fourth donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. Harold Bailly (second donation) ..	2	2	0
A member of the West Grove, Cardiff, Women's League, per Mrs. Fox ..	5	0
Anonymous ..	5	0	0
Nurse Copeman ..	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Noel ..	1	1	0
The Misses Paget (3) ..	6	6	0
L. H. ..	10	0
Mrs. Crookes ..	2	0	0
	£4,197	9	5

Parcels have been received from:—

Miss Dorothy Jones; Mrs. Buckton; Platt Chapel Dorcas Society (per Miss Fryer); Octagon Chapel Girls' Friendly Society (per Mrs. Reeve); Miss Jolly; Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. N. C. B. Cave; Mr. A. Smith and two friends; Anon. (Heath End); Mme. Eneman and Mrs. Vaughan Nash; Miss Mary Preston; Mr. D. Thompson; Women's League Sewing Meeting, Church of the Messiah, Birmingham; Mill Hill Sewing Society and Leeds Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. B. M. David); Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry; Mrs. Wilson; Camden School for Girls (per Miss Drummond); Church of the Messiah Women's Friendly Society, Birmingham; Mrs. French; Mrs. Pearson; Mr. Sydney C. Jones (microscope and fittings); Mrs. Wallace Bruce; Mrs. Frank Preston; Mme. Seligman; Miss Eiloart; Ilford Branch of the Unitarian Women's League (per Mrs. Fyson); Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Mrs. Enfield; West Grove, Cardiff, Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Fox).

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

THE Eighty-first anniversary meetings of the Sunday School Association were held at Essex Hall on Tuesday, May 25, beginning at 10.45, with a conference on "The Sunday School during War-Time and after." Mr. Ion Pritchard, the President, in the chair. After extending a cordial welcome to the delegates and friends from District Sunday School Societies and Schools, Mr. Pritchard referred to the subject of the Conference, which was one, he said, bound to be discussed on this occasion whether it had been put down on the programme or not. The war was the topic of the hour, and we could not escape it, neither could the children escape it, for they heard it talked about everywhere, and its sensational features were kept constantly before them. Were they as Sunday School teachers to keep aloof from the subject when it was in the air all around them, influencing the lives of the young people in their midst? Surely it was their duty to let their scholars know that they had an opinion to bring before them, and much might be done in various ways to enlighten their minds by explaining to the older boys and girls, for instance, what it meant for a nation to be at war, why we were at war, and what our duty was to those in our midst whose nationality made their position so difficult at the present time. Then they must analyse and explain that much used but not always clearly understood word—militarism, and another familiar word, Jingoism, which really meant cowardice, and hold up before them the better side of patriotism.

The discussion was opened by the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, who raised the tone of the meeting to a high level of idealism which will make the Conference a memorable one in the annals of the Association. Beginning with a description of the war work which has been carried on at the High Pavement Church, Nottingham, since last August—a remarkable record of activity in which the members of the Sunday School and the congregation have taken their full share. He gave an interesting summary of various lectures and discussions in class which have proved very helpful, showing how the war had come to be, and in what way such conflicts can be rendered impossible in the future. The discussions had led them into wide fields of thought, and they had found it most instructive to trace the subjects that arose naturally in the minds of eager questioners, such as the history of Hungary and of Russia, the ideals of Tolstoy, temperance, betting, gambling, and so forth, all of which had their bearing on the main issue. The one thing he had tried to bring home to his scholars was the fact that the failure of all past attempts in the direction of unity among mankind were caused by the insidious belief that individual success, whether of men or nations, was only to be won at the expense of other men and nations. Apart from all talk about the immediate causes of the war, and all efforts to ameliorate the suffering it had brought, they had tried to get down to the roots of things, and to see how such conflicts could arise in spite of all their attempts to further the cause of peace. Some of them, Mr. Ballantyne continued, had toyed in the past with moral education and Sunday School work divorced from religion. That could surely never be again. Now, if never before, they must be religious teachers, repeating over and over again that it is a change of heart that is needed before the causes which lead to war, the desires and passions and false ideals which have not yet been rooted out, cease to operate. The evil of war was just the flowering of all these uncontrolled impulses, and until they were checked it was useless to talk about any war being "the last war." We had to teach the children that the idea "I must rise on your shoulders, I must gain because you lose"—a reptilean doctrine—has to be got rid of, and that in place of what the author of 'The New Faith' has called 'private-mindedness,' we must get national and world-mindedness. But the war was not all evil, and it had taught them much that was good. It had taught them, for instance, that there was nothing which made men so happy as to escape from the restrictions of the ordinary life as we know it, and go forth in the spirit of adventurous enterprise into a wider field of activity which called for the use of all their faculties and gave the glow of romance to existence. Until we make the peace life of such men as joyous and adventurous and stirring as war, we shall fail to keep them from fighting. What romance and excitement, for instance, is there in sticking labels on bottles all day long and every day, month after month? Making the cheap articles that modern industry turns out gives no scope for chivalrous instincts. It does not give the sense of comradeship in a high cause, it does not give the esprit de corps by which so many men are being kindled to-day. Some of our newly-made soldiers were so delighted with the glorious possibilities opening out before them that they were making up their minds to remain in the army after the war, if they came back; he felt that, if they did so, they would be profoundly disillusioned, for the army in peace times was not the same thing as the army in war time. What was important was that they should give the men something to come back to that would make their ordinary life a glorious adventure, and that they should awaken in the children some kind of passionate love for the Big Cause, some sense of loyalty to the beloved community and the Kingdom of God.

Mr. Dixon Lee warmly endorsed all that Mr. Ballantyne had said, and urged the need of idealism and the idealistic view of life as against the purely practical and utilitarian.

The Rev. F. K. Freeston said that Mr. Ballantyne had placed them all under a deep debt of gratitude for the inspiration of his words, which had awakened an enthusiasm that must not be allowed to end with the Conference. For himself he felt that after this war is over they would want for use in their schools, in addition to the books they already had, some graduated peace readers, historical, simple in their appeal, not mawkish in sentiment, to put into the hands of their scholars and teachers.

The Rev. Leonard Short urged that their failure in regard to the averting of war lay in the fact that they had not presented religion in the way that war had been presented, nor made the same appeal on its behalf to the spirit of loyalty and comradeship which was making our men at the front go gallily into the jaws of death. Real religion, by which he meant Christianity, was the most difficult thing in the world to practice; it offered the greatest opportunities for self-sacrifice, for the facing of dangers, for enduring the scorn of others, and if they could make that its appeal, they would call forth the same devoted spirit which is now being evoked by the war.

Mr. W. H. Scott, the Rev. T. Paxton, Mr. Philipson and the Rev. Ellison Voysey also joined in the discussion.

THE LUNCHEON.

At the close of the Conference the delegates lunched together at the Holborn Restaurant. Mr. Ion Pritchard presided, and spoke a few words of welcome. The Rev. C. J. Street of Sheffield made a stirring speech in reply, in which he pleaded that the sacrifice of our young men was the best answer to the statement that religion has failed. He quoted with pride the words of a French officer about the quality of our army. "How I envy you your boys. They not look clean, they are clean in thought and act."

ADDRESS BY MISS PELTON.

At 3 o'clock members and friends re-assembled for the afternoon meeting when an address was given by Miss May Pelton, lecturer at Westhill Training Institute for Sunday School Workers, Birmingham, on "Spirit and Method." Mr. Pritchard was in the chair. Miss Pelton emphasised at the outset the essential fact which underlies all the flowering of spring, the richer beauty of summer, the harvesting of autumn, and the dying down of life in winter—the ceaseless rhythm, the steadfast law, the perfect order which is the expression of life itself, and the eternal word of God. That attitude of mind was a strange one which expected to see God only in the abnormal, the chaotic, that which defies all reduction to order. Rather they ought to realise that it is in law and order that God is most revealed, and that by co-operating with nature we are co-operating with the divine will and purpose. According to this belief the farmer and the gardener worked. They knew when to plant, how to deal with the different flowers and crops, and what results to expect. They, too, as Sunday School teachers, must learn to labour in the same way, co-operating with the law written in the physical, mental, and spiritual nature of the child. The whole system of graded teaching was based upon this fundamental truth, and aimed at utilising and developing the child's energies at the point it had already reached, and not in forcing upon its comprehension ideas which it was incapable of grasping or interpreting in action. The same help should be given to a child for the interpretation of the spirit of worship as we ourselves require. Grown up persons require at least a quiet building, and some degree of order, whether he wants stained glass windows or not, for the worship of God, and the child needs these things even more; he requires, also, that the impulse thus quickened shall immediately be turned into action, as is done in the class, for it is very fleeting, and does not last—it does not always last with grown-up people!—until he returns to his home, where he might put it to good use. He must also be surrounded with things beautiful and harmonious if his spiritual qualities are to develop naturally, for it is hopeless to teach him that God is love and beauty and purity if he is always in the midst of disorder, ugliness, and chaos. All this involved method, but it must not be forgotten that when method ceased to be the expression of the spiritual it was absolutely dead.

BUSINESS MEETING.

The business meeting followed. The treasurer's statement was presented by the hon. treasurer, Mr. W. Blake Odgers, jun., who suggested that the splendid spirit which had been shown in raising money for the motor ambulance might be applied to clearing off the deficit with which they were faced. This had already been considerably reduced by donations privately subscribed, but unless they were to curtail their work they must alter the fact that they were always spending a great deal more than they received. This year the excess of expenditure over income was £207 15s. 2d., without the deficit of £45 10s. 2d. carried over from 1913. The receipts for the year were £992 5s. 4d.

The hon. secretary, Mr. T. M. Chalmers, presented the annual report. It shows that a new spirit of hopefulness has been infused into the Sunday School movement in place of the despondency which had oppressed them at the beginning of the war. The dislocation of the work had been less than they might have expected, and they found that a great deal of good can be done even with a depleted staff. The teachers have discovered that they can use many ideas in the children's minds about the war in their lessons, and there has been much activity both in regard to the needs of the army and the improvement of their own work and organisation. It is hoped that some of the splendid spirit shown to-day by the men—numbers of them old scholars—who have joined the colours will be harnessed later on for the benefit of the men and women of the future. In regard to publications, some of the work which had been contemplated has had to be temporarily postponed, but a new series of Bible stories in continuation of those written by Dr. Brooke Herford is being prepared by the Rev. A. H. Biggs, and will be ready in the autumn. The very excellent paper read by Dr. Jessel at Oxford has called attention to the necessity of giving more attention to the health of the Sunday scholars, especially after they leave the day school, and it is hoped that he will expand this for publication in book form. The Sunday School Monthly carries on its valuable work under the editorship of the Rev. J. A. Pearson and is greatly appreciated. A series of lessons on the war by Miss Gittins is meeting the special needs of the moment admirably. The resolution passed in 1914 inviting the three theological colleges at Oxford, Manchester and Carmarthen to consider training for Sunday School work as part of their curriculum has been taken up very cordially, and at Oxford and Carmarthen lectures are already being delivered by Mr. Frank Roscoe, and Prof. Parry respectively. The Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, has arranged with Dr. Thistleton Mark to give a series of lectures after the special work in which he is engaged owing to the war is completed.

The Rev. J. A. Pearson gave an account of the work in connection with the Sunday School Monthly, and outlined its future programme. The President then moved the adoption of the reports, emphasising the need of more teachers to help in their great work. The Rev. H. Bodell Smith seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

A resolution amending Rule 4, by the addition of a few words, was moved by the Rev. Bertram Lister, seconded by the Rev. J. A. Carrara Davies; the election of the officers and committee for the ensuing year, with Miss A. E. Clephan as President, was proposed by Miss H. Johnson, seconded by the Rev. T. M. Falconer. Both were carried. A cordial vote of thanks to Miss Pelton for her admirable address was proposed by the Rev. John Ellis, seconded by the Rev. T. Graham, and carried. In the course of the proceedings many allusions were made to the affectionate appreciation with which the long work of Mr. Ion Pritchard is regarded by the Association, and it is a matter for congratulation that though he has ceased to be President, he becomes, according to the new ruling, a member of the Committee, in which capacity he will still be able to give the members the benefit of his help and advice.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

WHIT-WEEK this year has been overshadowed by the war, and the overwhelming feeling of the need of national unity has weakened the desire for a separate witness of a party or denominational kind. Essex Hall has not been so crowded as usual on this anniversary week, but ministers and delegates have been present from all over the country, and there has been the usual reunion of friends and much happy fellowship. The improvements which have been made recently in Essex Hall were on public view for the first time. They add not a little to its appearance and to its comfort for social gatherings.

THE SERVICE.

The Anniversary Service in connection with the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was held in Essex Church on Tuesday evening, when there was a large congregation. The Rev. Lawrence Redfern, of Norwich, conducted the devotional service. The Rev. V. D. Davis, of Bournemouth was the preacher. His sermon appears in our present issue.

THE BUSINESS MEETING.

The Annual Business Meeting was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday morning, the President, Mr. J. F. L. Brunner being in the chair. A conference on the Home and Foreign work of the Association was held. Our report of these proceedings will appear next week.

THE PRESIDENT'S LUNCHEON.

The President's Luncheon is a pleasant function to which the accredited delegates and others are invited. Mr. Brunner is a perfect host and his bounteous hospitality was enjoyed by a large company at the Holborn Restaurant. He regretted that there were no representatives from any foreign Unitarian Associations present; of course they had with them Dr. de la Faille of the Dutch Church, but Dr. de la Faille felt like an Englishman, and there was a representative of the Japanese nation. After the toast of "Our King and Country," received with musical honours, the President proposed the toast of "The National Conference," and Mr. Rathbone replied in felicitous terms, affirming that the conditions under which they met must not be allowed to stop their work. "Our Colleges" was proposed by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, who remarked that he had been associated with all three which provided two-thirds of the ministry with intellectual and moral stimulus for their work. He hoped for prosperity for all our colleges, and a good heart—especially for Manchester College, in the changes that were coming, and did not doubt that the future of the last would be worthy of its past. To this toast there were two responses. Dr. Mellone was glad of the use of a plural; he thought they might add another—the Pioneer Preachers' Hostel from which had come three students who made him wish that the Hostel would continue to be a success.

Mr. Gow hoped the denomination would look forward with confidence to the success of Manchester College under Dr. Jacks. In the changing Oxford, Manchester College was almost a conservative force. Four of the students of the college were away, three having received commissions and one having joined the R.A.M.C. There was more important work than that of the study of theology at the moment! But the time would come when the healing of the nations would be necessary, and the doing away of malice and uncharitableness, and that would be the opportunity of the churches. Some said Christianity had broken down; it was organized self-interest that had broken down. Our theological colleges needed all the support of the lay members of the churches. He wished that men might feel the heroic element in the ministry as in the field; they might after the war, then the ministry would, indeed, be a life's service. Mr. Chancellor proposed the toast of the New Ministers, and the Rev. Lawrence Redfern replied; and Mr. Tarrant that of the President and the Association. Mr. Brunner replied.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

The public meeting was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday at 7.30, there being a large attendance. Mr. J. F. L. Brunner, President, was in the chair, and opened the proceedings with a short address, in the course of which he endeavoured to trace some of the causes for the dwindling in the number of open and declared adherents of the liberal faith. He disclaimed at the outset the attitude of a mere critic, especially as he felt that he was a learner and not a teacher in regard to the methods by which they were working for progress, and wished to take the position of a suggester only, if they would pardon the word. They were, of course, only sharing with other religious bodies in regard to the decrease of numbers, and some of the faults to which that decrease was to be attributed they also shared with other denominations; they had, however, faults peculiar to themselves, and among the special causes which must be held accountable for their empty churches must be mentioned the fact that Unitarian chapels were comparatively few, and that their adherents lived far apart. Less and less, however, in these days did people like to be different from those around them; religious observances, too, have not the hold they used to have, and there is an increasing love of fresh-air and exercise and of the week-ending habit. This made their problem a difficult one, but they must meet it, and not lose their pre-eminence as leaders of thought in religious matters. It was needful that they should put more warmth into their work, and give the younger men entering the ministry, who were as good in their generation as the old who were retiring, their support and their sympathy. In some cases, where the work lay amid the poor, it was clear that the politician should precede the minister, and lay the foundation upon which to build spiritual things, for when people were half-starved, miserably housed, and, above all, when they were the victims of drink, the task of the minister was a very hard one. After the present war, Mr. Brunner said, in conclusion, "the world will be a very different place. Such a cataclysm must have disastrous and far-reaching effects. Some of the aspirations we have held will not see fulfilment in our time, but those who have leisure for quiet thought ought to try and think out opportunities for good and be prepared to seize them. As Christians and Unitarians we must not be behind the rest of the world."

THE REV. C. HARGROVE.

The Rev. Charles Hargrove introduced the subject for the evening, namely, 'The Moral and Religious Implications of the War.' If they were to make a declaration of the things which they most earnestly believed at this particular time in the language of the Beatitudes, their expressions would probably run very much as follows: "Blessed are they who offer themselves for the service of their country, for they are servants of God. Blessed are they who fight with courage and fear not, for the Lord of Hosts is their Captain. Blessed are they who on the sea face danger, hardship, and sudden death, for they spend their all for their fellowmen. Blessed are they who are wounded, sick, and in prison, for their suffering is counted to them for righteousness. Blessed are they who die in battle, for greater love hath no man than this that he lays down his life for his friend. Blessed are they who tend the wounded, and give their labour for the comfort of those who suffer and die, for they have their part in the great world of God"—and so one might go on. Something like that was in all their hearts; and they asked the question, would Jesus give his assent to such beatitudes now if he were here, as an English prophet speaking to English people, at this great crisis in our history, or were we giving our dear ones in defiance of the great Teacher by whose name we were called, and whom we all believed to have been sent of God? The question was of immense importance. Were they to denounce this war and all wars, or repudiate Christianity as a religion of feeble folk? Or were they to admit the accusation of hypocrisy? Could they give honour to Jesus as a teacher of righteousness, and at the same time hold to the almost unanimous verdict of the nation to prosecute this war with all our energy until victory is obtained? Was such a thing possible as a Christian war? Proceeding to discuss these questions, Mr. Hargrove took the view that such apparently incompatible ideas could be reconciled, and that though the teaching of Christ was pre-eminently fitted to his time and the people he was addressing, it might not be equally suited to other ages and races. In the changed conditions of to-day, and as a member of a nation able to offer effective resistance to the powers of unrighteousness, the advice which he would give to his followers might possibly be very different from that addressed to the Galileans. As Jesus out of the treasures of his soul brought to the men of his day things new and old, the eternal verities, and counsels applicable to those for whom he spoke, so now we were persuaded that he would find fresh words in which to speak to us that are not in the Gospels. It was for God and the right that we were at war, for the peace of the world and the overthrow of all that menaced civilisation, for the rights of the weaker nations, and for the liberation of mankind from the yoke of oppression.

MRS. SYDNEY MARTINEAU.

Mrs. Sydney Martineau said that some one whose opinion she valued very much had said to her that war is not a woman's subject, but for women these were no longer the days of lavender, when they might choose only the pleasant paths of life. To-day they are made of sterner stuff, and are able to face facts, and though no woman can ever regard war as other than horrible, yet they had learnt to look beyond that to the great fundamental moral issues that lie behind. It was a matter of importance to them, for all they held most dear was being cast into the melting pot, and if it were consumed, nothing else mattered any more. But they believed that a future would emerge worth all the sacrifices they had made. The women of England had heard the call as well as the men, and they were giving their dear ones, knowing full well what that might mean, making the choice with high courage, though with a heartache too deep for tears. And for what were they doing this? For love of fighting and lust of conquest? No, a thousand times no, but for a moral ideal. Deep down among the root causes of all human action lay always the moral ideal by which actions were determined, and as it was with men so it was with nations. Through all the doings and strivings of the British race, they had been evolving the moral ideals for which they were now fighting—the freedom of just laws, fidelity to the plighted word, respect for the rights of other races under our flag, chivalrous protection of the weaker nations—and it was loyalty to these things that had made the word of an Englishman respected everywhere, and British justice honoured by people whose traditions and outlook were widely different from their own. Very earnestly she deprecated all temptation to punish Germany by taking reprisals in kind, which would only weaken our cause, and prove ineffectual in view of the greater efforts that would be made by the enemy to plan still greater horrors before which we should shrink back appalled; at the same time, she dissented from the view that the use of poisonous gases as a matter of military necessity by our own troops came under the same category. Many people regarded this war as a sign that Christianity had failed, but they had just sung “A thousand ages in thy sight are like an evening gone,” and, realising that God had not made men and women perfect to begin with, but had set them the task of gradually overcoming evil and evolving the higher qualities, why should they try to limit the process and say that in their day was the time for consummation? Even now they were paying the penalty for past errors, not their nation alone but all nations, and they had been forced into the terrible position that it was right for them to fight although war is, in itself, an evil. “May God grant,” she said in conclusion, “that if we gain this victory, we may be worthy of the task that will then lie before us, and secure a lasting peace.”

MR. R. M. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., also approached the subject from the point of view of the questioner who asks, can war, to which we have always been opposed, ever seem right and justifiable? and described how he had come to the firm conviction that the only thing for Great Britain to do, in the moment of the crisis last August, was to act as she had done. If, he said, he had not been able to reach that view with a happy conscience, he would have felt that his religion was entirely inadequate and valueless, and would have turned to some other. No reasons of personal or national vanity—and national vanity was only personal vanity writ large—nor the desire to acquire territory, nor the wish to subject other people to alien rule can ever justify war, and the so-called “religious wars” had been the most immoral wars the world had ever known. But there were times when physical force must be used even by the religious man to attain righteous ends, and he would remind them that Oliver Cromwell and Hampden and George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, all of whom had led their countries into war, were religious men. Whether Jesus of Nazareth would have taken up arms he could not tell, but they did know that when he was seized with moral indignation he cast the money-changers out of the temple, and that he did not believe it was always right to turn the other cheek. It was difficult to imagine that anybody as human as Jesus could take the view that we are not to use our physical power when wrong is done. When one man wants to enslave another, or one nation to enslave another, it is our duty to fight, and fight courageously. Cowardice is not a Christian virtue, nor half-heartedness. But our soldiers must fight without malevolence, and our people must be restrained from acts of reprisal. To say that savages do a thing is prima facie a condemnation of it and to imitate the Prussian is to flatter him. We are fighting for the ideals of righteousness and pity—pity, that must be for others, never for oneself.

DR. STANLEY A. MELLOR.

Dr. Mellor in a speech which emphasized a totally different point of view, and revealed a wide cleavage of opinion in the audience, some of whom uttered words of protest from time to time, explained that he approached the subject at that moment with profound feelings of regret. He would ask them to bear with him for the words he was about to say, and for the attitude he was bound to take, although it had exposed him to violent criticism. As a member of the recently formed Fellowship of Reconciliation, he dissociated himself entirely from the view that this, or any other war was right and far from believing that we could foresee the result of this gigantic upheaval, he felt that no one living was competent to say what the ultimate moral and religious results of it would be for the future of humanity. It had been said that this crisis had deepened the religious feeling in this country; the same thing was said in Germany. It was not for him to express an opinion as to that, but he felt that there was something wrong with their ideas of religion when they contemplated the spectacle of the great belligerent nations each praying to the same God for the defeat of the enemy. They were in danger of forgetting the fundamental thing about religion—its universality. As far as we were concerned, though the war had called out great qualities of heroism and self-sacrifice, we had signally failed only a few weeks ago in striking a blow at one of the greatest evils with which we are menaced, and had bowed down before the might of a capitalistic trade. And were we really a free people when we permitted our moral sense to be weakened by permitting a corrupt journalism to make sport of our lives and destinies? They were all putting the blame for this tragedy on others, but what of the sin and degradation and poverty existing in London alone, which revealed a state of things for which all the nations were responsible, and which was to be attributed to our irreligious modern civilisation? It was a terrible thing to think that the fine qualities which had been called out during the last ten months had not been exercised in times of peace, and those who were praising war for these things must beware of implying that only war could produce such a spirit, for if that was true, and if we could not establish a social system which would give us the fruits of beauty, goodness, and the truth, then we should require another war to save us from evil. The roots of war were in our midst, and nothing but a new outlook on life, beginning with our own individual souls could help us. We must develop the consciousness of the inestimable value of personality, of every human soul that is born into the world. We must gain the victory over our social inequalities and injustices, for the mere triumph of superior physical forces is worthless unless accompanied by the victories of the spirit. Here, said Dr. Mellor, was a new crusade awaiting the forces of organised religion if we only had the courage to take it up.

MINISTERS PRESENT AT THE ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

D. Agate, A. Amey, J. C. Ballantyne, W. C. Bowie, W. H. Burgess, J. E. Carpenter, G. Carter, L. Clare, W. R. Clark-Lewis, J. W. Cock, F. Coleman, J. M. Connell, R. N. Cross, E. Daplyn, J. A. C. Davies, R. Davis, V. D. Davis, J. Drummond, W. H. Drummond, G. M. Elliott, J. Ellis, D. D. Evans, D. J. Evans, B. de la Faille, T. M. Falconer, F. W. G. Foat, A. C. Fox, F. K. Freeston, C. A. Ginever, A. Golland, H. Gow, T. Graham, A. Hall, F. Hall, F. Hankinson, C. Hargrove, J. Harwood, R. T. Herford, R. Hill, G. S. Hitchcock, A. M. Holden, J. Hunter, W. Jellie, F. H. Jones, L. J. Jones, R. J. Jones, W. T. Jones, B. Lister, I. Lister, D. B. Martin, S. H. Mellone, S. A. Mellor, J. M. Mills, A. V. Moody, F. Munford, R. Newell, A. E. O'Connor, J. E. Odgers, J. C. Odgers, T. Paxton, J. A. Pearson, A. G. Peaston, H. E. Perry, W. R. Phillips, J. W. Piggott, C. E. Pike, T. Pipe, L. Redfern, H. D. Roberts, D. W. Robson, C. Roper, W. H. Rose, H. Rylett, T. M. Salmon, A. Scruton, W. R. Shanks, G. C. Sharpe, A. H. Shelley, L. Short, A. L. Smith, H. B. Smith, W. R. Smyth, H. S. Solly, T. P. Spedding, C. J. Street, F. Summers, W. G. Tarrant, T. A. Thomas, G. W. Thompson, J. Toye, W. L. Tucker, W. Walsh, J. H. Weatherall, W. M. Weston, J. M. Whiteman, J. Wood, W. Wooding, I. Wrigley.

Lay Workers.

E. A. Carlier, S. R. Gibbon, H. C. Hawkins, H. L. Phillips, S. Sands.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN LAY PREACHERS' UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Annual Meeting of the National Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union was held at Essex Hall on Whit Monday, under the presidency of Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P. Considering the holiday season and the preoccupation of the public mind with other matters there was a fair attendance, representatives being present from various parts of the country. The annual report was read by Miss Mary Francis, the Hon. Secretary. It showed that attention had been given chiefly to the educational side of the work. A reading scheme has been adopted and arrangements have been made with the Book Room at Essex Hall, which will enable lay preachers to obtain books at special rates. The report was adopted on the motion of the chairman, seconded by Mr. E. R. Fyson. The Committee was instructed to obtain a brief account of the year's work and a list of members from the affiliated Unions, and to arrange, if possible, for the publication of the report in this enlarged form. Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., was re-elected as President for 1915-16, and Miss Francis as Hon. Secretary. After tea a service was held, a short responsive order of worship being used, under the leadership of Mr. S. P. Penwarden. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Alfred Hall of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Following the service there was a conference on "Co-operation," introduced by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie. Mr. Bowie suggested that in the case of small congregations, where there is no regular minister, the work might be put into commission, four lay preachers becoming jointly responsible. It should be the business of these four men to keep in close touch with one another, to compare notes about the services and topics for sermons and to co-operate in a common plan of work. It was also suggested that a simple order of worship might be of great benefit as a means of enriching devotional life and giving a feeling of continuity from Sunday to Sunday. Mr. Bowie's address was followed by an interesting discussion.

THE UNITED SOCIAL SERVICE SCHOOL AT SWANWICK.

THE organisation of the Summer School under the auspices of the Inter-Denominational Conference of Social Service Unions this year presents certain difficulties; but the Committee have persevered in their efforts, believing that through the discussions of earnest men and women on the grave problems of the time fresh courage and insight may be gained, and something done—if only in a small way—to promote a better understanding between the nations. The programme has now been published, and those who are able to join the party at "The Hayes," Swanwick, between June 26 and July 5, will find plenty of food for thought in the various addresses that are to be delivered by well-known men. On the opening evening an address will be given on 'International Life and the Kingdom of God,' by Mr. A. Clutton-Brock, the Bishop of Oxford in the chair; and on Sunday the only United Meeting of the School will be held at 3 o'clock, when the Bishop of Oxford, Chairman of the Inter-Denominational Conference, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, and Monsignor Parkinson will give addresses. The discussions throughout the week will deal with the subject of 'International Relationships in the Light of Christianity,' and papers on the various social and religious problems raised by the war will be read by the Rev. W. Temple, Mr. G. P. Gooch, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, Principal Graham, Mr. Norman Angell (if in England), Miss Maude Royden, Canon Masterman, Mr. W. C. Anderson, M.P., Mr. J. St. John Heath, and others. Among those who will also take part in the proceedings are Mr. Arnold Rowntree, M.P., the Bishop of Lichfield, Dr. A. J. Carlyle, Mr. Will Reason, the Rev. W. Lofthouse, and Miss M. C. Gittins. The closing address will be delivered on Sunday afternoon, July 4, by the Rev. Father Plater, S.J. Full particulars in regard to terms and accommodation, and copies of the programme, can be obtained from the Secretaries of the various Denominational Unions, or from the Hon. Secretary of the Summer School Committee, Miss Lucy Gardner, 92, St. George's Square, London, S.W.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bridgwater.—The Annual Meeting of Christ Church Congregation was held after the evening service on May 9. Four members were welcomed into the Fellowship of the Church, two of them by the rule which admits to membership for tried and faithful service. The Treasurer's Report showed a considerable balance in favour of the Congregation, much of which will probably be required for repairs to the property in the present year. Outside the ordinary collections a considerable sum amounting to £29 8s. 9d. has been raised since the war for needs arising out of it.

Bury.—The Women's League connected with Bank Street Chapel reports as follows. At Easter, when Mrs. Allen visited the Belgian hospitals in Belgium, she met Miss Georgina Fyfe, who is doing splendid work in rescuing women and children from the towns and villages when they are bombarded. Miss Fyfe appealed for help from England, and, as a result, a Manchester man at once sent her a motor car for use in conveying maternity and other urgent cases to the hospitals and places of safety, and others have sent clothing, &c. to her. It was decided to send all the clothing for mothers and little ones now in hand direct to Miss Fyfe, and a big bale of over eighty pounds in weight was sent off on May 10th. Our sincere thanks are due to those who subscribed to this fund, and to the Sunday scholars who collected about £3 in the "Stockings for the Bairns." The clothing was made or given in October last to be in readiness for local relief if needed.

Horsham.—At the usual Anniversary Services on Whit Sunday there was a fairly good attendance, including friends from Billingshurst, Ditchling, Hastings, and other places. The preacher was the Rev. Basil Martin of Finchley. In the afternoon the Rev. Victor Moody gave a recital on the organ. This was followed by an address from Miss Brooke Herford on the international work of the Women's League, in which she interested her audience by her description of the difficulties encountered and overcome in keeping open channels of communication with different nationalities, and of the good results of so doing, both now and in the time to come.

Merthyr Tydfil.—Mr. D. Cellan Evans, of the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, has received and accepted a unanimous "call" to the pastorate of Thomas Street Unitarian Church, Merthyr Tydfil. Mr. Evans will complete a very successful course of theological training in June. He is a very acceptable preacher, both in English and Welsh.

Midland Guilds' Union.—On Saturday the 15th inst., the Midland Guilds' Union held its first Annual Meeting at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham. The proceedings were opened with prayer by the Rev. H. Warnock. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, President, occupied the chair; the Treasurer and Secretary, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, read the statement of accounts, which revealed a gratifying financial position, and also surveyed the work of the Union since its inauguration in November 1913. During the actual space of less than eighteen months the Union has held eight extremely successful United Meetings, visiting in turn its constituent Guilds. The Union began with seven Guilds, of which one has lapsed. Five new Guilds have joined, thus making an increase of four, which indicates very satisfactory progress in such a short time. The National Conference Guilds' Union held its Annual Meeting by special arrangement in Birmingham on Easter Monday, and appointed Miss Twist, the prime mover in the formation of the Midland Guilds' Union, General Secretary of the N.C.G.U. and also its President, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, was elected President of the N.C.G.U. After the report of the Union's work and general position, the Secretaries of the respective Guilds' read reports of their work during the past session. Having been elected President of the National Union, Mr. Thomas deemed it wise to resign the Presidency of the Midland Guilds' Union, and on the motion of Mr. E. Ellis Townley, the Rev. H. Warnock of Walsall, was elected his successor. The Secretary and Treasurer was unanimously re-elected. Subsequently, there was a Communion Service in the Old Meeting Church, the officiating minister being the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, and the Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire.—The Rev. N. Anderton writes:—"Owing to special circumstances connected with the war the arrangements for the Annual Meeting of the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire have been somewhat delayed this year, and it is, perhaps, not generally known where the Assembly will meet. May we say that the Committee have arranged to hold the Annual Meeting in Manchester on Wednesday, June 23. It was felt that, notwithstanding the war, the Assembly ought to meet according to ancient custom, and that the meeting might well prove to be of more than usual value and helpfulness to the churches of the province in this time of national crisis. Full particulars will be announced in due course."

South Cheshire and District Association.—The Twenty-Fifth Annual Meeting of the South Cheshire and District Association of Sunday Schools and Congregations was held at the Free Christian Church, Beech Street, Crewe, on Wednesday, May 12th, all the churches being represented. The chair was taken by the President, the Rev. Dr. W. Griffiths. The Annual Report was presented by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. Geo. Smith, and the Treasurer's Statement of Account by Mr. D. W. Ross. The Congregational and Sunday School Reports gave evidence of the good work steadily going on despite some difficulties owing to shortage of workers. Newcastle and Whitchurch are each still without a resident minister, but the services are regularly maintained by supplies. Mr. R. Mansell of Shrewsbury was elected President for the ensuing year, and the officers and Executive Committee were re-elected. At the Conference Mr. D. W. Ross read an interesting paper entitled 'A Plea for the Teaching of Religious History in the Sunday Schools.' A discussion followed in which Dr. Griffiths, Mr. R. Mansell, the Rev. Dr. S. A. Mellor, Mr. Lewis Lloyd, the Rev. W. Stephens, and Mr. G. Smith took part. The Service in the evening was conducted by Dr. S. A. Mellor.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE PROFESSION OF HOMEMAKER.

Miss Margaret Ashton in her Presidential Address to the Association of Teachers of Domestic Subjects at the Manchester University, pointed out that the need and the opportunity for domestic teaching had been increased by the war. There was need for stricter economy now than there had been in the past, and an absolute cleanliness in person, clothing, and utensils was obviously essential if diseases coming from abroad were to be avoided. Most of all it was desirable that the home spirit should be cultivated, for that would make for the betterment of the race. Mrs. Pember Reeves frankly declared that women's domestic work has been for the last century or so in a state of chaos. It was not a profession but just "work," though it was without exception the most important thing the nation had to do. The work of both the small class of paid and the immense mass of unpaid domestic workers resolved itself into the question of children. An army of trained women was necessary if all the children were to be properly looked after. One woman was not sufficient to rear four, five, or six children without aid, yet there was an immense part of the nation doing that, and doing it for nothing.

WORKS OF ART SAVED FROM DESTRUCTION IN FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of The Times describes a little exhibition in the Petit Palais of works of art rescued from towns and churches devastated by the Germans, which was opened by President Poincaré last week. The principal exhibit is the magnificent tapestries from Reims Cathedral. There are sixteen of them in beautiful faded pink and blue colours. The two chief are Gothic, and represent scenes from the life of King Clovis; the others are Flemish art of the sixteenth century. The rest of the exhibition is composed of pictures and other ornaments from the churches of the Yser country, Furnes, Nieupoort, and Loo, and from the museum at Ypres. Their old homes are now in ruins; some of the exhibits themselves bear marks of shell-fire, and if they had not been rescued in time would certainly have been destroyed.

NATIVE RACES AND THE GREAT WAR.

A remarkable tribute to the admirable work of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society is paid by Sir Harry Johnston in his recent brochure entitled "Native Races and the Great War." "Germany," says Sir Harry Johnston, "knowing how the native races of Africa resented her own presence in that continent, counted on a similar hatred of British and French domination over the backward Caucasians or the non-Caucasian peoples of the Old World. She looked for far-spread insurrection in India, revolts in Egypt and the Sudan, risings against the French in Tunis, Algeria and Morocco, a rebellion of Boer against Briton, and negro against white man in South Africa. Possibly, if there had been for eighty years no Aborigines Protection Society in Great Britain.... Germany's forecast might have been justified. As it is, and because of the long-established propaganda of the Aborigines Protection Society, Egypt knows on which side its bread is buttered; India is willing to defer discussion of its diverse views as to measures of self-government, and buckle on its armour for the defence of the Empire in general; the natives of the Gambia, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast, Nigeria, Uganda, East Africa, Zanzibar, Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia, are intensely loyal; those of South Africa are putting British interests first and foremost even before their own unsettled land and suffrage problems; while in Malaysia, in Fiji, and the other Pacific islands under the British flag; in British Arabia and the Persian Gulf; in Ceylon and in the West Indies, the coloured races are showing themselves intensely solicitous for the victory of the British arms."

MANCHESTER DISTRICT
SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.
THE NEW WING,
BARLEYCROFT'S GIRLS' CONVALESCENT HOME,

Great Hucklow, WILL BE OPENED

On WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1915,
By CUTHBERT C. GRUNDY, Esq., J.P.
Chair to be taken at 4 o'clock by the Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS, President of the Association.
ALL FRIENDS CORDIALLY INVITED.

A convenient train leaves Manchester (Central) 12.20 and returns from Millers Dale at 6.35, due Manchester 7.20. Return fare, 4s. 4d. A Waggonette will meet the train (return fare 1s. 6d.) for all who advise the Secretary, C. PEACH, 9, East Meade, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Manchester.

PEARL
ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000
Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000
Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Winter Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

CLIFTONVILLE.—BOARD RESIDENCE. Mrs. J. H. S. COOPER, "Seacroft," Norfolk Road, Cliftonville, Margate, recommended by many friends at Highgate Church. Terms on application.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD LINEN. Hem-stitched Cotton Pillow Cases, size 18 by 28 inches, bundle of four, 2s. 11d.; postage 4d.; Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought. —Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION.

The Society offers to send a Popular Speaker free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c. With regard to the Lecturer, the Secretary of a large Brotherhood said: "Mr. Reed did us very good service, and the men were delighted with his earnestness and ability."

22 Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HAYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 29, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3805.
NEW SERIES, No. 908.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

NEW AND RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

MUTUAL INFLUENCE

A RE-VIEW OF RELIGION.

By Sir FRANCIS E. YOUNGHUSBAND.

A companion volume to 'Within,' by this well-known explorer and traveller, is sure to attract wide attention. It has not been written in haste, and it will contain the result of twenty-five years' most earnest search under conditions where it was possible continually to test them against the experiences of actual life.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. net. Ready.

A SPECULATION ON HYPOTHESIS IN RELIGION

AND ANOTHER ESSAY.

By Sir EDWARD RUSSELL.

"Its candour and its clearness and its note of sympathy ought to secure for it a welcome into many hearts. Such essays are imperatively required to-day."—Liverpool Daily Post.

Medium 8vo, stiff wrapper, 1s. net. Ready.

MARXISM v. SOCIALISM

By VLADIMIR J. SIMKHOVITCH, Ph.D.

PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY.

This volume is the result of many years of study, and furnishes a thorough and intimate knowledge of all the intricate theories, problems, and difficulties of modern Socialism.

"A well-written, well-conceived piece of criticism. We cannot but think he has proved his case that, whatever else the Socialist may become, he cannot accept and preach the pure milk of the Gospel according to Marx."—Glasgow Herald.

Small demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. net; postage inland, 5d. extra.

SOCIALISM & DEMOCRACY IN EUROPE.

By S. P. ORTH, Ph.D.

This volume traces briefly the spread of the Socialist movement in England, France, Belgium, and Germany.

"It is impartial, objective, vivid, and covers a great deal that is not to be found included within the covers of any other single book written in English."—Manchester Guardian.

Small demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. net; postage inland, 5d. extra.

THE EPHESIAN GOSPEL

By Prof. PERCY GARDNER, D.Litt.

This is a study of the Fourth Gospel on lines parallel to those on which the author has studied the Pauline Epistles in his recent volume on 'The Religious Experience of St. Paul.' An attempt is made to place the teaching of the Gospel in its place in the history of religious thought; and a final chapter considers it also in relation to modern conditions.

New Volume in Crown Theological Library.
5s. net. Ready next week.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen. Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Now Ready for June.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS:—

John Pounds and Ragged Schools.

John Howard and Prisons and Prisoners.

Joseph Priestley: Religious Teacher, Scientist, and Exile.

Dorothea Lynde Dix and the Care of Lunatics.

Junior Department—Lewis W. Lewis, M.A.

Senior Department—B.

REJOICING.—HAYMAKING.—UNSELFISHNESS.

—ROOTS AND FRUITS.

Primary Department—Alice L. Colfox.

LESSONS ON THE WAR, X.—XII.—Catherine Gittins.

BY THE WAY.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

6. Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK (of Toxteth Chapel, Liverpool).

13. Rev. RUDOLF DAVIS (of Gloucester).

20. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).

27. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON (late Minister of Essex Church, Kensington).

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

THE FOURTH SUMMER SCHOOL OF THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL CONFERENCE OF SOCIAL SERVICE UNIONS

WILL BE HELD AT

SWANWICK, DERBYSHIRE, from June 26 to July 5.

Programmes, with full particulars, can be obtained from Miss LUCY GARDNER, 92, St. George's Square, London, S.W., or from the Rev. H. H. JOHNSON,
B.A., Croft Road, Evesham, Sec. N.C.U.S.S.

PRAYERS: NEW AND OLD.

Suitable for Church, Family, or Private Worship.

By P. E. VIZARD.

THIRD EDITION. Price 1s. 6d. net.

"The prayers are redolent of the deeper piety of all ages and sections of the Christian Church. They are arranged and selected so as to meet the needs especially of those who seek to combine ancient devotion with modern conceptions of God and Man. The book is a good one."—Inquirer.

"An extremely beautiful and helpful little book."
Christian Commonwealth.

LINDSEY PRESS, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILLIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—*Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University*.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for boys from 6 years upwards."—*Lieut.-Col.
Stephenson, Cawnpore, India*.

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

MANSFIELD, CLIPSTONE CAMP.

Will Ministers or relatives please send to Rev. C. M. Wright, Layton Avenue, Mansfield, the names and full camp addresses of young men belonging to our Churches who are now at the above Camp.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, June 6.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 7, Mr. E. R. FYSON
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.; 7, Rev. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER; 7, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. T. B. ROSEBY; 7, Mr. Fred MADDISON.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT, M.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKE.
 DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR THACKRAX, Ph.D.
 STYAL—Closed.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45, Rev. A. CHESMAN, B.D.; 6.30, Rev. R. A. DICKSON.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. SAUNDERS.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. S. A. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. HARMAN TAYLOR.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN McDOWELL.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. JOHN S. BURGESS. Sunday School Anniversary Services.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Mr. W. RUSSELL.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. S'EIGHT, M.A.

DEATHS.

LEWIS.—On June 2nd, at 5, St. Thomas' Square, Hackney, Emma Ann Lewis, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Lewis, aged 90. Interment at Abney Park Cemetery, Stoke Newington, Saturday at 3 p.m.

MUNDELLA.—On May 28, at Cottage Grove, Bow, in her eighty-second year, Emma, wife of the late John Mundella, and daughter of the late William Wright, of Nottingham.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION.

The Society offers to send a Popular Speaker free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c. With regard to the Lecturer, the Secretary of a large Brotherhood said: "Mr. Reed did us very good service, and the men were delighted with his earnestness and ability."

22, Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	271	FOR THE CHILDREN :—		The National Unitarian Temperance Association	280
A FURTHER WORD ABOUT THE CHURCH AND THE ARMY	273	A True Story	277	Central Postal Mission	282
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	274	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—		National Conference	283
CORRESPONDENCE :—		Belgian Hospital Fund	278	Blackfriars Mission Cottage Home	283
The Church and the Army	274	The British and Foreign Unitarian Association	278	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	283
The Use of Gas as a Weapon	276	British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women	279	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	284
National Conference	277

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

As we announced last week Mrs. Allen has gone to France to superintend various matters connected with our Belgian Hospital Fund. She left on Friday, the 28th ult., and has been busily engaged since in distributing the 65 cases which she took over with her, in personal interviews and in other work. She has come into close touch with a new branch of activity, carried on with great self-devotion and womanly care by the wife of one of the Belgian doctors. It is a work of succour for the crowds of refugees who are still flocking south. Many of them only need warm food and a night's rest before they continue their journey; others who are sick require a few days in hospital, and there are nursing mothers who must have special tendance.

* * *

We are sure that all our contributors will be glad that some help should go to this Good Samaritan from our Fund. We quote a few sentences from an account of this work which Mrs. Allen has just sent us. She will tell us more about it on her return. "I went to the station and met Madame L., whose asile for refugees I had seen in the morning. There we, and Madame's uncle, a delightful curé of over 70 years, met the train and received 94 refugees, mostly from Ypres and neighbourhood. It was quite the most pitiable sight I have seen here—old, very old people—infirm on crutches, nursing mothers and tiny children, with their bundles, leaving their cellars and holes, which have been their homes for weeks past, but which were their homes, and facing the unknown with terror. Madame L. is beautiful with them, giving a word here and there, in Flemish, and everywhere leaving smiles and a feeling that they are welcomed behind her. We all walked together up the town to the Mairie, where a wearisome time was spent while all these poor people were registered, and then on again to the refuge, and five minutes after the women and children were sitting down to a hot meal of soup and stew and bread, and as it was then 7 o'clock, bed on great straw beds was the next part of the programme."

* * *

"THERE is a small hospital here," Mrs. Allen continues, "with fourteen beds for the very old and infirm, but some of the beds were broken and very uncomfortable. 'It doesn't matter much if the occupant is pretty well,' said Madame, after describing how one bed was mended with string in the middle and constantly collapsed! 'but it does if they are wounded!' So the next day we had five new beds round there—five nice English beds, with strong frames and good mattresses."

This is one illustration of the good deeds which our contributors enable us to do without delay as soon as the need arises.

* * *

WE are very sorry that most of the letters which we have received on 'The Church and the Army' must remain unpublished, because our space is not elastic. Those which appear to-day were among the earliest arrivals, and seem to emphasise the main points. We hope to find space for others next week. But may we remind our correspondents that the length of their communications is a source of serious embarrassment. A letter to the press ought not to be first cousin to a sermon! We gather from the number of letters which have reached us, that we have struck upon a subject of real importance, and from the tone of anger in some of them, that it is one upon which some people feel vehemently. If the subject was to be raised at all it had to be done in the challenging tones which compel public attention, and not in phrases of mild neutrality. If we have made some of our readers think furiously, and forced them to formulate their reasons for rejecting our arguments more clearly than they have done before, we think we may have done them a service, though we hardly expect them to be grateful. The one course which we must try to avoid is that of taking for granted that the younger members of the ministry stand in an entirely different position from other citizens in this matter, or that their work is necessarily more important for the higher life of the nation than that of the hundreds of teachers and writers, poets, artists, men of affairs, who have accepted a hard and distasteful duty without regard to the future of their work, or any attempt to assess their own value to the State.

* * *

MAY we add one more word on this subject, prompted by a private letter, which reached us after the leading article in the present issue was in type. It is a letter of deep personal sorrow over our disloyalty to the high ideals of the Christian ministry. The present writer must leave his own record to speak for him in this matter; but we do not share the idea that there is any disloyalty in advocating courses of action which lie far away from our ordinary routine, when we have to meet a situation which we have never had even to consider before. If our friend and others will believe us we are deeply concerned for the honour of the ministry. This is no ordinary war. We are fighting for the souls of men quite as much as for their bodies. When the conflict is over, and the longed for peace arrives, we do not want the ministry to be the one profession which did not send its fair quota of men to face death for the sake of the brethren. There is nothing dishonouring to the call of religion in the thought that their lives may also be required as part of the price which has to be paid for the blessings of freedom.

* * *

BUT all this discussion and the severe tension of thought and feeling in the country, as a whole, show that we are moving about in worlds not realised. This week more than twelve of the Heads of Oxford colleges have published an appeal on the need of the hour. These men represent the finest flower of the intellect of England, but theirs is no plea for the rights of learning in time of war. They ask that they and others should no longer be left to do their own job in their own way, but that all should be organised for national service, and, so far as possible, have their allotted task.

We would respectfully suggest [they say] that a definite day should immediately be fixed by our legislators as the date on, and after which, to the end of this "emergency period," every citizen in Great Britain should know himself to be perforce "under orders." And let our Government meanwhile (we humbly pray) devise the ways and means by which each and every citizen shall be constrained—or, rather, set free—to do the work for which he is best fitted in this all but supreme hour of national probation.

* * *

THE Archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued a pastoral letter, which it is suggested should be read in all parish churches on Sunday. It is a call for concentration, for readiness in sacrifice, and for prayer. After expressing their confidence that the Government will take whatever steps it considers to be necessary "to summon and control every possible resource which we have of body and brain, of wealth and industry," it continues:—

We solemnly call upon all members of the Church, and urge upon all our fellow citizens, to meet with glad and unstinted response whatever demands of service or of sacrifice the Government decides to make. A great war righteously waged calls out that spirit of willing sacrifice with a plainness and an intensity which nothing else can rival. On behalf of righteousness and in our country's cause there is no one, there is nothing, too dear or too sacred to be offered. God has so taught us. Let us obey. By what we give and by what we are, may his will be done.

* * *

BUT the chief emphasis of the appeal is upon the religious side. It asks all Christian people to embrace the plain duty of "continuing instant in prayer" in these tremendous weeks of tense conflict, of crushing bereavement, and of continuous suspense and strain. We hope that the following words of religious advice will be read on Sunday in many churches, which are not under episcopal jurisdiction:—

Remember always that prayer means something even larger and deeper than asking wisdom for our King and his ministers, protection for our sailors and soldiers, comfort for the anxious and the bereaved, victory for the cause of our nation and its Allies. Prayer implies a reverent sense of the Sovereignty of God, a hold even when we are bewildered in the darkness and confusion upon the certainty that he is set in the Throne judging right. And prayer means—for without this we dare not come into his Presence—the humble, deliberate, heartfelt confession of our sins: sins of selfishness and self-indulgence, sins of hardness and complacency, sins of sheer laziness and lack of thought. We have in days of quiet made too little of the claim of God upon our lives. Can we wonder that in stern hours like this it is hard to kindle afresh the deep and simple thought which we have allowed to grow languid and uncertain? But such re-kindling there must be. Give earnest heed to this most sacred of all duties. Set yourselves, even in the midst of the exigencies and passions of war, to be loyal to the spirit of Jesus Christ. Strive to keep openness of mind and soul for such message as the Holy Spirit may reveal to us at an hour when God is judging what is base and inspiring what is best in England's life. He may speak in the ordered ministry of word and sacrament, or in the roar of battle, or in the silence of a shadowed home. He does, for we have all seen it, give, to those who lie open to his gift, courage and understanding and patience and high hope. "O put your trust in him always, ye people; pour out your hearts before him; for God is our hope."

* * *

To many of us one of the bitter experiences of the war has been the sense of alienation from men in Germany whom we had learned to honour and respect. Whether the breach can be healed in the short space of our individual lives time alone can show. But how eagerly we have seized upon the fact that some names have been conspicuous by their absence from these strange manifestoes, and how strongly we have cherished the hope that some day they would emerge from their silence and speak with a nobler voice. Professor Troeltsch, of Heidelberg, has written an outspoken article in the Frankfurter Zeitung against the encouragement which has been given to the spirit of hate. All we need say by way of comment upon the passages from it which we have seen is this—that with the memory of a delightful summer walk with him fresh in our mind, and some knowledge of his teaching, it is exactly what we should expect from him. The following passage from the article appeared in the Westminster Gazette on Tuesday:—

Hatred may inspire us with courage and driving power, but it is, politically speaking, in the long run, an evil counsellor. It gives rise to a bitter and fantastical idea of politics, which cannot be pursued, and therefore brings dangerous disappointment in its train. And in its influence on our moral and spiritual life hatred is most dangerous. Everyone is agreed that we need a deepening of our moral and spiritual sense, and hopes to see a new Germany rise out of the unparalleled sacrifices which we have made. This new Germany is not to be a compound of hate, but to spring from the creation of new sources of national strength. All her past, whether it be based on Christian and Conservative ideas, or on Liberal ideals, protests against race hatred, and all these theories which base the conduct of real politics on hate—theories which are not born in the field, but at the writing-desk, whose standard bearers are not soldiers, but the self-important Philistine, and the bombastic writer at home.... We do not need to cultivate hate, but to deepen our insight into the terrible seriousness of the moment, and this all important hour of our fate.

* * *

THE trustees of the John Rylands Library have organised a scheme for repairing the loss which the world of learning has suffered by the destruction of the University Library at Louvain. They have offered 200 duplicate volumes for the purpose, and already 800 others have been promised by private donors, many of them works of great value. Sir William Osler, the Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford is taking steps to organise an effort on a large scale to restore the medical side of the library. Many of the great libraries are also keenly interested in the scheme. We understand that the Unitarian Home Missionary College in Manchester intends to offer a large number of volumes. The movement has also spread to France, and the Bibliothèque Nationale is taking similar steps towards the restoration of the Louvain Library.

A FURTHER WORD ABOUT THE CHURCH AND THE ARMY.

THE article which we published last week on the 'Church and the Army' has evidently succeeded in arresting public attention. We expected to provoke a good deal of dissent by the bold suggestion that at this time of grave national crisis the minister of religion should regard himself as an ordinary man, upon whom the duty of voluntary service in the army is just as incumbent as upon any other citizen. Some of the letters which we have received appear to-day. Others, which are expressed simply in terms of protest, may be more fitly reserved for the Editor's private meditation. But the state of mental perturbation, amounting in some cases to positive misunderstanding, which has been aroused, makes it desirable for us to add a few words, not of apology or of withdrawal, but of explanation to make our meaning clear.

And first let us express our regret that anything approaching anger or indignation should enter into the discussion of this subject at all. It is not in this temper of sensitiveness about ourselves that we must approach the solemn and unprecedented duties of this time. Some of the students of Manchester College Oxford have apparently jumped to the conclusion that the article was aimed at them, and that they are likely to suffer injury or loss of repute on account of it. We can assure them that we were writing on a large subject of national concern, and there was no reference, either open or concealed, to any particular group of men. It is not our practice to aim shafts at individuals under cover of general statements. Our object in writing on topics of this kind is to provoke thought and to help to mould public opinion. May we suggest to our student correspondents that no one need put the cap on his own head unless it fits him. At the same time we cannot profess to be sorry if any words of ours induce some of them to face the whole subject afresh and to revise their previous decision. The issues of the war for all the higher interests of life, for freedom, for national safety and for religion itself, are so much more serious than we could possibly grasp ten months ago, that the temporary sacrifice of their career, which seemed needless then, may well appear to be imperative now.

Let us, however, leave this personal side issue, and turn to the main question. We have to face the fact that it is much easier for a minister to stay at home than it is for a man of the same age in any other profession. There is no public opinion to urge him to go, or to push him into the fighting line, or to make him uncomfortable if he turns a deaf ear to the country's call and carries on his particular line of business as usual. He is protected by his calling, and the respect which most people feel for its sacredness, as no other man is protected. We believe that this fact must share the responsibility with the motives of heart-searching conscientiousness, to which some of our correspondents refer, for the failure of many ministers to come forward. For them, and for them alone, staying at home means swimming with the stream and conformity to general opinion. Now it is this situation that we want to face quite candidly. We believe that it rests fundamentally on the popular belief that a minister is rather different from ordinary men, that he belongs to a sacred caste. It is this double standard that we want to help to break down in view of the greatest demand which has ever been made upon our citizenship. The barriers between all other professions have been submerged, men are all plain citizens now. Is the ministry alone to remain a class apart from the common life, preaching the message that the duty which falls upon the other young men of the nation is one from which its members are exempt? We believe that just in so far as ministers repudiate this claim by their example, they will increase their influence and strengthen the spiritual ties which bind them to the common life of humanity. But a great deal of responsibility in this matter rests upon the laity. If they will face the issue frankly and throw off the old-fashioned theory of the minister as a man apart, who is less tough in fibre than the citizen of the world; if they will make it easy for the young minister to go, instead of emphasising the inconvenience of his absence; if they will state publicly that they think it right that he should share the terrible discipline and the last extremity of self-sacrifice, which they regard as a plain duty for their own sons, they will strike a winning blow at an artificial separation and a double moral standard, which have clogged the progress of religion and stifled its simple human appeal. We have no wish to exert unfair pressure upon any man to join the army. Our plea is for such a revision of judgment that the young minister will be placed in precisely the same position as the young layman, and feel all around him the silent pressure of influences which encourage him to come forward in answer to a call, which thousands of men as high-minded and religious as himself must obey, if the cause of justice is to be vindicated and the country to be saved from disaster.

This is the core of our position, and nothing that has been said by any of our correspondents has given us any reason to doubt its soundness. But in view of a certain line of criticism, a further word must be added. We recognise that when general principles are applied to particular cases many difficulties may arise, conflicting motives, personal scruples, or a tangled complex of duties which seems to leave no plain path for our feet. Accordingly we judge no man, though it is impossible not to inquire into the reasons, and to try to dissipate them, when we find large groups of men holding back from an urgent public duty. All these reasons are not ultimate questions of conscience. Considerations of personal preference and public advantage, professional habits and inherited traditions, the clinging affections of home or the hesitating advice of a friend, may enter into them; and no unlawful violence is done to individual right when the heroic duty of the moment is put in such a compelling way that all the weaker defences will go down before it. Unless we are at liberty to do this we could never try to influence one another at all or to draw men by the appeals of religion into social effort and the noble tasks of a common patriotism.

Our critics make a great mistake if they imagine that we are careless about the insistent claims of religion, and to talk to us about them is simply to preach to the converted. We have written as we have done because we feel that we are face to face with issues of life and death for our people, to which many of the thoughts and habits of normal times must give place. But we have also had a vision of the renewal of religion which may come from the baptism of fire. For a long time many people who have looked at the matter candidly have been impressed with the need of new sources of spiritual energy in the religion of this country. Our denominational divisions have become unreal; our theology has withered into a learned scholasticism; our professional energy has outrun our capacity for experience. Our books and our learning have failed to save us. But the awful discipline of pain, the acceptance of wounds, disease, and death in simple obedience to the divine command—who can say what miracles of grace may be worked by these things in the hearts of men, for their own spiritual healing and the renewal of religion in the world?

A short time ago a man who holds a position of responsibility in the educational world was speaking to us about the hundreds of teachers who have gone from the schools, and the difficulty of carrying on their work. "But," he said, "we expect them to be better teachers than they have ever been before when they come back." May we not transfer these words, with an added depth of meaning, from the teachers of the London County Council to the teachers of the Church of Christ? Religion at any rate has nothing to lose and everything to gain by running the risk.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

PESCHIERA.

This voice did on my spirit fall,
Peschiera! when thy bridge I crost:
" 'Tis better to have fought and lost,
Than never to have fought at all."

Or shall I say? "Vain word, false thought,
Since Prudence hath her martyrs too,
And wisdom dictates not to do,
Till doing shall be not for nought."

Not ours to give or lose is life;
Will Nature, when her brave ones fall,
Remake her work? Or songs recall Death's victim slain in useless strife?"

The rivers flow into the sea
In loss and waste, the foolish say,
Nor know that back they find their way,
Unseen, to where they went to be.

Showers fall upon the hills, springs flow,
The river runneth still at hand,
Brave men are born into the land,
And whence the foolish do not know.

No! no vain voice did on me fall,
Peschiera! when thy bridge I crost:
" 'Tis better to have fought and lost,
Than never to have fought at all."

A. H. CLOUGH.

"If my neighbour fails," says the true patriot, "more devolves upon me." Discord and even treason are not... the pure evils which, upon a superficial view, they appear to be. Never are a people so lively admonished of the love they bear their country, and of the pride which they have in their common parent, as when they hear of some paricidal attempt of a false brother. For this cause chiefly, in times of national danger, are their fancies so busy in suspicion; which under such shape, though oftentimes producing dire and pitiable effects, is notwithstanding in its general character no other than that habit which has grown out of the instinct of self-preservation—elevated into a wakeful and affectionate apprehension for the whole, and ennobling its private and baser ways by the generous use to which they are converted. Nor ever has a good and loyal man such a swell of mind, such a clear insight into the constitution of virtue, and such a sublime sense of its power, as at the first tidings of some atrocious act of perfidy; when, having taken the alarm for human nature, a second thought recovers him; and his faith returns—gladsome from what has been revealed within himself, and awful from participation of the secrets in the profaner grove of humanity, which that momentary blast laid open to his view.

WORDSWORTH.

GIVE me, O Lord, purity of lips, a clean and innocent heart, and rectitude of action. Give me humility, patience, abstinence, chastity, prudence, justice, fortitude, temperance. Give me the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and strength, the spirit of knowledge and godliness, and of thy fear. Make me ever to seek thy face with all my heart, all my soul, all my mind; grant me to have a contrite and humbled heart in thy presence—to prefer nothing to thy love. Most high, eternal, and ineffable wisdom, drive away from me the darkness of blindness and ignorance; most high and eternal strength, deliver me; most high and eternal Fortitude, assist me; most high and incomprehensible light, illuminate me; most high and infinite Mercy, have mercy on me. AMEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE CHURCH AND THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have to congratulate you on the high spirit of Christian patriotism that has breathed in THE INQUIRER'S Editorials since the war monopolised all our thoughts. That spirit has been once more illustrated in the leading article entitled, 'The Church and the Army,' in your last issue. With its main lines I concur from the bottom of my soul. While, at the age of 77, it is impossible for me to shoulder a rifle, I am thankful at least that three of my sons have enlisted with their mother's blessing as well as mine, urged by their own irrepressible desire to stand up in defence of a country dearer than life. Certainly, it would not have been my ministry that would have kept me at home had I been young as they. I have always held that a minister is just a man among men, a citizen with a citizen's duty to fulfil, an example to his flock of all that makes true manliness, practising what he preaches and preaching nothing that he would not practice, if he could. So, with the cry, "Arm, arm, ye brave," often on my lips, there is one thought that gives me trouble; it is that I cannot strike a blow myself for the hearths and homes of my beloved native land in the awful peril that assails her very life. I agree with you, toto caelo, that there is nothing in being a minister under him who laid down his life for his friends to debar a true man from sacrificing his own on the field of battle for the country that gave him birth. No man loves peace and goodwill among men more than I. No one hates the very thought of war more; but to fight for a righteous cause, against such a diabolical power, for example, as threatens to overwhelm Christian civilisation throughout Europe, is an occupation mete for a Christian minister. I should give my benediction to any of our young ministers who went forth to fight to the death the "hostes humani generis" whom we are up against. Yet, I think that it is not for others than themselves to judge the inwardness of their own personal situation. In their own conscience they stand or fall. "Who art thou that thou judgest thy brother?" are familiar words with me. I would not venture to question a brother minister's own decision on this vital issue. So please forgive me for one concluding word of criticism on your implied censure of our colleges in this matter. As Chairman of the Committee of Manchester College, Oxford, I am confident that I express the views of every one of its members in saying that I believe that they would not raise a finger to stay its students from enlisting; they would rather heartily wish them Godspeed in doing so; and that wish I have already personally expressed where it has been done. At the same time I feel most strongly that it is not for the Committee to urge the step upon their students; nor is it the staff with whom responsibility lies if they do not take it. The choice must be their own whether or no to adopt a course laden with such infinite possibilities for themselves. None having official authority over them especially can use it on so momentous an occasion. My wife and I did not say a word to our sons about their choice. It was their own solely, because they felt they must "do their bit." So may I say that I rather deprecate the strength of the implication on the students of our colleges who have not enlisted being dishonoured thereby? A man's honour is in his own keeping; and when he has devoted himself to the sacred calling of a minister of Christ, he may have exceedingly powerful reasons for thinking he can best serve his Master by prosecuting it. I would, at least, give him the benefit of the doubt and not condemn him unheard.—Yours, &c.

H. ENFIELD DOWSON.

Gee Cross, Hyde, May 31, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Your leading article in last week's INQUIRER will no doubt arouse discussion. As I understand it you think that theological students and young ministers and curates are not in a class apart. They are not free from the responsibility of deciding whether they ought to serve in the army as soldiers at the present time. So far as this general principle is concerned, I agree with you. I am glad to say that the students at Manchester College, of whom alone I can speak with any knowledge, have recognised your principle from the first. Several of them have joined the forces and others have tried to do so. Those who have decided to remain at their posts have done so, I am sure, under a sense of duty. There are some men who are showing as much courage and self-denial in going on with their work as others who enlist. Your article did not mean I believe to cast any aspersion on our students and young ministers. The work of the Churches must be carried on and it would be a grave loss if all our young ministers joined the army. We older ministers, who cannot serve at the front even if we wished, must be very careful in our judgment of others. There are many things to be considered which each man has to decide for himself. The need of the country for men to defend our liberties is ever more pressing, and we who stay at home must feel the tremendous responsibility laid upon us by those who are giving their lives on our behalf. At the same time we all know young men in various positions who are continuing their work and whose decisions we ought to respect. The ministry does not exempt a man from considering the question of military service. But there are many young men in the church, in the law, in the civil service, and in the teaching profession whose work has still the first claim upon them. We must leave it to each of them to make the momentous decision for himself. Let each man be fully persuaded in his own mind.—Yours, &c. HENRY GOW.

Hampstead,

June 2, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It would seem that the young men of England are to-day, by Press and public, divided into four main classes: those who have enlisted for active service; those who are engaged in some necessary war occupation at home; those who are physically unfit for military life, and those who are called "slackers," without further definition. The first two classes receive praise and commendation; the third class is pitied; the fourth class is, it would seem, about to be put under compulsion. Is this division into four classes exhaustive? I do not think it is. There is another class, that, namely, composed of the young men, physically fit and of military age, who, for various reasons, conscientiously feel that their duty calls them to remain rather than to go, to be here rather than there, to do their ordinary work at home as well and loyally as they can rather than seek another task to which they do not feel themselves explicitly called. I will not discuss the reasons that may lead young men to such a decision. I will only say that, in the class of young men under notice, those reasons are honourable and worthy of respect, and I want to emphasise the significant point that we have to do here with conscientious personal choice, in a word with cases of conscience. I am compelled, further, to believe that the students for the ministry and the young ministers with whom your article on "The Church and the Army" mainly deals belong to this additional class. I do not think the men referred to are "slackers" in the accepted sense. I do not think they are cowards; I think that, in all probability, they are men who, individually, have made a personal choice of their line of action at the moment in accord with the deepest dictates of their conscience, and in pursuit of duty. That choice may have cost them bitter struggle, and very likely has laid them open to misunderstanding, unjust criticism, and worse. The "young minister" has probably considered all the things you invite him to consider, and many more besides. I am content to believe that, being an honourable and sincere man, he has had this wrestling and faced the trial of decision.

Has anyone the right to question that decision, to cast upon it the cloud of obloquy, or, still more important, to endeavour to exercise against it an indirect and subtle kind of compulsion? I deny that any such right exists, and, with all the force I can command, I protest against any and every attempt to exercise compulsion against the conscientious decision of a fellow man. The resolution passed by the Bishop of London's Ordination Council, of which you approve, appears to me, not only hasty and ill-judged, but a complete violation of the freedom of conscience and the best traditions of the Christian ministry. Since the outbreak of this war, has the Church of God and His Christ become really a place to which admission can be gained only by those who are ready to put on the military uniform? This is surely a new understanding of the Church Militant!

I am sorry your article was written. I respect its sincerity, and the passion for service that burns in it. But with, I trust, equal sincerity and passion, I protest against, and dissent from, the whole tone and tenor of it. One morning last week I heard Mr. P. H. Wicksteed deliver a wonderful speech on the theme that there are in this world some things worse than defeat. I believe it. I believe that disloyalty to conscience is worse than any defeat, and we must remember that we live in a world in which the verdict of conscience is not necessarily the same for all. As a younger minister, whose decision differs from that of some others, I can only say that I profoundly respect those who have made personal choices other than mine, and that I am ready to bear the consequences of my choice as they are of theirs. But, in matters of conscience, let us keep absolutely clear of the thought of compulsion, whether direct or indirect.

I write this letter not on my own behalf, but on behalf of certain honourable young men, students for the ministry, who have asked me to place a protest against what they and I take to be the significance of your article. I am honoured by their confidence.—Yours, &c., STANLEY A. MELLOR.

23, Huskisson Street, Liverpool,

May 31, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—While agreeing in the main with your general attitude towards the war, and hating the thought of vain controversy at such a time as this, I feel compelled to protest against the tone of your article on the Church and the Army. You throw over the Archbishop for the Bishop, and cast a stigma of cowardice upon the younger men in our Free Church ministry who, while eulogising their lay brethren for entering the Army, feel that their own calling is too sacred to be forsaken even at such an hour. If they will not go to the trenches they are to be dumb. Such is your verdict. Such suggestions must give infinite pain to our divinity students and to those eligible ministers who, having faced this question in the light of their consciences, have felt imperatively that they must pursue that ministry to which their lives are dedicated, even in the face of their desire to be in the thick of the fray.

Even if their decision were wrong the matter is so personal and so delicate that censorious criticism is altogether out of place. But their decision is at least defensible, and in the main I believe it to be right. Let me suggest one simple test :—

Can you imagine Jesus placing such an alternative before his disciples? Their paramount business was and is to preach and exemplify the gospel of the kingdom and to apply it to the duties of the hour. You will surely admit that it is at least as essential to the victory we seek that the spiritual resources of the nation should be organised, as the physical. If that be so the men who are called to this duty can only forsake their posts at the nation's peril. They would do infinitely greater harm by deserting their pulpits than they would do good by shooting Germans. You will plead the power of example. Granted; but each must make his own sacrifice, and in his own way. Seventy of my own young men have joined the King's forces, but some wished to do so and were not permitted. The authorities felt that they could do better service at home. I give both my benediction, and with equal fervour.

Had you canvassed the opinion of the ministers themselves I have not the least doubt they would unanimously have testified that the work of the ministry is not only more harassing and more irksome since the war began, but more urgent than ever. The opposition you have had to face in your own splendid campaign in defence of the purity of Britain's motive, and the duty of taking up arms against Germany must have convinced you that teachers and preachers have at this time many exacting problems to face. The souls of thoughtful men and women are in deep perplexity, and the man who would minister effectually to them must wrestle with these problems through this night of horror till light dawns.

Nor are these problems altogether matters of theory or even of conscience. Pastoral work has become more exacting because of the war. The lads who are gone must be kept in touch with church and school. Those they leave behind must be cared for and comforted. Many a brother minister like myself must have filled up scores of forms of one kind or another with a view to getting proper provision for wives or widows or other dependents upon the men who have enlisted. The bereaved must be comforted, the anxious soothed.

Even more vital to the future of civilisation is it that the national conscience should be kept alert and that its first high motive for entering the war should not degenerate into a blind hatred of everything German. This is a very real danger. Pogroms on innocent Germans here and elsewhere show how near we are getting to unlicensed fury which, to say the least, does not add to our efficiency for war service. Great causes are forgotten in this period of deepening passion. While we fight furiously to prevent the Germanic type of militarism from trampling democracy under its feet, we are in danger of succumbing to it at home under the pressure of what seems like national necessity. Free speech has gone; the liberty of the Press has vanished; representative government in the true sense has gone, for the electorate has not been consulted in this vital matter of the coalition; Parliament itself has not been consulted, it has only been told what has happened. Side by side with these disturbing changes there is a levity of temper on the part of great numbers who, because wages are high and war profits extortionate, live in this time of peril as though all were well. Is this a time when we can afford to weaken the ranks of the church militant and to transform witness bearers of spiritual principles into wielders of carnal weapons? No. Prophets, preachers, and pastors were never more vitally necessary to the national safety and well-being than now. And, in my judgment, they can do their country infinitely better service in their own proper sphere than by practising the art of war.—Yours, &c.,

ALBERT THORNHILL.

Brookfield Parsonage,
Gorton, Manchester.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I think you will agree that every man, including ministers and theological students, must settle for himself whether he goes or stays. It is just as important that the right men should stay as that the rest should go. I feel sure that your article was not meant to criticise the ministers or students who have thought it their duty to stay, especially as they have done so much good work in connection with the war at home. I, for one, have perfect confidence in their judgment and their patriotism, and I think every one else has the same feeling. Churches and chapels alike are understaffed, as the 'Year-Book' will show so far as our own churches are concerned; students are expected to do their part as supplies, and I think in practice it might be difficult to carry on religious work at all satisfactorily if they or the ministers were to go. Religious influence and counsel was never so much needed as during the present time, and it cannot be given effectively under haphazard conditions. What must above all things be avoided is any suggestion that ministers or theological students as a whole have not done their part in the war, for it would be a very great injustice to them personally and a serious handicap to their future work.—Yours, &c.

T. M. CHALMERS.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, W.C.,

June 2, 1915.

GAS AS A WEAPON.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is hardly a matter for surprise that sensitive people should at first have been horrified at the announcement that we are going to resort to the military use of poisonous gas. Knowing the agonising nature of the death caused by this new German method of warfare, one felt that the British tradition of chivalry would be indelibly defiled by our adoption of similar methods. But it is necessary to think out this primary repugnance to its ultimate logic. If it rests on a final deliverance of the soul; on something eternally qualitative which no quantitative estimate of consequences can affect, then, of course, it admits of no argument. We must simply assert our absolute refusal to apply a means which no conceivable end can possibly justify, and there leave the matter.

It is perhaps not impossible to imagine a proposal so infernal in character that rather than adopt it, we should prefer not merely to die ourselves and consign our soldiers by the thousands to die, but also to let the British Empire and human civilisation perish for ever. It is difficult to think of such a case, but I suppose most of us would so regard permanent compulsory human vivisection without anæsthetics as a condition of social existence. A sane man would then probably say, "Better all die than accept such a condition of survival." Tolstoyans and out-and-out non-resisters so regard war, even when prosecuted without treachery, on equal terms. They say, "I will die rather than accept such blood-guiltiness."

Now if that is what the critics of the military decision to use gas really mean, they ought to be sufficiently clear in their minds to adopt the same logic and urge us to surrender, arguing that the consequences of surrender and non-resistance, be they what they may, cannot be worse for us than the moral effects of resorting to this hideously cruel method of warfare. But if that is not their point, then they must be prepared to meet such plain questions as the following. Does it not follow, once you admit the duty of warlike resistance at all, that the more fiendishly treacherous the weapon which your enemy uses, then the more morally imperative it is in the interests of the very survival of your humane sentiments that his devilry should be defeated and that he should be taught the lesson that methods of treachery do not even pay? How many of our own soldiers will you sacrifice to German treachery before you consent to equalise the conditions of the combat? Will you besides sacrificing our soldiers to a horrible death in order to save German soldiers from a similar death, accept the probable defeat of ourselves and of our Allies and the cause they represent, by compelling them to fight with their hands tied by your objections? All the humanising rules of warfare (always a horrible business) having been broken by the enemy, are we not only free but ethically bound to use such similar weapons as will, from the military point of view, most effectively save the lives of our soldiers and the righteousness they defend? I would not inflict one twinge of unnecessary pain upon the most brutal German in the field. The business of war, once resolutely entered on, is not torture or revenge; its object is, by capture, or killing or hunger and thirst, to render the enemy from the military point of view, hors de combat. I hope we may discover a gas which will not torture, but paralyse or painlessly kill. But in any case we must not now shrink from legitimate self-defence. In this grim and stern business any inconsiderate tenderness on our part at the expense of our own soldiers is, when thoroughly analysed, only an unconscious plea that we should tolerate and encourage treachery by helping to make it successful. Such one-sided humanitarianism is merely a sanctioning of German cruelty by placing our own men at its mercy—surely a peculiarly inhuman and immoral form of sentimentalism.—Yours, &c.

J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

June 3, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—To break a promise is treacherous but not "diabolical." The evidence is that the German gas was selected for the sake of its torturing property, not incidental to its disabling effect, but added to it for its own sake. It may have been the outcome of mere hate, or (as we may hope is more probable) of a desire to terrify by its horror. Even in the milder supposition it deserves to be called "diabolical." If Lord Kitchener, after applying that epithet to it, and going on to forecast our employment of "similar" methods, meant no more than Mr. Jackson (and apparently yourself and Mr. Golland, in spite of his speaking of "poisonous" gas) supposes, and as we must all sincerely hope, then surely it is most unfortunate that he expressed himself in language, and in a context, that challenged a misunderstanding of so horrible a nature. That misunderstanding cannot be too soon or too explicitly removed.

As to the use of "gas," as such, apart from its torturing forms, one can only say that every fresh departure in war is, and ought to be, a fresh shock, and that in cases where such ghastly possibilities of abuse have been exemplified, it would be well to bear in mind the Rabbinical admonition to "make a hedge round the Law." But it is impossible, of course, to maintain that there is any fundamental difference of principle between uses in war of the different physical forms of matter, as such.

But may I ask whether it is quite certain that the German gas does violate the Hague Convention? I have been told that the Convention forbids the use of poisonous explosives, but of no other form of the use of gas. If this is so would you or those of your correspondents who find the German offence only in the violation of a promise, acquit them?

Apart from that I cannot follow Mr. Golland's argument that the best way of protecting the sanctity of an engagement, is to follow suit as soon as it is broken; nor can I imagine a more splendid vindication of that sanctity than would be offered by the Allies, could they say at the end of the war, "It is not a question of who began first. You violated the conventions and we did not." There would then be one outlaw nation and a great group of nations that knew they could trust each other. May I add that I have before me the letter of a young soldier at the front who has seen with horror the hideous effects of the gas and who writes (not to me): "I heartily agree with you in trusting that we shall not use gas.... We are all provided with medicated respirators, and headquarters report that there is no authenticated case of poisoning where these respirators have been worn."—Yours, &c.

PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

Childrey, nr. Wantage,

June 2, 1915.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—A short time ago it was announced that the Triennial Meetings of the National Conference would be held in London on September 28 and 29. Since then, however, almost insuperable difficulties have presented themselves to prevent London friends from receiving the Conference at that time in the way they would desire. The Committee has, therefore, decided to change the dates of the meetings to October 26, 27, and the morning of 28. The usual invitations to appoint delegates, with particulars of arrangements, &c., will be sent out in July. But it may be convenient to many friends to know as soon as possible of this alteration of time.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES HARWOOD, Secretary.

May 31, 1915.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

A TRUE STORY.

"When God wants a hard thing done in the world, he tells it to his Englishmen."—MILTON.

EARLY one sunny morning in May, twenty-three years ago, a little brown-eyed baby-boy, with golden brown hair, awoke from a long sleep under a white hawthorn hedge by the main road outside a village. You will think, "What a curious place for a baby to be sleeping in!" So thought the policeman who found it there.

"One of them 'not wanted' little uns," he said pityingly, as he carried it awkwardly but tenderly home to his wife till he could find out something about it.

No one knew anything about the poor little baby, and so at last it was taken to the Union, a big house some miles away, where people are cared for who are too old, or too poor (and sometimes too lazy) to look after themselves. Here he was nursed by some rough and stupid, but kindly old women, and was put to sleep in a cot in a large room full of cots for babies "not wanted," either because their parents were too poor or were idle and selfish. Of course he was given a name, and for no particular reason at all he was called Sam Johnson. For a long time, however, folks used to inquire after him as the "Bainford baby," from the name of the village where he was found. I am glad to say that they had given up doing this when he was old enough to understand the talk around him.

When he was about 2 years old, Sam was sent to live in a cottage in another village near. Now for the first time in his life he knew what it is to have a home, and to be mothered. There were no other children, and he very soon began to call the poor young widow woman in the cottage "muvver," while she soon felt almost as if he were the little boy of her own for whom she had longed, and not the "boarded-out" child from the Union.

Every now and then a lady came to see his "mother." She advised about his clothes and little illnesses, played with or scolded him (whichever he deserved), and when he was old enough to have a little bedroom to himself she put up in it some bright pictures, and a shelf for his play-things. Some people called her a Lady Guardian, but Sam never thought of, or called her anything but Guardian Lady.

One would have supposed that Sam had every chance of growing up a good and useful boy. Unfortunately, both at home and school, the good in him was spoiled by a rooted dislike to doing anything steadily, and by a habit of not doing what he was told, or of doing it at his own convenience. His Guardian Lady paid many extra visits to Sam's "mother" to smooth her difficulties with the provoking "young handful." The village schoolmaster despaired of getting any hard work out of Sam, but every one who knew the boy agreed that he was never mean and cruel, and could be uncommonly brave. The big village bullies feared him, and little children and animals loved him. "Mother" and the Guardian Lady never lost hope in him. He was thoroughly honest, always owned up when he had got into a scrape, and sometimes he really did try hard to please them.

Then the time came (all too soon for a cottage boy) for Sam to earn his living. He never settled long at any work, outdoor or indoor, as gardener's boy, grocer's boy, stable-boy or groom. One day he disappeared. Some weeks after his distressed and anxious "mother" showed the Guardian Lady a big foreign post-card. Sam had enlisted in the army, and was far away in India. From time to time there came some such word as, "I am well, and am doing better." "Mother" began to be happier about him, though she missed him badly.

Just before last Christmas the Guardian Lady was working in her garden, when there came up the front path, bending his head under the apple-trees, a tall fellow in khaki with a ruddy face, brown eyes, and golden brown hair under his service cap.

"Do you remember Sam Johnson?" the visitor asked. "Our regiment was sent from India to Belgium. It's now in France. I've four days' leave from the Front, and have come to see mother and you."

Then how the Guardian Lady welcomed him, and what a long talk they had about old times, and India, and the war that had made all that happened before it seem so precious, and strangely long ago.

"The sight of them homeless French and Belgians, and the talk of the other chaps when we got our furlough, drew me home," the young fellow said, as his first shyness wore off.

"But you were a very naughty boy, Sam, when you lived at home," said the Guardian Lady.

"Yes, I've been sorry many a time, but some day I'll make up for it. Serving in the army has made a man of me." He said this last with much force and a gleam in his brown eyes.

The Guardian Lady knew what he meant. He had learnt as a soldier what every one must learn in one way or another, sooner or later, in order to make the best use of life. He had learnt to command himself strictly, to obey promptly, to do his duty unflinchingly, and to stick to his job courageously, whether he liked it or not.

And now he was helping in the biggest job that any one or any nation had had to tackle for a long time. His Guardian Lady rejoiced to hear him talk of this terrible war, not merely as a soldier paid to fight, but as a young man who understood in his simple way what we hope victory for the British Empire and our Allies will mean—a better and a happier world. She knew, without his saying so, that he was ready to do a full share of sacrifice in winning that victory.

The last his Guardian Lady saw of Sam was a happy grateful smile, and a cheery wave of a hand holding her parcel of khaki mittens, as he disappeared down the lane to his mother's cottage.

She had one letter from him from the fighting line, somewhere in France. Then a New Year parcel she sent him with a pipe-lighter, and other soldier's comforts, was returned to her through the Field Post Office. Private Sam Johnson had been severely wounded and had died of his wounds.

He had indeed "made up for it." Both "mother" and the Guardian Lady felt in their sorrow a joyful pride that he had repaid to the utmost all that his home and country had bestowed on him. In God's good time the "not wanted little 'un" had been wanted for the greatest deed a man or woman can do, the laying down of life for others in a good cause. E. H. S.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

20TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4,197	9	5
Prof. Courtney Kenny	—	50	0 0
Compayne Gardens Belgian Hostel Fund (weekly donation)	1	5	0
Mrs. Austin	1	0	0
Mr. W. Vickery	2	2	0
Miss K. (Hull)	3	0	0
Mrs. T. Fielding Johnson (Leicester)	5	0	0
The Misses Brock (Exeter)	2	2	0

	£	s.	d.
A Friend	0	10	0
Anon.	5	0	0
Mr. J. C. Hollins (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. S. Hollins (third donation)	5	0	0
Miss F. Braham	1	0	0
Mr. Charles Isaacs (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. A. Kitson, from Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds (second donation)	2	12	0
M. F. G. (second donation)	2	0	0
Mr. A. J. White	0	10	0
B. M. P.	1	0	0
Mr. W. H. Hall	10	0	0
Mrs. H. C. Beasley	0	10	0
Mrs. H. W. Ellis	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Byng Kenrick (second donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winser (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Arthur Taylor	0	10	0
Mrs. Wm. Tangye (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. John Dendy (third donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Hincks (third donation)	3	0	0
The Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne (Collection on May 16)	13	13	0
The Rev. P. H. Wicksteed	1	1	0
Miss S. J. Gregg (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Edith C. Harvey (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Higgin	5	0	0
Mr. J. H. Swann (second donation)	1	0	0
X. (fifth donation)	1	1	0
R. H. C. M.	2	0	0
Miss A. Whitfield (second donation)	1	1	0
Wimbledon Unitarian Church, per Mr. W. N. Martin (third donation)	1	7	10
Miss N. Wilde—proceeds of a performance of her play at Brighton	14	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. A. A. Cook—second contribution from the Sladefield Road School, Birmingham	1	2	0
	£4,374	8	3

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. Piggott; Mrs. Titterton; All Soul's Church Ladies' Society, Belfast; Anon.; Miss Waterall; Mrs. S. A. Notcutt; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); the Misses Wetherman; Park Street Church Sewing Society, Hull (per Mrs. E. Wilkinson); Miss E. S. Hollins; Mrs. Garnett; Friends at Ullet Road, Liverpool (per Mrs. Odgers); Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Ladies of Dunham Road, Altrincham (per Mrs. Agate); Mrs. J. M. Bass; Mrs. Beard; Mrs. Baily; Stourbridge Unitarian Chapel Women's Society (per Mrs. G. H. Evers); Miss Shannon; "Two Friends"; Miss Short; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Miss H. Bartram, the County Secondary School, Plumstead.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday, May 26, at 10.30. The President, Mr. J. F. L. Brunner, M.P., was in the chair.

The Financial Statement was presented by the Hon. Treasurer (Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke), who explained that much economy had been effected during the past year by carefully cutting down the work. The receipts were £6,015, a net decrease of £179 compared with the previous year, chiefly in the Van Mission income, while the expenditure amounted to £5,728, a decrease of £249 compared with 1913, chiefly in Home and Van Mission Work. The unexpected balance is, of course, largely accounted for by the fact that owing to the outbreak of the war it has been impossible to carry on the work of the Van Mission, or to put in operation some new missionary enterprises which had been planned for the late autumn, and must now be postponed till a more favourable opportunity. The Association Sunday Collections, amounting to £527, show a decrease of £43, which is also to be attributed to the war. It is impossible to forecast the financial position of the Association at the end of the present year, but it is obvious that the useful work which is being so energetically carried on will not achieve the fullest results unless continued and increasing support is given in the matter of finances.

The Annual Report was presented by the Secretary, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, and taken as read. It covers a wide field of work in all parts of the world, details of which have appeared from time to time in our columns. Mention is, of course, made of the tragedy of war which has befallen Europe, and of the splendid response which has been made by the churches and associations all over the country connected with the Unitarian body to the claims of suffering humanity in this crisis. Although many hopes and ideals deeply cherished by men and women of the liberal faith have been temporarily obscured, the same energy which has been hitherto devoted to the cause of peace and the enlightenment of public opinion has been utilised in efforts to heal and save, and not least among the activities recorded in these pages has been the organisation for helping "alien enemies" associated with the liberal religious movement on the Continent of Europe who were placed in a position of great difficulty at the beginning of hostilities.

The President moved the adoption of the reports, seconded by Mrs. Herbert Smith, in place of Dr. Herbert Smith, who made special reference to the loss the Association had sustained by the death of Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence.

Sir W. B. Bowring moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Brunner for the services rendered by him during the past year, coupled with the proposal that he should be appointed to the office of President for another year. They were, he said, in very difficult waters, and it was most desirable that they should make no change at the present time, but that they should retain those officers who had served them so well in the past.

The Rev. T. Arthur Thomas, Llandyssul, in seconding the resolution, said that a special welcome awaited Mr. Brunner when he could find time to visit Wales, as they hoped he would do in his second year of office. He thought they would all agree that the work of the Government could hardly be carried on at the present time without the help which had come from Wales, and the work of the churches could not be carried on either, as it was being carried on, without the help of men hailing from that country. The resolution was carried with acclamation.

Mr. Brunner responded, and expressed his willingness to retain the office of President for another year. The war had curtailed all their activities considerably, and he certainly felt that he had not been able to do as much as other Presidents had contrived to do during his one year of office. For this reason he was glad that he would have further opportunities of serving the Association, and he could assure Mr. Thomas that he would be glad to visit Wales, to which he was attached by personal ties, and particularly as a result of his long friendship with the late Mr. Tom Ellis. He now moved that the thanks of the members of the Association be given to the Council, the officers, and the Committee for their services during the past year, and that they be re-elected. At the same time he paid a warm tribute to the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who had worked so unremittingly as Chairman of Committee. The Rev. William Jellie, of Southport, in seconding the resolution, said he would like to voice one small regret. He failed to see the names of any of the younger ministers who have risen up during the past 10 or 15 years, and he thought that if some means were provided by which these younger ministers could be brought into the councils of the Association it would do them a great deal of good, and train them in the larger statesmanship of the central body.

Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., proposed the fourth resolution:—"That the Association offers to brethren in the faith of true spiritual religion and universal tolerance its genuine sympathy and best wishes in these troubled times, and trusts that all those of us who believe in the coming of the Kingdom of God and the Reign of Peace may find ourselves before long reunited as hitherto in the promotion of the old faith in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man." In normal times, he said, it was natural that they should feel themselves allied to isolated seekers after truth in all parts of the world, but these were not normal times, and they were cut off from many with whom they formerly had sympathetic relations. It was now considered a crime not to have been born of our own nationality, and a disastrous gospel of hate was being preached, not only in Germany, but in our own country, from which, however, that resolution entirely dissociated those he was addressing. Even in peaceful times the adherents of the liberal faith often met with a great deal of discouragement, and never were they faced with such difficulties as at the present time, when a German professor, feeling bound to condemn his Government for the invasion of Belgium, had to end up by protesting that, in doing so, he did not love his country less than those who upheld this action. Referring to the recent outburst against England of Prof. Eucken, who had spoken to them from that platform only two years ago, Mr. Chancellor said he asked himself, does war really alter the nature of men? Has that great prophet ceased to be a great prophet because circumstances have given him a new point of view? Would it be possible for them presently, when all this welter of bloodshed has ended, to resume the old relations, to realise once more that our enemies as well as ourselves were children of the same Father? He hoped that, while they could not avoid this war, they would carry in their hearts none of that hatred which was preached by some, nor cry out for vengeance against those who still belonged to the great human family. Patriotism ought not to be a narrow, exclusive nationalism, and even in times of war they must not lose sight of the fact that truth and brotherhood are universal, and that whilst they loved their country intensely they could extend that feeling to other nationalities, even to those with which they were, at present, at war. At least they must see to it that influences were brought to bear to soften the asperities of war and discourage all attempts at reprisals, so that it might be possible to make a peace based on justice.

Dr. Tudor Jones said that Mr. Chancellor had touched the root of the problem. Our first task was to better the temper of our own people. The spirit that was growing up in our midst could only be productive of the worst results. They might depend upon it that there were large numbers of people in Germany at the present time who were quite as averse to the war as themselves, and when, during the first six months of the war, the organ of the German Peace Movement still continued to reach him, he was amazed at the outspokenness of the contributors. Instead of hatred, then, they must try to possess the spirit which creates, which is good for every one who carries a human face, and it is the denomination capable of appreciating that principle most fully that will have the greatest influence in the future. They were really involved in a battle between a national ethic and an international ethic, and it seemed to be a necessary step in the spiritual evolution of the world, a stage which had not been reached before. They did not yet know how to combine that which was best for themselves as a nation with that which was best for all the nations of the world, though they had solved the problem in a measure in regard to the relation of the individual to the country as a whole. They had now to learn that nations will not suffer by taking into account the good of other peoples, and the fact that Germany does not as yet see this cannot prevent us from acting in accordance with it. He could not but believe that this great delusion of the German people, which he had seen coming on for twenty years, would soon pass away, for it was but a delusion, and there were present in the hearts of those men and women still, though obscured for the moment, the same yearnings that were in our own hearts. They would find themselves in the future working for the principles they had hitherto held in common. The spiritual ethic of which he had spoken would grow, not as the result of blessings from God showered on them from outside like rain, but as the result of the collective thought of all noble men and women.

Mr. Arnold Lupton added a few words, expressing his sense of the incompatibility of Christianity and the attitude towards life adopted by the majority of people, especially in a time of war, and asked, was it not within the power of the learned men who gave their lives to religion to devise an ethic which should win the belief of the world, and which they could carry out?

Resolutions of thanks to various congregations which have made collections, to the local treasurers for their efforts in obtaining subscriptions, to the Rev. V. D. Davis, the preacher of the anniversary sermon, and to the congregation at Essex Church and the friends in London who have extended hospitality to Ministers and delegates, were submitted by the President and carried. A warm welcome in the name of the Association was also given to the thirteen ministers who have entered upon their duties since the last Annual Meeting, and to the Revs. G. S. Hitchcock (Chatham) and H. H. Johnson (Evesham) who have re-entered the ministry of our churches.

A Conference followed on the Association's work in the course of which Mrs. Wooding spoke on "The Mission of the Printed Word," and dealt with the new publications already issued or in preparation; the Rev. C. Hargrove on "Colonial and Foreign Work: Its Claim upon us at Home," and Mr. Ronald P. Jones on "New Methods to Meet Changed Conditions in Home Work." The Revs. W. Jellie, Alfred Hall, Morley Mills, Leslie Smith, Mr. Lupton and Dr. Mellor took part in the discussion. Dr. Odgers, of Oxford, informed the meeting that Mr. Kisch, the Hungarian student at Manchester College, had been interned, and suggested that it would be a very good thing if the Home Secretary could be urged to permit him to return to his studies. The Rev. C. J. Street seconded, and Mr. Brunner promised that he and Mr. Chancellor would take notice of the matter.

BRITISH LEAGUE OF UNITARIAN AND OTHER LIBERAL CHRISTIAN WOMEN. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Annual Meeting of the League was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday, May 28th, at 3 o'clock, Mrs. Blake Odgers, President, in the chair. The minutes were read by Miss V. Preston and Miss Brooke Herford presented the report, which is of exceptional interest this year owing to the numerous ways in which organisations for the relief of suffering connected with the war have been helped by the efforts of the members, and the very useful international work which has been carried on by the Correspondence Agency or Bureau started in September, which has been referred to in detail in previous issues of THE INQUIRER. In spite of international differences and separations the services of the Union have been noted and appreciated, for the American Alliance sent a gift of £2 in addition to its yearly fee of 10s., and the German affiliated society paid up its annual dues promptly and cheerfully. A generous gift of £72 11s. 2d. was received from the American Women's Alliance, contributed by a large number of branches for the relief of distress arising from the war, of which £5 was earmarked for Belgian relief, and £27 7s. 3d. for the special relief of Belgians in Holland.

Mrs. Sydney Martineau presented the financial report, which showed that they had not got into debt at a time when probably few societies, depending upon voluntary subscriptions, were able to pay their way.

Miss Mitchell dealt with the Fellowship work, which has been developing rapidly, and is drawing closer the bonds between the League members at home, and those in distant parts of the British Empire. Arrangements have been made for getting into touch with members of the Canadian Churches now on active service with the Overseas contingents, and the League also hopes to be able to show the same friendliness to our men with Australian or New Zealand contingents. Already several names have been received from Adelaide, South Australia.

Mrs. Baart de la Faille gave a short account of the activities of the Anglo-Dutch Agency. This has had to put aside some of its work owing to the war, which has prevented many young strangers from Holland from coming over to England.

Mrs. Blake Odgers, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the women of our churches had taken their share in every kind of war-work during the past ten months. The first of the objects they had set before them as a League had been carried out; and their branches were beginning to be recognised as local bodies of women who could be relied upon to do any work of citizenship that was necessary. Their efforts in some directions had been stopped, but it seemed as though their international work might bear good fruit in the future, and the promptness with which the affiliated society in Germany had sent in its annual fee was like a ray of light in the darkness which surrounded them at the present time.

Miss Clephan, in supporting the resolution, said that the work of the League had been co-ordinated in a way which would have been impossible five years ago. The branches had learnt business methods, and were putting their knowledge to good use. There were two special pieces of work that touched their home life in which they could join with eagerness at the present time, the support of temperance measures and the development of spiritual and human fellowship. Never before had they realised how important it was to have temperance in their midst, and many of them felt that it was now their business to talk about and instigate temperance legislation—indeed, in very few towns where women were working have they left this work alone. As for the efforts which were being made to get into touch with desolate hearts everywhere, and send their spirit out to distant countries where the same gnawing anxiety which we all suffered from was equally felt, that was a beautiful form of activity.

Short reports were read by Miss Buckley, secretary of the Leeds District League, Miss Storrs, Manchester District, and Mrs. Laycock, Sheffield District. Mrs. Haigh, Liverpool District, was unable to be present.

The following resolution was moved from the chair, seconded by Mrs. J. Classon Drummond, and carried:—“That at this annual meeting of the British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian women we send hearty greetings and messages of goodwill to our sister branches Overseas. We feel that never have the bonds of sympathy and understanding been so close and strong as they are now, and we are glad to work through our Fellowship section for even closer co-operation and mutual helpfulness.”

The election of officers for the ensuing year was moved by Mrs. Bartram, seconded by Mrs. Robert Blake, and carried. Two new members have been added to the committee—Miss H. Hargrove, and Mrs. Ernest Jones.

Mrs. Bernard Allen gave a few fresh details about THE INQUIRER Belgian Hospitals Fund, which she is administering with such signal success, warmly thanking the League members for the support which they have given her.

A paper on ‘The Dweller in the Innermost,’ marked by a devotional spirit which deepened the general sense of the seriousness of the times, and the need of that inward peace by which the energies of the soul are reinforced, was read by Mrs. Collins Odgers. The ideas which she put forth had been largely suggested by Watt's famous picture, a copy of which had been placed on the wall, and she showed in a lucid and earnest manner how necessary it was—now more than at any other time that they could remember—that they should seek opportunities for withdrawal into the sanctuary of silence, and there, filled with the consciousness of God, seek for divine guidance in all the work to which they had set their hands. They had been brought face to face with the deepest realities, the barriers were down which divided this life from the next, and unless they sought for spiritual renewal they would be unable to strengthen the waverers, and give out the sympathy that was demanded of them on every side. They must hold fast, in spite of everything, to their belief that God is, that he is love, that man is a free agent, and that we must not charge God with our misuse of that freedom. But this cannot be achieved all at once. The dweller in the innermost was not born there: she reached her sanctuary, and for us there must be strict discipline, a letting go of many things which were but impedimenta on the soul's journey; a desire, not only to receive religious blessings, but to give them. To many the quiet form of worship in a Friends' Meeting House would be barren; to those who have felt its uplifting influence the silence is penetrative and pregnant with life. This is the secret which the dweller in the innermost has found. Like Martha, however, busy with the necessary and practical duties, we are apt to forget it, and Mary's quiet waiting for the living words which fall from the Master's lips is crowded out. Thus the dweller in the innermost waits, and she is not listening for her own benefit alone. The fiery darts are there, for the conflict is not yet ended; but there is a star upon her forehead—the immortal hope that pierces the mystery of things, and will lead her into the light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

THE NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS.

The Annual Meetings of the National Unitarian Temperance Association were held at Essex Hall on Friday, May 28th.

BUSINESS MEETING.

The Business Meeting was held at 4 o'clock, Mrs. H. Shaen Solly (president) in the chair. In moving the adoption of the report she drew attention to the increase in the number of subscribers, but hoped that more Bands of Hope, &c., would affiliate with the Association. A successful “Essay” competition had taken place, and showed much earnestness and ability among the young writers. Mr. J. Bredall, F.R.G.S., who has long served as chairman of committee, was elected President for next year. The Rev. R. Newell, who has contributed temperance notes to the columns of Young Days, gave a short paper on his experiences in that connection. It was urged that ministers and laymen should give increased attention to this side of the Church's work.

PUBLIC MEETING.

In the evening a public meeting was held at 7.15, the President, Mrs. Shaen Solly, again occupying the chair. After prayer by the Rev. V. D. Davis, the Chairman said they had attended many earnest meetings of their Society since it first came into existence 22 years ago, but never had they needed the sense of spiritual consecration as urgently as they did to-night, when they met under the shadow of a terrible war on the issues of which their Empire depended. They had nothing between them and the awful fate of Belgium but the courageous young men who had gone out at the call of duty to fight for their country, and those whom their sufferings were keeping in safety at home must ask themselves, what were they doing to help those young men? What was England as a nation prepared to do for them? It was the truth to say that from the time they enlisted till they were in the trenches drink was their enemy. The practice of treating the soldiers was a great evil. In one instance the Mayor of a certain town through which transports were passing ordered all the public houses to be closed along the route, and so the general public armed themselves with bottles of whisky, which they handed to the troops as they passed. The effect which drink had had on the output of munitions was now well known, and this at a time when they were fighting the most cruel, unscrupulous, and also the most technically efficient nation in Europe. The Government had tried hard to deal drastically with this problem, but it had failed, and Ireland had struck the last blow by urging that its own losses would be too great if the measures proposed were carried out. Yet was it likely that any country would be ruined that with a firm hand put down its drink traffic? Since the sale of vodka was prohibited Russia had saved, as her bank deposits showed, 38 times as much as she had done in previous years, and in war-time, too, when expenditure had enormously increased. She ventured to think that it was not public opinion that had killed Mr. Lloyd George's proposals, but the Press and "the trade." Mazzini had said "always make a demand upon the people, and they will respond, but it must be a great demand," and she believed that if the people realised that the life of the country depended upon it, they would be willing to make the same sacrifice as their noble King.

MR. J. F. L. BRUNNER, M.P.

Mr. J. F. L. Brunner, M.P., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, proposed the following resolution:—"That this meeting, being deeply impressed by the moral and economic evils arising from the use of strong drink, which evils impair the national efficiency required during the present crisis, begs to assure the Government of its support in any steps it may take to secure national sobriety." He said he supposed everyone present had cherished dreams of social reform before the war. Most of those dreams would not now be fulfilled; in fact, it would take years, perhaps generations, to repair the ravages caused by the war. But he was far from asserting that they could not get some good out of the present crisis, and the prominence which had been given to the drink question was a good thing. Five years ago, after reading a medical book dealing with the drink question, he had himself determined to see what total abstinence would do for him, and the results had been so excellent that he intended to remain an abstainer. Now he found that many of his friends had determined to be teetotalers too, at least during the period of the war, and he hoped they would find it so beneficial that they would keep it up after the war. At one time a man had to almost apologise for not drinking; now it was the other way about, and those who drank were apologetic, as a result of the fact that public opinion had been suddenly awakened to the urgency of this matter. When they saw the coal ungot, munitions not made, and ships unloaded or not being repaired, when they needed it, largely through the ravages of drink, it brought the truth home to them. He was told recently by the captain of a mine-sweeping trawler that, although mine-sweeping is a dangerous occupation, 90 per cent. of his difficulties with the men were due to drink. Mr. Brunner added that he believed overwork was having a great deal to do with the increased tendency to drink, and overwork and drink were a fatal combination. Employers could not escape blame for this, for even in a time of stress like the present they should give their men consideration, and see that they did not go on overworking month after month. In regard to the Government proposals, with which they had to be content for the present, the experiments in State control which were about to be made in certain specified areas would be followed with great interest by temperance reformers. He believed that they would do good, and he hoped that they would lead to something permanent being done. The first part of the resolution referred to all time, and they would not wish to limit that part of it to the present war, or to seem to assume that it would not matter how much people drink after the war. Drink was a very costly thing, in this country, and it was estimated approximately that they spent 160 millions on alcohol. Of that about 40 millions went back to the Government in the shape of taxation, which would have to be raised in some way or other if the drink traffic did not exist, so that 120 millions was the cost to the country. When they realised how much less efficient the nation was on account of that expenditure it was not too much to multiply those figures by two. If they put the total cost at 200 millions a year they would be well within the mark. The Boer war cost about 250 millions, and during that war they spent more on drink than on the war. The present struggle was going to be fearfully costly, but he believed that if they could get rid of the drink traffic they would not feel the effects of it financially 10 years from now. He himself was strongly in favour of absolute prohibition for all minors. Medical evidence proved that if young people were brought up as total abstainers to the age of 21, or better still 25, they practically never became drunkards, and although they could not restrict the freedom of grown-up people in this country as was done under an autocracy, they would be within their rights, at least, in protecting children from the evils which they were not able to see clearly for themselves.

MR. J. W. PRATT, M.P.

Mr. J. W. Pratt, M.P., seconded the resolution. They were, he said, going through a time of terrible stress, but they could find some satisfaction in the thought that their total abstinence principles were standing the strain, and that they had nothing to be ashamed of in regard to the propaganda with which some of them had been associated for the greater part of their lives. All the good work which had been done by such societies as theirs in the past had made the country a little stronger than it would otherwise have been for the tasks which lay before it. They were now realising that that task could not be carried out by their fighting forces alone unless they had behind them the conscious and united efforts of every man and woman in the country. There was a duty of discipline for every member of the State, and they must be willing to submit themselves to that discipline. He believed it was the one weakness in the legislation introduced by the late Government that it did not seek to apply something general to the whole country. There was not a single community of men, and he spoke from wide experience, whose usefulness and efficiency were not lessened because some of them were addicted to strong drink. Speaking as a Scotchman he felt that the people of England had a very hard battle to fight. North of the Tweed they were a little further ahead. They had never recognised compensation, the publican's license to this day in Scotland is an annual certificate and nothing more, and in five years time they would, all being well, have the control of the drink traffic in their own hands. In the future they must be more economical of their resources. They had already been obliged to limit their household expenditure, and that process would have to go on. As Mr. Lloyd George had reminded them, the standard of living had been going up; now it would have to go down, though he hoped that would not apply to the poorest classes. There must be no waste, and above all there must be a very economical use of the child life of our country. Our children were never so much needed by the nation and the Empire as to-day, and if there was anything which was weakening or impoverishing them, it must be put aside. How many youths fell into temptation, not because it was the will of destiny—it was not the will of their Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish—but because the way was made easy for them on every hand. When they pressed these aspects on their Government they were acting as true patriots, thinking alike of the duty of to-day and the claims of to-morrow.

MR. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.

Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., laid particular stress on the deleterious effects of the rum ration which is served out to the troops. There is, at present, no alternative offered, though he had frequently asked for it in the House. After giving an interesting resumé of the attempts made in the direction of temperance legislation since the beginning of the war, and giving many instances which prove how powerfully "the trade" is entrenched in the country, he expressed his deep disappointment in regard to the fact that Parliament had not followed the King's example and banned alcohol from the House of Commons for the period of the war. It was not, he said, that the House of Commons was a drinking den; very little intoxicating liquor was, as a matter of fact, drunk there; but the force of example coming from this body of representatives of the people would have had an effect on all institutions throughout the country. In regard to the drinking in war areas, it was clear that it had greatly increased, though it was not to be attributed to one cause alone. In some cases men were working less time than usual for the same money; in other cases they had been working overtime month after month. One man whom he had spoken to at a meeting he was addressing at Woolwich in explaining that he was suffering from neuritis, said that he had been working 90 hours a week for several weeks. But why was it that men who were working less than usual were drinking? It was because they could not help it. Alcohol had got into their system and undermined their will power, and mere limitation of hours, though it might palliate, would never cure this evil. The only thing to do with such men was to take the drink from them altogether. In conclusion he made a strong appeal to members of Unitarian churches to give more attention than they had hitherto done to the question of temperance. Some of them had no Band of Hope in connection with them at all. Strong support must be given to the Government in its attempts to deal with the drink evil, for legislation cannot be brought about, or, if brought about, cannot be made effective if it is not backed up by enlightened public opinion.

Mr. Arnold Lupton proposed that the word "wise" should be inserted before the word "steps" in the resolution, but on the amendment being put to the meeting, it was not carried.

Mr. Hugh R. Rathbone, President of the National Conference, spoke of the beneficial results which, in Russia, had followed from the prohibition of vodka, and said that, a month or two ago, he had hoped that an occasion had arisen when this country would take the law into its own hands, and stand up against the drink traffic. He did not, however, like to say a single word against the Government for not having done this. He had been brought in contact with several members of the Cabinet recently, and the impression left on his mind was that they were a group of over-wrought men, burdened with a sense of their great responsibility and the knowledge of things which the general public could not possibly know. It was easy to understand that as the result of this terrible strain they may have flinched from the necessary determination to do what they might have done under other circumstances. He would add that, apart from this, the country gets the Government it deserves, and without effective backing the Government cannot act. There was the question of what sacrifices we should make individually in this matter at a time when the men of the country were offering themselves so heroically for their nation, and when the women were rising so nobly to the demands of the situation. He supposed it was hardly realised what an enormous amount of good had been done already by the women who were running clubs, and mixed clubs, on temperance lines. This necessity for self-sacrifice must be brought home to the congregations of their churches on every suitable occasion. The united action of every one at home would have an enormous psychical effect on our troops, and that they should be asked to give up what had been proved over and over again to be doing so much harm was surely not to demand very much from those who were not able to help in other ways.

The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman and other speakers.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Annual Meeting of the Central Postal Mission was held on Thursday afternoon at Essex Hall, Miss H. M. Johnson, of Liverpool, in the chair. Miss Florence Hill, Hon. Secretary, presented the report. In spite of the dark shadow of war, she said, the Postal Mission workers were receiving an increasing number of applications, and had done a great deal of good work. The report shows how sympathetically the difficulties of earnest inquirers whose faith has been shaken by the horrors of the war have been met. It has been considered advisable to circulate literature, setting forth the great affirmations of liberal religion, and these have, without doubt, been of great help to many in the present crisis. Interesting news comes from Mr. Richards of Maymyo, Burma, who has become an active member of the Mission, and gives all the time he can spare from his official duties in a government office to the work of spreading broader ideas in Burma. He has lately gathered together a group of enlightened Hindus, who have formed a Free Religious Association. Mr. Supalithan, an Indian resident, also in a Government office, is endeavouring to carry on a movement of a similar character at Rangoon, and Mr. Richards and he have lately had an opportunity of meeting and conferring together. In Jamaica the movement is progressing under the leadership of the Rev. Ethelred Brown, who recently had a plot of ground presented to him about two miles from Kingston, where the foundation stone has been laid of the first Unitarian Church in Jamaica. It is believed that there is only one other Unitarian Church for coloured people in the world. Signor Conte continues to publish his periodical, "La Riforma Italiana," with the co-operation of Don Romolo Murri and Prof. E. Vignola. Signor Benso, a well-known writer, edits the Woman's Page. The war has, of course, made Signor Conte's work very difficult, but his steadfast devotion to the ideal of religious reform is unswerving. Last summer he received much assistance from Mrs. Hackett, an American lady, resident in Florence, who is deeply interested in the movement. Appreciable progress has been made in Framlingham and Bedford owing to the efforts of Mr. W. H. Sands, the Suffolk Village Missionary. The little Sunday School has doubled its numbers, the attendances at the Sunday service is steadily increasing, and the Girl's and Men's Club have had an extremely successful season.

The President, Miss Tagart, spoke of the work in India, which, she pointed out, it was of special importance that they should encourage at the present time, when there was less distrust of English notions than is sometimes the case, though our liberal faith has to be presented to the Indians along lines that they can most easily assimilate. Signor Conte's work in Italy had won the support of all the principal universities, and was combined with the social and political activities which were so much neglected by the educated people. She hoped that, during the war, while so much of this work had to be abandoned, Signor Conte would be able to reach and bring comfort to many troubled souls in his country as the Postal Mission workers were doing in England.

Mr. Sands gave an encouraging account of the work of the Suffolk Village Mission, which was winning many earnest sympathisers in the agricultural districts where their field of endeavour lay, and where, if it was hard sometimes to undermine old prejudices, hearts were warm, and it was very easy to learn to love a class of men who had been too often forgotten by the world. The chapel, Mr. Sands added, had been renovated and made much more comfortable, and at the New Year's party about 70 people were present.

Miss Lake presented the financial report, and urged the necessity for increased subscriptions.

Miss Johnson, in moving the adoption of the reports, said they might well echo the words of Wesley, "all the world is my parish," for they had correspondents in so many countries. Their work was rather like a minister's, only they had not a congregation gathered together to hear their message, and they needed, like the minister, much love, sympathy, and patience. The present time is a testing time for religion such as has not been known in the memory of any of us, and only that religious faith which is founded upon the rock can stand. There was a special call just now for them to go out and help those whose beliefs were for the time being shattered, and who needed the guidance of strong, sympathetic souls to lead them back to God. The Rev. Lawrence Redfern seconded the resolution. They claimed to be a prophetic church, he said, and it was their aim, not merely to discern, but to proclaim the fundamental truths of religion, if need be, to stand alone in loyalty to them. The ideals of the church must sometimes come into conflict with the ideas of the world, but to judge things from the higher point of view did not mean that the church should be out of touch with the world. To see the vision was only half of their duty; it had to be carried out. Their two chief needs were vision and vigour, and the two were complementary to each other, though it sometimes happened that where you had a narrow and meagre vision, there you found great activity, as among the Evangelicals of an earlier day; and where you had clearer intellectual ideas and a wider outlook, there you found a tendency to coldness and complacency. Now we have reshaped and remoulded our religious ideals till we claim that we had got a faith that is true to life, but we have lost some of that deep earnestness and abounding enthusiasm which were so characteristic of our forefathers. The great and crying need of the times was that we should rise to their level of religious fervour, and act as if we believed the great truths we stood for.

The Rev. F. Hankinson moved that the officers and committee be elected, Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., seconding. The suggestion that a message of sympathy should be sent to friends in Hungary was put to the meeting by the chairman, seconded by Miss Hill, and carried. Miss M. Hammond and Mrs. Munford have been added to the committee.

Miss Helen L. Phillips, of Carlisle, opened the conference on "Unitarian Mission Work: Its Aims and Needs" in an earnest address which was ably supported by Mrs. Lucan Davies, but time did not permit of a discussion, and two short speeches by Mr. Anthony, of Sierra Leone, and Mr. Fanani, an Italian living in Tredegar, and deeply interested in the liberal religious movement there brought the proceedings to a close.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

A MEETING of the Committee was held at Dr. Williams's Library, London, on May 26th, when there were present: Mr. Hugh R. Rathbone (President), the Revs. D. Agate, Dr. Carpenter, R. N. Cross, Rudolf Davis, F. K. Freeston, H. Gow, A. Hall, C. Hargrove, W. W. C. Pope, L. Redfern, H. D. Roberts, C. Roper, A. L. Smith, H. S. Solly, C. J. Street, W. G. Tarrant, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, Joseph Wood, Mrs. Sydney Martineau, Messrs. Ronald P. Jones, W. Byng Kenrick, G. H. Leigh, J. Lewis, Ion Pritchard, Grosvenor Talbot, J. Harrop White, L. N. Williams, G. W. R. Wood and the Secretary (the Rev. James Harwood). Apologies for absence had been received from the Revs. H. E. Dowson, G. A. Payne, M. Rowe, G. J. Slipper, Messrs. J. Hall Brooks, F. W. Monks, J. C. Warren and J. Wigley.

Among much other business the following items of general interest were disposed of:—

An application from the Ilford Congregation to be placed on the Roll was granted, and a request from the Non-subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland to be included among the Societies which appoint a representative on the Committee was commended to the Conference.

It was agreed to endorse a recommendation to the Conference by the Ministerial Settlements Board authorising the Board in making recommendations to select from any names in the 'Essex Hall Year Book.'

The Special Committee on Public Worship submitted a supplement to their previous report. It was agreed to thank the Committee for their labours, and to commend their report and recommendations to the careful consideration of the Conference.

The date of the Triennial Meetings was changed from September 28th and 29th to October 26th, 27th and 28th, chiefly to suit the convenience of London friends, and the first draft of arrangements and the Committee's Triennial Report were agreed to.

The Committee will next meet in the latter part of September.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION COTTAGE HOME. AN APPEAL.

THE Rev. W. J. Piggott writes:—

"Our Country Cottage is in dire financial straits and Miss Martineau and I are gravely concerned upon the matter, since it is a very valuable branch of our mission work. May we then appeal for help through your columns from the charitable minded? Last year we accommodated 108 persons throughout the season, to the visible benefit of parents and children alike. The average cost of upkeep is from £40 to £42 per annum, and so far we have only realised half that amount. Hence we face the summer with a most serious deficit at a time when our books are filled with the names of deserving applicants. We appeal therefore for subscriptions to fill the places of those lost by death, and to enable us to carry on this excellent work. Gifts should be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, Miss Sarah E. Martineau of 122, King's Avenue, Clapham Park, S.W."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Ainsworth.—The Bi-Centenary of the Presbyterian Church was celebrated on May 15 and 16, the event being considered quite an important one in the history of the village. At the meeting on the Saturday, the Rev. Ottwell Binns, the Minister, presided, and one of the principal speakers was the Rev. A. Wood (Vicar of Ainsworth) who said his first word must be to express his appreciation at being asked, as Vicar of the parish Church, to be present at the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the founding of their chapel. Two hundred years was a long time in the history of any institution, and should not pass over without some sort of commemoration, especially when the institution is a place of worship associated with the village life in all its deepest and tender associations. It was a curious coincidence that this year was the 400th anniversary of the earliest mention he could find of a church on the moor. It was in the year 1515, which he thought was a coincidence worth mentioning, but probably there was one in existence before then. He did not forget that there was a time when there was no chapel on the moor, when they all met under one roof, and all worshipped together. One good thing he fully recognised, and he was glad to give his testimony to it, and that was those events which culminated in the passing of the Act of Uniformity in 1662, and the establishing or setting up of dissent as a separate organisation from the Established Church. It was part of that great struggle for freedom, that great struggle in which men fought for freedom of conscience, the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, which he believed was the beginning of that freedom which was their greatest national heritage. There was then a good deal of the spirit now seen in Germany to-day. People wanted to place their culture on everybody else, and he ventured to say his presence that night, and the fact that they had invited him, was some little testimony to the fact that they had moved forward. He did not expect the time would come when they would worship again as one united people under the same roof; but he did think that, at least, they would learn that there were greater things than mere acts of outward conformity, and greater things they could unite in striving to bring about. The Rev. J. J. Wright, Chairman of the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, said that a party of ten had come from Chowbent to congratulate them on that occasion, but as a matter of fact, Chowbent was the elder brother, as they could go back to 1645. He appealed to the young to feel proud of their school and chapel, and prouder still of all they stood for, and to try and be worthy of the things that had been handed down to them making for everything that was reverent, and religious. The Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans said the Vicar had given the keynote to the meeting and to the war music that was going on. There were times of danger and distress when conformity and uniformity were the only things to practice. They should work together, so that ultimately they would once more further develop their individuality, as they had a right to do according to their consciences, and because they believed that God did not squeeze every one of his creatures into the same mould, shape, and size. A few words were added by other speakers, and a musical programme followed. On Sunday the preacher at the morning and evening services was the Rev. J. Cyril Flower of Bolton.

Belfast.—The death of Mrs. John Allen, who had had a life-long connection with the Mountpottinger congregation, first in the Sunday Schools, and then in the church, is much regretted by all who knew her. Although within recent times ill-health had made it impossible for Mrs. Allen to be as active as formerly, she took a keen interest in the Church and all that pertained to it, and her loss will be much felt. The funeral took place on Monday, May 3, at Moneyrea, when the Rev. W. Watkins conducted the service.

Birmingham, Waverley Road Church.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services were held at the above church last Sunday, when the Rev. Gertrude von Petzold, M.A., preached to large congregations. A Vestry Meeting took place after the evening service when the Church Committee unanimously passed the following resolution:—

Resolved: That this Committee respectfully petition the Home Secretary to grant naturalisation papers to their minister, the Rev. Gertrude von Petzold, M.A., at the earliest opportunity.

Miss von Petzold has lived eighteen years in this country, is a graduate of a British University, and has been a duly accredited minister in England for nine years. Moreover, it is owing to a pure mischance that she is not yet naturalised, as her papers were for the first time sent into the Home Office in 1908, but were held over on account of a temporary appointment in the United States intervening. On her return, Miss von Petzold, under the erroneous impression that she would have to qualify by another five years' residence, did not apply again for naturalisation until last autumn.

Her papers have been signed by a Privy Councillor and Freeman of the City of Birmingham, a City Councillor, a Justice of the Peace, and the Mayor of Leicester, a member of her former congregation.

We wish to express our unwavering confidence in her character and work, as well as our firm conviction that her naturalisation papers ought not only to be granted as a common act of justice, but that both the interests of our church and district with the public weal of which our minister has always most loyally identified herself, make an immediate compliance with our request both expedient and necessary.

We would also like to include in this resolution Miss von Petzold's friend and helper, Miss Rosa Widmann, who has lived twenty-four years in this country, and for whose character and personality we are able to vouch.

Dromore.—The Unitarian Church has lost by death three earnest and devoted members in Mr. Samuel Creighton, for many years a member of Committee; Mr. James Spence, and Mr. Henry Dickson Sprott, Senior Elder of the Church, Secretary and Treasurer of the Sunday School. Speaking at the Memorial Service the Minister, the Rev. Alfred Davison, made special reference to the simplicity and sincerity of character which distinguished Mr.

Sprott who, for ten years, had been Secretary of the church, and whom he had known personally for a period of fourteen years.

Dundee.—At a well-attended Social Gathering in the Foresters' Hall on Wednesday May 26, a presentation was made to the Rev. H. Dawtrey, Minister of the Free Religious Movement in Dundee, by Mr. J. F. Croal, to mark the occasion of his recent marriage. Further gifts were also presented to Mrs. Dawtrey from the Ladies' Guild by Mrs. Keay, and a warm welcome was given to her on behalf of the congregation by Mr. Alex. Anderson, Mr. John Cameron, Mr. Alex. Keir, and Mr. David Gibb. Mr. Dawtrey, in replying, expressed the hope that the spirit of friendship and goodwill animating the members might continue to unite them, and the movement for spiritual fellowship and social health go on with fresh vigour and enthusiasm.

Evesham.—The time honoured Annual Gathering of Ministers of Unitarian Churches in Worcestershire and adjoining Counties took place at Oat Street Chapel on May 19th. A Religious Service was held at 12.15, when the preacher was the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, who preached on 'The Joy of Worship.' Some excellent speeches were made at the luncheon, over which Dr. A. H. Martin presided. Dr. J. E. Odgers spoke to the toast of Civil and Religious Liberty, and among the other speakers were Mr. Geoffrey New (Chairman of the Congregation), the Rev. Rudolf Davis (former Minister of Oat Street), the Revs. J. A. Shaw, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, J. E. Stronge, and H. H. Johnson, the present Minister. After luncheon, at the kind invitation of Mrs. A. H. Martin all made their way to the lovely old-world garden which adjoins the chapel, where tea was served later.

London, Stratford.—We regret to learn that Mr. B. B. Maguire, only son of Mr. Benjamin Maguire of Stratford, was killed in action while assisting in the capture of German trenches on May 25.

Manchester Whit Sunday Festival.—This established and always imposing gathering took place this year in specially interesting circumstances. It has been usual to hold it in the great Free Trade Hall, but owing to exigencies arising out of the war, it was held on Sunday last at the Cross Street Chapel, and it was generally felt that the venerable building, with its multitude of appealing associations, was the fitting setting of the Festival. Both the body and the galleries of the chapel were filled by scholars, teachers, and friends, in all about 1,450. The preacher was the Rev. J. Cyril Flower, M.A., of Bolton.

South Wales Advisory Committee.—The Rev. David Harries, formerly Congregational Minister at Machen, having satisfied the above Committee, has been granted the usual certificate for admission into the ministry.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A QUAKER HOSPITAL IN FRANCE.

At Chalons-sur-Marne, a town lying in the centre of the firing line, some nine or ten doctors belonging to the Society of Friends are saving valuable lives for France at the maternity hospital which they are working under the Service de Santé Militaire. A writer in The Daily Chronicle recently gave a sympathetic account of their organisation, which is directed by a woman doctor, and provides shelter and medical attendance for poor mothers, many of whom have been driven from their devastated homes by the cruel mischance of war. The hospital is about two miles on the road to Suippes, and the windows are periodically shaken with the firing in the trenches beyond, while all day long a procession of transport wagons and ambulances carrying the wounded and dead go by; but peace and comfort reign in the wards, which are high and well lighted. Two English nurses, also belonging to the Society, visit the refugees daily in the town of Chalons, giving what help they can, and recommending those who should go to the hospital.

THE BELGIANS IN MALINES.

The National Committee for Relief in Belgium has received word from a correspondent that in Malines, out of a population of 45,000, no less than 30,000 are absolutely destitute, and line up every day outside the eight soup kitchens established by Cardinal Mercier to keep them alive. Three milk kitchens supply the mothers of very small babies with a special milk and rice soup. The patience and persevering spirit of the people is wonderful, in spite of the fact that there is every prospect of things going worse with them when the invaders begin to retreat. Malines was only taken after six bombardments, but every effort is being made to bring order out of chaos. The bricks of the destroyed houses have been cleaned and prepared for use again, ruins are being cleared away, and sewing schools have been started to give employment to girls without work. Donkeys, dogs, and even sheep are impressed to take the place of the vanished horse, and sometimes a dog and a sheep may be seen harnessed, side by side, pulling a load for a farmer preparing his potato field or garden.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.
 Annual Income £3,466,000
 Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000
 Additional Representatives wanted.
 F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
 G. SHRUBSALL, }

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
 No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
 (Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.
 Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
 LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.
 Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.
 Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.
 Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.
 Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.
 HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Winter Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

CLIFTONVILLE.—BOARD RESIDENCE. Mrs. J. H. S. COOPER, "Seacroft," Norfolk Road, Cliftonville, Margate, recommended by many friends at Highgate Church. Terms on application.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BROADSTAIRS.—A PAYING GUEST. Moderate terms.—Mrs. TOWNLEY, 15, Lloyd Road, Broadstairs.

TO LET, in JULY, at Royston, Herts, opposite Golf Course and the Heath, unfurnished, a house known as WEST COTTAGE. Three acres of garden and pasture, two sitting-rooms and hall, three bedrooms, dressing-room, bath-room, servant's-room. Stands well back from road. Ten minutes to station. Rent 70l. per annum.—Apply P. H. GRUNDY, The Old Palace, Royston, Herts.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD LINEN. Hemstitched Cotton Pillow Cases, size 18 by 23 inches, bundle of four, 2s. 11d.; postage 4d.; Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 5, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3806.
NEW SERIES, No. 909.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OXFORD.

THE ANNUAL PROCEEDINGS in connection with the CLOSING OF THE SESSION will take place at the COLLEGE on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, JUNE 17 and 18.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of TRUSTEES will be held at 11 o'clock a.m. on FRIDAY, JUNE 18.

THE VISITOR'S ADDRESS will be given by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED at 3.30 o'clock p.m. on THURSDAY, JUNE 17.

A VALEDICTORY RELIGIOUS SERVICE will be held in the COLLEGE CHAPEL at 8 o'clock p.m. on THURSDAY, JUNE 17.

The FAREWELL On behalf of the COLLEGE will be given by the Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., D.D. and the WELCOME into the MINISTRY by the Rev. E. I. FRIPP, B.A.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A.,
1, St. James' Square,
Manchester. } Hon.
Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A., } Secs.
12, Glenloch Road,
Hampstead, London, N.W.

THE ATHENÆUM

For Saturday, June 12th (No. 4572),
Includes Reviews of

LESSONS OF THE WAR.
QUAKER WOMEN, 1650-1690.
VIEWS OF MR. SHAW.
VAUGHAN AND HERRICK.
A GRAMMAR OF KISWAHILI.
THE LIFE-HISTORY OF OUR GLOBE.
TOWARDS RACIAL HEALTH.
LITHOGRAPHY AND LITHOGRAPHERS.

FICTION—The House of Many Mirrors. The Jealous Goddess. Conquest. The Persistent Lovers. Lena Hale. Journeys with Jerry the Jarvey. Lord Quare's Visitor. Minnie's Bishop.

J. EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.; and of all Newsagents.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen. Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Now Ready for June.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS:—
John Pounds and Ragged Schools.
John Howard and Prisons and Prisoners.
Joseph Priestley: Religious Teacher, Scientist, and Exile.
Dorothea Lynde Dix and the Care of Lunatics.
Junior Department—Lewis W. Lewis, M.A.
Senior Department—B.
REJOICING.—HAYMAKING.—UNSELFISHNESS.—ROOTS AND FRUITS.
Primary Department—Alice L. Colfox.
LESSONS ON THE WAR, X.-XII.—Catherine Gittins.
BY THE WAY.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June
13. Rev. RUDOLF DAVIS (of Gloucester).
20. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).
27. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON (late

July
4. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

The TRUSTEES of the WOOD FUND

Make Grants of Money during the College Training of Teachers
for Elementary Schools.

Forms of Application may be obtained on application to

CHARLES FENTON,
10, Vineyard Hill, Wimbledon,

Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION.

The Society offers to send a Popular Speaker free of charge to Literary Societies, League Meetings, &c. With regard to the Lecturer, the Secretary of a large Brotherhood said: "Mr. Reed did us very good service, and the men were delighted with his earnestness and ability."

22, Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut. - Col. Stephenson, Carnapore, India.

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS, B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, June 13.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7., Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. T. B. ROSEBY.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH; 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT AYRES.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTEE.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. C. SHERIDAN STEVENS.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. H. O. MONTAGUE.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. RUDOLF DAVIS.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. ODGERS, D.D.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 { DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. S. A. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN, M.A., B.D.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Mr. CHAS. BIGGINS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. JACKSON, B.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHBEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGES.

ODGERS-BREWERTON.—On the 10th inst., at St. Augustine's Church, Edgbaston, Birmingham, by the Rev. H. E. Metcalfe, Robert Blake Odgers (Captain A.S.C.T.F.), third son of Dr. and Mrs. Blake Odgers, of London, to Olive Asquith, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Brewerton, of 5, Montague Road, Edgbaston.

WOODS-EVERY.—On the 5th inst., at St. Anne's Church, Lewes, by the Rev. Duncan Pearce, M.A., Rector, F. W. Woods, M.A., Chaplain of H.M.S. Hibernia, to Jesse E. Every, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Every, of The Croft, Lewes.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY needs Useful Employment, War work or otherwise, large or small household. Is experienced manager of all domestic matters, understands secretarial work and also cooking of every description, could look after invalids.—Address R., 12 Hampstead Gardens, Finchley Road, Hendon.

A LADY requires a lady to help her nurse her mother. Age about 30, salary 25*l*. A light bath chair to push.—A. R., Inquirer Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	287	CORRESPONDENCE :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
THE NOTE OF DECISION	289	The Church and the Army	291	Belgian Hospital Fund	293
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	289	The Use of Gas as a Weapon	292	Dr. Drummond's Eightieth Birthday	294
ANOTHER VISIT TO THE BELGIAN HOSPITALS	290	FOR THE CHILDREN :—		Old Meeting House, Dudley	295
		England, My England	293	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	295
		MEMORIAL NOTICE :—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	296
		Mr. John Thornton	293

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE terrible sum of our casualties, which was announced in the House of Commons on Wednesday, should intensify the desire to support all the agencies of healing and help as generously as we can. In a dark world and in the midst of a struggle, in which there is no alternative except to go forward without flinching, it is one of the noblest and most practical of duties. It is therefore with special pleasure that we are able to publish another article from Mrs. Allen just at the moment when hearts are heavy and anxious. Her visit to the North of France last week was a very useful one from the point of view of the administration of our Belgian Hospital Fund, and was full of interesting experience. The benefits of our work were evident on every side, and the official acknowledgments which we have received should inspire all our contributors with confidence and gratitude. It is seldom that a small amateur effort blossoms so quickly into an agency of national importance and wins such complete official recognition. When Mrs. Allen was asked the other day how long our organisation has been in existence, and she replied, only since the end of January, she was met with an exclamation of astonishment, "And you have accomplished all this!"

* * *

THE one thing that the casualty lists must not be allowed to do is to encourage people to moan and shake their heads. We knew from the beginning that the cost would be terrible, but the price must not make us flinch. If freedom and the hard won victories of civilisation are at stake, as we have maintained from the beginning, we cannot draw back until we are overcome by the weariness of exhaustion, and that day is far off yet. We cannot begin to argue out the whole case again as we did at the beginning of the war. The resolution, which we took then in the piercing light of conscience remains our first duty still, and brave men and women will only grow braver under the lash of sorrow and anxiety, as they see that they must pay with their own suffering for every step on the long road that leads to victory.

* * *

THE new Cabinet has made its debut before the world in a series of debates and skirmishes in the House of Commons, and in three great speeches to the public, two by Mr. Lloyd George and one by Mr. Winston Churchill. Mr. Lloyd George's task as a speaker at the present moment is to stir the imagination of the business world and to organise the patriotism of the workers into a strong and effective force. The task is far from an easy one; it will tax all his resources of ingenuity and human sympathy, and his trained skill in managing men. No one knows better than he that it cannot be done simply by waving a formula-like "compulsory service" before the public eye. He must persuade rather than coerce if he is to secure the maximum of effort. But it is clear that the chaotic individualism of the industrial world is ill-suited to an emergency when the instinct of self-preservation demands that the whole nation shall unite in pursuing one common end. There must be organisation, the subordination of personal interests to those of the community, and willingness on the part of the worker to serve, not on his own terms, but where the need is greatest.

* * *

IN the world of thought, which lies behind our practical activity, the pressing need is to reach out towards a richer and more fruitful conception of freedom than the one which has been accepted, almost as the final word of wisdom by two or three generations of English life. Devotion to the liberty of the individual has produced many fearless and independent types of character in religion, politics and industry, but the teaching that every man is independent, that conscience works in a vacuum, and that it is the concern of nobody else what we think or do, has failed, and always must fail, to produce a rich and satisfying communal life which is capable of drawing to itself the enthusiastic loyalty of all its members. The discussion in the newspapers, one man asking for stiffer regulation and another jealous for personal freedom, is a sign that we have come to an end of an era in thought and action. We are beginning to use many of the phrases of political warfare and social discussion, which formerly won our enthusiastic approval, with an uneasy sense that they do not meet the needs of the moment or fit its deeper spiritual implications.

* * *

A VERY suggestive letter on this topic from the pen of Prof. C. H. Herford appeared in the Manchester Guardian last week. It is marked by his usual penetrating insight and his familiarity with what is best and most fruitful in German thought.

Freedom as we know and cherish it [he writes] is, after all, mainly a negative ideal; it bears the impress of the Revolution, of its revolt against privilege and oppression, of its disposition to treat the structural differences which impair the "equality" of individuals, classes, and nations as mere surface excrescences to be levelled away. It is simply a matter of history that while the French humanitarians were spreading "freedom" among the obliterated nationalities of Europe, and England in resistance was throwing herself back upon a half-abandoned Toryism, German thinkers were working out a positive and constructive conception of freedom which impressed itself deeply upon the German State, and is still recognisable amid the frightful perversions and oblivions of to-day. It is the freedom, to put it shortly, which instead of being diminished pari passu as control is increased is only effectually realised in and through control, which is won by discipline and sacrifice, which is not passively possessed like an heirloom, but earned by daily mastery of the daily task. Organisation does not diminish this kind of freedom; it enlarges it.

* * *

THE speech of Mr. Winston Churchill at Dundee should act as a tonic to all who are suffering from nerves and depression. It was a broad survey of the whole situation, coloured no doubt by some temperamental optimism, but based upon ample knowledge of the conditions over the entire field, and fired by the conviction that "to fail is to be enslaved, or, at the very best to be destroyed." But in the circumstances we admire him most for what he left unsaid. It was the speech of a true patriot. It is not easy for a clever and ambitious man to step down from one of the greatest offices in the State without a word of complaint or self-justification.

At Dundee Mr. Churchill simply forgot himself in devotion to the public good. The example will not be forgotten. It has raised him in the esteem of his countrymen and made him in his comparative retirement a more commanding figure than he was before.

* * *

WE are very sorry to hear that The Daily Citizen has fallen a victim to the financial stress of the war. It had surmounted the first precarious years of its existence in spite of the fact that it never sought to conciliate public favour and could expect no revenue from the more expensive and fashionable types of advertisement. All who know something of the difficulty of maintaining journalism of any kind without the entanglements of large commercial interests will congratulate it on its gallant struggle and hope that before long it will begin a fresh career. It is greatly to the public interest that it should do so. "It was most valuable," to quote the words of The Pall Mall Gazette, which we heartily endorse, "to those who stand outside the party, which it represented, for it presented public affairs from a point of view most difficult for them to attain. There will be a great need for such an organ after the war, and we hope it will revive."

* * *

THE controversy upon the duty of ministers of religion to serve in the army, which has taken fire in our columns, seems to be almost equally active elsewhere. It is an illustration of the way in which under the pressure of public needs the same problems spring to the surface in different minds. We do not in the least regret it, if we have helped to encourage a candid examination of the whole question. We need to guard against anything like a tame acquiescence in our ordinary habits of thought or conduct, and even ministers are not entirely exempt from devotion to their own grooves. There is always the possibility that adventurous and untried paths may be better for a man in the opening years of life, and make him more capable of kindling influence over his fellows later on, than the beaten track and the routine of professional duties. If anything we have written has had enough force in it to put that alternative before some young and ardent minds, we are more than content.

* * *

SOME misapprehension seems to have arisen about the decision of the Bishop of London not to accept candidates for ordination who are capable of serving for the war. We understood this to mean, and we believe that we are right, that he is averse to encouraging strong and healthy young men from beginning a special course of study in peaceful surroundings at the present moment. It does not mean a final closing of the door of the ministry upon any man, but at most a delay of a few months. The conscientious objector can find numerous openings for useful work without doing any violence to his convictions. In the wholly exceptional circumstances in which we are placed we see little in this policy to which reasonable men can take exception. Many of the best candidates have gone of their own accord, and it is at any rate open to argument that we ought to beware of imparting a special tone and temper to the future ministry by a process of artificial selection in their absence.

* * *

ON June 5 the new Danish Constitutional law received the Royal assent. In the Lower Chamber the formal third reading was carried unanimously. This law abolishes all the traditional privileges of sex, and puts men and women on precisely the same footing in regard to the franchise and the holding of money and land. Women may also be elected to both the legislative chambers. In celebration of the event the women students of the University of Copenhagen marched in a long procession to the royal palace to thank the King. Afterwards they proceeded to thank both Houses of Parliament for the sympathy and understanding with which the interests of women have been promoted.

* * *

FEW books of mark are being issued from the press at the present time. War literature rules the market, and much of it is quite ephemeral in its character. But all the time serious thinkers are at work and are doing a most useful service in guiding the mind of the nation. We have received this week from the Oxford University Press, 'The International Crisis in its Ethical and Psychological Aspects.' The contents consist of a series of lectures delivered in the early part of this year at Bedford College by Mrs. Sidgwick, Prof. Gilbert Murray, Dr. A. C. Bradley, Dr. L. P. Jacks, Prof. Stout and Dr. Bosanquet. Dr. Jacks's essay on 'The Changing Mind of a Nation at War' is one of the most brilliant contributions to the volume. It is written with all his customary vigour and at every point it forces the reader to think.

THE NOTE OF DECISION.

WE gather from hints and rumours which reach us that some people are a little perplexed, if not dismayed, at the tone of moral optimism and confident decision with which we write in these days of bitter strife. They would prefer a more chastened spirit and a constant note of warning against all the insidious evils of war and the military spirit. Possibly they picture us as so drugged and besotted with military ardour that we have lost all sense of proportion, and have grown quite blind to evils which we are quick to detect and condemn in ordinary days. Now, as a matter of fact, nothing could be further from the truth. The horror, the unspeakable misery of the war are before our eyes night and day. We have crossed the Channel and seen something of its menace to all that is fair and good at close quarters. We have read the Bryce Report and its appendix of evidence and, like others who have studied these ghastly documents, we know what it is to live in hell. But the challenge of a gigantic wrong has only confirmed our faith that we must throw the whole force of our national strength into the struggle to subdue it, not merely for the sake of our own safety, but in order to vindicate the claims of justice and pity and the austere law of right before the world. If the duty that is laid upon us has in it elements of horror before which the stoutest heart may quail, it is well for us, week by week, and day by day, to renew our confidence that in accepting the duty of our time and draining its cup of bitterness to the dregs we are not miserable accomplices in crime but the servants of public righteousness. This thought has been our own refuge in many a dark hour, and it is the chief aim of all that we write to impart some of its strength and glow to other hearts. As we face the facts, trying to hide nothing of the cost we have paid already and the heavy sacrifices which we have still to meet, nothing seems to be more incumbent upon those of us who have any part in shaping public opinion than hard and unceasing effort to infuse the quickening energy of sacrifice and stern decision and a good hope into the life of our people.

But our friends ask us to consider the cost, not only in terms of human suffering and death, but in the loss of ideals and of many causes which we hold dear. Ought we not to be anxious about them, and to do what we can to safeguard their interests? Let us remember that we are not nearly so sectional now as we were a short time ago. We see everything in a new perspective. It is quite likely that many societies and forms of association will disappear, and no effort of ours will avail to keep them alive. But need that trouble any of us who have learned to look beyond our party walls, and had a vision of the larger world, or felt the pressure of the hands of God that reach through darkness moulding men. We are all seething at the present moment in the mighty cauldron of history, and we know not what shall emerge. In such a situation the only wise course is to do the plain duty of to-day, to be reckless in courage, and not to be anxious for the morrow. When men are face to face with the ultimate issues of life and death it ill becomes them to let the possibilities of the future cripple them for the brave deed of to-day.

We have tried accordingly, to remove some of these elements of hesitation and fearfulness out of the way by a steady concentration of mind and heart upon the supreme issue. But this part of our message has been expressed in more stirring accents than we can command by a great popular writer. Perhaps there will be respect for the shade of Bret Harte in some quarters where the feeble voice of a contemporary observer of these things cannot prevail. In any case, in its testing of character and its elements of moral distress, the situation which the American poet had in view will be recognised as very similar to our own; and all the wisdom of the ages has provided no better remedy than the sharp summons to action and self-surrender which rings through his lines,

Hark! I hear the tramp of thousands,
And of armed men the hum,
Lo! a nation's hosts have gathered
Round the quick alarming drum,
Saying "Come,
Freemen, come!

Ere your heritage be wasted," said the quick alarming drum.

"Let me of my heart take counsel,
War is not of life the sum,
Who shall stay and reap the harvest
When the autumn days shall come?"
But the drum
Echoed, "Come!

Death shall reap the braver harvest," said the solemn-sounding drum.

"But when won the coming battle,
What of profit springs therefrom?
What if conquest, subjugation,
Even greater ills become?"
But the drum

Answered, "Come!

You must prove the sum to do it," said
the Yankee-answering drum.

"What if, 'mid the cannons' thunder,
Whistling shot and bursting bomb,
When my brothers fall around me,
Should my heart grow cold and numb?"
But the drum

Answered, "Come!

Better there in death united, than in life a recreant, Come!"

Thus they answered, hoping, fearing,
Some in faith, and doubting some,
Till a trumpet-voice proclaiming,
Said, "My chosen people, come!

Then the drum,

Lo! was dumb,

For the great heart of the nation, throbbing, answered, "Lord, we come!"

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

God be in my head,
And in my understanding;

God be in mine eyes,
And in my looking;

God be in my mouth,
And in my speaking;

God be in my heart,
And in my thinking;

God be at mine end,
And at my departing.

SARUM PRIMER (1558)

[A musical setting of these words by Dr. H. Walford Davies is published by Novello & Co., price 3d. It is used sometimes with beautiful effect in place of the usual Vesper at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham.]

IN that great war carried on against Louis XIV. for near eighteen years, Government spared no pains to satisfy the nation that they were to be animated by a desire of glory, glory was not their ultimate object; but that everything dear to them, in religion, in law, in liberty, everything which as freemen, as Englishmen, and as citizens of the great commonwealth of Christendom, they had at heart, was then at stake. This was to know the true art of gaining the affections and confidence of a high-minded people; this was to understand human nature. A danger to avert a danger—a present inconvenience and suffering to prevent a foreseen future, and a worse calamity—these are the motives that belong to an animal who, in his constitution, is at once adventurous and provident; circumspect and daring; whom his Creator has made, as the poet says, “of large discourse, looking before and after.” But never can a vehement and sustained spirit of fortitude be kindled in a people by a war of calculation. It has nothing that can keep the mind erect under the gusts of adversity. Even where men are willing, as sometimes they are, to barter their blood for lucre, to hazard their safety for the gratification of their avarice, the passion which animates them to that sort of conflict, like all the shortsighted passions, must see its objects distinct and near at hand. The passions of the lower order are hungry and impatient. Speculative plunder; contingent spoil; future, long adjourned, uncertain booty; pillage which must enrich a late posterity, and which possibly may not reach to posterity at all; these, for any length of time, will never support a mercenary war. The people are in the right. The calculation of profit in all such wars is false. On balancing the account of such wars, ten thousand hogsheads of sugar are purchased at ten thousand times their price. The blood of man should never be shed but to redeem the blood of man. It is well shed for our family, for our friends, for our God, for our country, for our kind. The rest is vanity; the rest is crime.

EDMUND BURKE.

O GOD, who art the author of love, and the lover of pure peace and affection, heal the diseases of all Christians who are sick, and let all who are terrified by fears, afflicted by poverty, harassed by tribulation, worn down by illness, given over to punishments, and all prisoners, and wayfarers, be set free by thine indulgent tenderness, raised up by amendment of life, and cherished by thy daily compassion. AMEN.

ANOTHER VISIT TO THE BELGIAN HOSPITALS.

I HAVE just spent a week among the Belgian military hospitals in North France, and have been able to renew my acquaintance with the doctors and nurses, and to see for myself what the needs are now and what they are likely to be in the near future. I had a very warm welcome wherever I went, as they all seemed to recognise that I was representing friends in England who wanted to help them. We had a very pleasant and friendly visit at the hospital in the Wesleyan Church, and doctors and nurses and orderlies all assisted in unpacking the case of instruments and other necessities. At the bottom we came to a large packet of stationery, and this delighted the nurse especially. “Only yesterday,” she said, “some of the men who had just come in asked me for paper to write to their friends, and I had not a sheet to give them. Now everybody can write who wants to do so.” The last thing to be produced was a parcel of 12 packs of playing cards. She held them up for the men to see—for the beds were all occupied and many eyes were watching us—and exclaimed “How good! You think not only of our necessities, but also of our amusements.” These parcels of playing cards are sent to us by a working men’s club, the members of which realise how dull it is for a man to have nothing to amuse himself, when he is well enough to be amused by a game.

One hospital which on our former visit was only for sick soldiers, now receives only wounded. This had been reported to us, and the French gentlemen who has organised it from the beginning, and lent the building, appealed to us for the necessary fittings for an operating theatre for minor operations. He told us that two lives had been lost for lack of it, as sudden complications had set in, and there was no time, nor strength in the patients, to carry them to the nearest operating theatre. We took out the necessary outfit and the whole staff assisted in setting up the table, a collapsible one which had to have all its parts fitted together, and their delight in it and all the array of shining new instruments was a great pleasure to see. They were so glad to feel that now the means were at hand to prevent any such further calamities as had already occurred. To another hospital, in response to an urgent appeal, we took a quantity of radiographic plates for X-ray work. The supply had run out and no more could be obtained out there for the moment, so we were able to supply the need from England. It was specially useful just then, as an English hospital has recently been established near by, and they have no radiographic apparatus yet. The Belgian radiographer at once put his laboratory at their disposal, and already some of our own men have had the advantage of this wonderful apparatus in locating the bullet or piece of shell before the operation of extracting it. The Belgian doctor evidently felt a special pleasure in being able to be of use to the English in this way.

At the convent of Sœurs Franciscaines the difference in the wards was very marked, as now every man has a full-sized bed and looks thoroughly comfortable. The sisters make the wards gay and cheerful with flowers and little decorations of all sorts, and there is a piano in each, as the place was formerly a girls’ school. So far there have never lacked performers among the patients, who are all officers, and, like most Belgians, devoted to music. The Mother Superior told me the sisters always remember and pray for us, and she is sure that “le bon Dieu” saw the straits they were in a few months ago and put it into our hearts to go to their aid.

The Eye Hospital in which we were so interested before has now moved from the fine building it was in (which is now an English hospital) and is housed in a large private house in a back street. It is not a change for the better, but the staff have done wonders in adapting it and all was very clean and well arranged, and there was no grumbling at the change. There are only 30 beds, but now they are all reserved for severe eye cases, and those needing only attention from day to day are housed in other hospitals elsewhere.

I had a very pleasant interview with the General in charge of the supervision of all the hospitals. A little while ago there was a great rush of wounded, medical stores were depleted, clothes cupboards emptied, and there was a great lack of all necessary things. Now, the General said, thanks to the work of the Fund, they were all equipped and prepared again for the next emergency whenever it may arise. “And,” he added, “when we return to Belgium, we shall be able to take all these instruments with us, for we shall find nothing left there for us, and so their use will be a blessing to us for many years.”

One of my objects in crossing the Channel this time was to meet Miss Fyfe and deliver to her the equipment which we are providing for her hospice for civilians at——. It would have taken too long to obtain from all the various authorities concerned a pass to go up to see her, so she came down in the motor-car we sent her, and we had a day to arrange matters. The hospice is in a convent building, and four nuns are looking after it excellently. There are 22 beds in two rooms, and the patients only stay a few days to regain strength and courage before starting on their journey west through France. I had taken out the beds and various hospital necessities, and we were able to get the kitchen things in the town, as only very simple things were needed; and finally Miss Fyfe returned with the largest military lorry that could be obtained piled to the top with beds, mattresses, bedclothes, and clothes of all sorts, and her own car full of the medical and kitchen things! Her maternity home is some miles from the hospice, and is generally full of mothers. Several of the bales she took up with her were specially for the babies, and contained cradles and milk foods beside the clothes.

Now to follow up the journey which the refugees from cellars and holes have to face. They are collected to the rail-head and sent by a slow and lengthy journey westwards. How they are received at ——— I described last week in a letter, but a further development has taken place. It will probably be necessary now to arrange for the care of those found suffering from genuine illness on arrival. Hitherto they have been sent on to the town hospital, but a new arrangement seems desirable. Before leaving I went into the question with the head of the Refuge, and promised that if such proves to be so, we will help in starting and keeping up a small hospital for such cases close to the Refuge and under the same management. The details will be settled next week.

The immense advantage of our fund, to my mind, is that it makes these and other developments immediately possible, when intimate knowledge of the conditions shows their need. I think we have already established a reputation for prompt and ready helpfulness, which is specially valuable in the eyes of those who have to meet emergencies on the spot. At the time of writing our store of shirts is very low. I should be very glad of more to be ready for the next consignment. They should be of thin flannel if possible, or "non-flam" flannelette. Mufflers, belts, mittens are not wanted now, but I fear will be next autumn again. I should be glad if friends will keep them till then as I have not much storage room. Bed linen, towels, handkerchiefs, socks are constantly wanted, and, most of all, money to buy instruments (for the more delicate little instruments do not last very long) and drugs (which are quickly consumed). One small department of our work always goes on steadily. I mean the supplying of medical requisites and dressings to Belgian doctors in the field. This week eight Red Cross satchels, each stored with all that is necessary for first dressings of the wounded on the field, are going out, in response to letters received from doctors or from authorised people in charge of ambulances. I think this piece of work is of special importance, as first attentions are often decisive in enabling the wounds to heal cleanly and quickly.

ROSE ALLEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE CHURCH AND THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I thank you for your powerful and convincing recruiting appeal to theological students and young ministers in THE INQUIRER. I am prepared to join His Majesty's Forces without delay for the duration of the war, if some older minister or ministers will volunteer adequately to supply my pulpit in an honorary capacity, until (D.V.) I return. My wife undertakes to perform all pastoral duties within her power, and the members of my congregation have expressed their willingness to co-operate enthusiastically.—Yours, &c.

E. GLYN EVANS.

*The Old Meeting, Dudley,
June 4, 1915.*

[The Rev. E. Glyn Evans wrote to us again on June 8 informing us that he has actually enlisted in the R.A.M.C., that he has received the formal and full approval and support of his Church Committee, and lastly, that the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, 131, Pershore Road, Birmingham, has undertaken the whole responsibility of arranging supplies for his pulpit. Volunteers are requested to write to Mr. Thomas on the subject. Travelling expenses will be paid, but otherwise the work will be honorary.—ED. of INQUIRER.]

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As a minister of military age, perhaps you will be good enough to afford space for a sort of "apologia pro vita sua." When war broke out I was on holiday, and my one thought was to get back to minister to the needs of soldiers' families. My church officers urged me to finish my holiday so as to be fortified against the inevitable pressure of work. On my return I worked in connection with the S. & S.F.A., and also "speeded up" a Council School Care Committee, of which I am Hon. Secretary. In November, however, when heavy casualty lists were being published, it seemed my clear duty to leave ministerial work to older men, and some of it to women. On November 3 I applied to a local colonel for a commission in the army. On November 17 I sent to the War Office for the regulation form. The latter was returned to the War Office from the depot of the Liverpool Regiment signed by the Vice-Chancellor of Manchester University, a Liverpool city magistrate, a Commanding officer and a R.A.M.C. doctor, who certified as to education, character, military fitness, and health respectively. So far I proceeded without conferring with the Church Committee or the local District Association. It seemed to me that the onus of my going or not was a matter for myself alone. When I wrote to my Church Committee I discovered there was another side. My "bravery" was admired, but the propriety of my action was severely criticised. Messages, both written and verbal, were sent me from officials and private members urging me to remain at my post. I decided that if the War Office required me, I would go. If no summons came, I would remain at home.

The fact that I went so far seven months ago qualifies me to appreciate your present attitude. But I fear your editorial chair is too far removed from the concrete. My friends and neighbours pay me the compliment of saying that I am one with them in the matter of obligation to serve the country, but they strongly think I ought to serve at home.

If the minister goes, both the soldier and his family lose a friend. The Lusitania is sunk, and the minister receives a letter from a soldier asking him to stand by his fiancée's family. A soldier's relatives neglect his wife, and the soldier writes from the trenches: "If anything happens to me, go to Mr. and Mrs. Short;" (the latter not a Unitarian case). News comes through that an only son has died in battle. Who more suitable than the minister to read and pray in the darkened home? A mother gets unofficial information that her elder son is missing, the battalion had lost heavily—the manse was the place she sought first for comfort. A son is in the throes of battle on Hill 60. His mother at home is filled with dreadful suspense. She writes to the minister words of thanks for comfort and help received from his sermons. Quite a number of cases could be cited where mothers and wives have been advised and helped on the material side. It is when we descend to facts that the case of the minister differentiates itself from that of the lawyer and man of the world.—Yours, &c.

WALTER SHORT.

*Bootle Free Church, Liverpool,
June 2, 1915.*

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—One cannot read the stirring words of Mr. Dowson without losing at least a little of the impatience which your very imperfect attempt to solve a difficult moral problem at first aroused in many minds. For when a man is faced by a most searching ethical question, it does not help him much to hear the general public addressed upon the subject and informed that unless he accepts your particular solution he is virtually to be branded as unworthy of his country and his calling. And is it not somewhat invidious and unjust to single out one class or profession for challenge and implied rebuke? Surely the stern question has been facing every man of enlistment age—Does my country now need me more sorely as a recruit than in my normal occupation? In the case of the younger minister you venture to offer a very simple and direct answer, and to reiterate it this week despite the published, and unpublished replies to your leader. Without any hesitation you offer him two and only two alternatives—either he must enlist for the line of battle, or cease from giving an insincere benediction to those in other callings and circumstances who have done so. Your articles even go so far as to imply that nothing short of full participation in the deadly work of the trenches should enable him to return with honour to his pulpit in the days to come.

Writing as one to whom your challenge and your words apply, I protest most strongly in the first place against the sweeping generalisation of your articles, and against the facile way in which you offer a single ruling for practically every minister of enlistment age. But even more strongly I protest against that absence of all hesitation on your part in deciding that in the present war even the minister of religion should hasten to plunge into the thick of the fight. I shield myself behind no priestly conception of the office of teacher of the Christian Gospel as a vocation peculiarly holy and unique, but I still maintain that the Christian minister should not yet be so mercilessly criticised by a responsible writer if he feels very deeply and conscientiously indeed that, because of his vocation, he would rather serve his country to the full in any other possible way than by suspending that vocation in order to train for the fury and the bloodshed of the battle-field. Moreover, are we not on the eve of a much more complete and effective mobilisation of all the nation's reserves of skill and brain and power, in which doubtless those of us who can do so may voluntarily add to our present duties some valuable tribute of labour more closely in harmony with our life-work of moral and spiritual service, or at least less violently in discord with our chosen calling than the soldier's terrible duty of putting cold steel and lead into the hearts and brains of his foes? So far from seeing with you "a vision of the renewal of religion which may come from the baptism of fire," I remain convinced, with one of your correspondents, that in the immeasurable crisis through which we are passing the call upon us is still for the exercise of every power of mind and spirit in our own proper sphere, and if there we remain for the present I think there are few who will join you in calling upon us to "cease from all words of public admiration," for others who nobly decide, for their part, to serve England by taking up arms.—Yours, &c.,

MORTIMER ROWE.

Preston, June 5, 1915.

[May we suggest to our correspondent that reading with care should come before criticism in haste. If he will refer to the article, which appeared on May 29, he will see that the words which he takes as applying to all young ministers indiscriminately are carefully limited to a particular class. They occur in a paragraph devoted to the case of men, a fairly large number in the British Isles, who shrink from taking up the duties which they praise in the highest terms in others, because they feel that they would be soiled or degraded by them and rendered unworthy of their sacred calling. For the minister to admire the young men of his congregation and to speak of them from pulpit and platform as laying down their lives for their friends, and so soon as military service is mentioned as a possibility for his own profession to talk of it in the most brutal terms he can find, is not very edifying. In these cases we said that silence is better than speech, and we are still of the same opinion. We must always be careful of praising in others what we condemn in ourselves. But of course the words did not refer to men who may decline the call of military service for other and quite adequate reasons. It is our correspondent and not ourselves who is responsible for the sweeping generalisation to which he objects.—ED. OF INQ.]

GAS AS A WEAPON.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The reply to Mr. Lloyd Thomas's arguments seems to me to be this: We all draw the line somewhere. Some of us draw it at gas poisoning as we know it at present. Mr. Thomas draws it elsewhere. He admits that there are horrors at the price of which none of us would wish to buy the lives of those we love, nor even the freedom of our country and of the world. Many of us—including men at the front—think that in the German form of gas we have reached such a horror. Mr. Thomas says that "the more fiendishly treacherous the weapon which your enemy uses then the more morally imperative it is in the interest of the very survival of your humane sentiments that his devilry should be defeated, and that he should be taught the lesson that methods of treachery do not even pay." From the whole argument of his letter this seems to mean that "fiendish treachery" must (in default of a non-torturing gas being found) be met by equally fiendish methods on our part. How low then are we to sink in this competition of devilry? We have no reason to suppose that Germany will hesitate at any form of torture. Her deeds in Belgium preclude any such hope. Is it to be in her power to drag us through every stage of infamy until it will be impossible for us, for very shame, to take the word "civilisation" on our lips? And what kind of an England will be left at the end of it all? She may have the same name, but she will not be the England for whom our men have so far given their lives.

We are agreed that there is a point at which we might have to face the extinction of the nation's body in order to save its soul. But it is by no means certain that the refusal to employ weapons of torture would mean defeat to our arms. Mr. Thomas does not allow for the fighting strength that lies in the sympathy of the civilised public opinion of the world in its attitude towards this country. (Mr. Wicksteed has touched on this point.) If the Italian people had seen no difference between our methods of warfare, on land and sea, and those of Germany, can any one believe that Italy's old admiration for England would have survived, and eventually brought her in on our side? It is surely no small source of strength to have (as Mr. Wicksteed puts it) "a group of nations that know they can trust each other."

There are people in this country now being put to the extreme test of knowing that, by the refusal to use any form of torturing gas, those they love most may have a worse chance, and the victory of the cause for which they are fighting may be delayed. If they can pass that test, and still choose that the evil weapon shall not be used, I think their conviction is something better than "a peculiarly inhuman and immoral form of sentimentalism."—Yours, &c.

MARGARET MAHLER.

Bron-y-Garth, near Oswestry.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As to the moral aspect of the use of gas your readers need no more than read the letters of Mr. Mott and Mrs. Roscoe in your issue of May 29, and choose between them. As a practical matter, Bishop Furse of Pretoria, who advocates a military organisation of the whole nation in order to "smash" the enemy, says, "Let no one think we are going to do it by descending to the level of the German Imperial Staff and using any sort of gas." The use of the so-called harmless gases which only incapacitate for a time, will give us no advantage unless we are prepared to attack and slay men while they are thus incapacitated, blinded, or what not, i.e., unless we deliberately embark upon the practice of first paralysing or blinding, and then killing. We call the slaughter of men wounded in the hand or foot by a bullet, murder of the wounded. What shall we have to call the slaughter of men wounded in the eyes or paralysed in hand or foot by gas? What our men want is not retaliation but protection.

According to Sir John French's Report of May 25, when the Germans produced clouds of gas over a front of five miles for four and a half hours, rising to forty feet high, "our men demonstrated that, with due precautions, this form of attack can be met and defeated." According to The Daily Chronicle's correspondent, the Germans, on this same occasion, found themselves impeded by their own poisonous gas. "The interval which had to be allowed for the clearance of the air was fatal to the Germans. The French artillery mowed them down without mercy." According to The Times, the Russians have succeeded in protecting themselves against gas. According to The Manchester Guardian of yesterday, an English non-commissioned officer, writing of the German use of gas, says, "It was the German wounded who suffered most.... All around were the German wounded being tortured by the gas fumes.... We could do nothing much, but some of our chaps tossed their water bottles to them, and later some of the chaps in the trenches came out and helped the Germans to get their muzzles on, and gave them water.... The ones that were rescued felt very bitter against their comrades for turning the gas taps on at that time, but some of them said it was a judgment of God on them for using gas at all."—Yours, &c.

FRANCIS H. JONES.

51, Howitt Road, Hampstead.
June 9, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Wicksteed is wrong in his suggestion as to my reading of the War Minister's speech. I understood that "poisonous" gas was to be used. If Lord Kitchener did not put this forward as, at least, a possibility, what is the purpose of this correspondence?

As regards the Hague pronouncements on the main question, Article 23 in the Annex to Convention 4 begins: "In addition to the prohibitions provided by special Conventions, it is particularly forbidden: (a) to employ poison or poisoned weapons.... (e) to employ arms, projectiles, or material calculated to cause unnecessary suffering." Mr. Wicksteed may object that clause (a) does not quite meet the case; but his own argument would prove the weapon banned by clause (e). There is, I feel confident, a reference elsewhere in the Conventions, but I have not had time to look for it. The above is sufficient for my argument.

That argument lent itself to Mr. Wicksteed's burlesque. Liability to burlesque is the hall-mark of a good argument; but when Mr. Wicksteed writes: "It is impossible, of course, to maintain that there is any fundamental difference of principle between uses in war of the different physical forms of matter as such," I have no reason to complain. The position may now be summarised as follows: If the gas be "calculated to cause unnecessary suffering," it is banned by the Hague Conventions; but its use, otherwise, violates no principle, and may be decided on grounds of expediency.

—Yours, &c. A. GOLLAND.

London, N.W., June 7, 1915.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Wicksteed appears to attach serious weight to the letter of the young soldier who asserts that according to Headquarters the medicated respirators are really quite effective to prevent poisoning. We may be sure the respirators worn by the Germans are not less effective than our own. We may, therefore, now be quite happy on this subject, knowing that they will not suffer any torture from our use of a weapon rendered comparatively harmless. Thus the discussion may be allowed to end (like gas warfare) in mere smoke.—

Yours, &c. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Birmingham, June 5, 1915.

[This correspondence is now closed.—
ED. OF INQ.]

FOR THE CHILDREN.

ENGLAND, MY ENGLAND.

What have I done for you,
England, my England?
What is there I would not do,
England, my own?
With your glorious eyes austere,
As the Lord were walking near,
Whispering terrible things and dear
As the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
Round the world on your bugles blown.

Where shall the watchful sun,
England, my England,
Match the master-work you've done,
England, my own?
When shall he rejoice agen
Such a breed of mighty men
As come forward, one to ten,
To the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
Down the years on your bugles
blown.

Ever the faith endures,
England, my England:—
"Take and break us, we are yours,
England, my own!
Life is good, and joy runs high
Between English earth and sky:
Death is death, but we shall die
To the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
To the stars on your bugles blown."

They call you proud and hard,
England, my England:
You with worlds to watch and ward,
England, my own!
You whose mail'd hand keeps the keys
Of such teeming destinies,
You could know nor dread nor ease
Were the Song on your bugles blown,
England,
Round the Pit on your bugles blown.

Mother of Ships whose might,
England, my England,
Is the fierce old Sea's delight,
England, my own,
Chosen daughter of the Lord,
Spouse-in-chief of the ancient Sword,
There's the menace of the Word
In the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
Out of heaven on your bugles blown.

W. E. HENLEY.

[It is a good thing to learn great poetry and noble songs when we are young. We print this poem to-day in the hope that some of the boys and girls among our readers will commit it to memory. Perhaps when they are old they will remember with pride that they learned it during the war, when so many of their elder brothers and friends were giving up everything to serve their country.—ED. OF INQ.]

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MR. JOHN THORNTON.

MR. JOHN THORNTON, who died in his 75th year on June 1, though little known outside of Leeds and our few churches in the neighbourhood was a remarkable man, and one who deserves a fuller notice than our limited space will allow of. He had served as clerk to the magistrates from the time the Town Hall was opened in 1858, and there a few weeks ago he had the seizure which ended his life. The tribute paid to his memory by the Stipendiary Magistrate on behalf of his colleagues expressed in few words their "abounding admiration for the merits of that excellent man, the possessor of all the qualities his office demanded—detailed knowledge, untiring industry, and in a peculiar degree, a just, fearless, and impartial mind, and a reputation unrivalled and unimpaired during the passing of two generations of men."

All Leeds can bear witness to the sober truth of these words, but only a few of us know what he did for the Unitarian Church in Hunslet. He was for years a member of the Mill Hill Congregation, a teacher in the Sunday School, Secretary of the Choir Committee, and valued and esteemed of all; but in 1897 becoming aware, as he himself wrote, "that while Mill Hill gave money freely it did not give men," he severed a connection which was dear to him for many reasons, and thenceforth devoted all his spare time and energy to the poor church in the smoky township which was then in sore need of workers. Twice, and often thrice, on Sundays, he went down there from his home two miles away, three, and often four times, on week day evenings.

The members of his family nobly seconded his efforts, and a new life came to what had become an apparently dying cause. Minister, congregation, choir, schools, societies, and the fabric itself, all profited of the love and devotion which he lavished upon them, sparing neither means nor pains on their behalf. He was modest to a fault and shrank from any public recognition of his services. He might justly have claimed for himself the honour and authority due to one who was, indeed, the father of the congregation, but all he would allow of was that he should be recognised as "servant of all," and it was his boast that he had blown the organ at the weddings of nearly all the scholars married in his time.

The funeral service at Mill Hill Chapel, conducted by the Rev. C. Hargrove, was a striking tribute to the esteem in which he was held by all. The City Justices, the solicitors, the police were all largely represented, and on a busy working day some 500 persons were gathered to do honour to his memory. There was no choir, but the hymns, 'O God, our Help' and 'Hope for the Day is Dawning,' were heartily sung. The body was afterwards cremated at Lawnswood Cemetery, and so ends the record of one whom all Leeds agrees with its Stipendiary in naming "One of the best of men."

C. H.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

21ST LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4374	7	3
Miss Helen S. Crosskey	..	0	10 0
Mr. and Mrs. L. Hall (fourth donation)	..	1	0 0
Lady Warner	..	0	10 0
Miss Alice E. Winkworth (third donation)	..	25	0 0
L. T. (third donation)	..	2	0 0
Memorial Church and Red Cross Society, Liscard, per Mrs. Johnson (second donation)	..	5	4 10
Miss Jennie Buckley (New York)	..	2	2 0
Miss Ellen Chapman (second donation)	..	1	0 0
Miss Kitty M. Comport	..	0	10 0
Mr. J. E. Rickards	..	5	0 0
Miss M. C. Pearce (second donation)	..	0	10 0
Mr. E. Braithwaite	..	0	10 0
Miss M. Wragge	..	0	10 0
Mr. Alex. H. Sing'eton	..	2	2 0
Mr J. T. Perry (second donation)	..	1	0 0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (monthly donation)	..	4	0 0
Miss Mary E. Swaine (fourth donation)	..	2	0 0
Mr. A. F. Jones (second donation)	..	0	10 0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. M. Locke Blake ..	10	0	0
Mr. W. E. Spragg ..	1	0	0
A Friend ..	0	10	0
Joan and Martin Wilson ..	0	10	0
R. L. ..	0	10	0
Miss Clara Martineau ..	5	0	0
S. S. Superintendent ..	1	0	0
A. J. A., Walmer (third donation) ..	0	5	0
Mrs. Hardy (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Frost ..	1	0	0
The Misses Gillespie ..	0	4	0
Miss Lucy Colton ..	0	3	6
Mr. W. R. Button ..	0	10	0
Miss E. Dowell (monthly donation) ..	0	2	6
Mr. Geo. Banks (fifth donation) ..	1	0	0
M. R. F. Z. ..	0	5	0
Proceeds of "Tiny Tots" Entertainment at Norwich (per Mrs. Mottram) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Renshaw ..	1	10	0
Liverpool Branch Women's League (per Miss Alison Hall) ..	5	0	0
A Few Sympathisers (third donation) ..	0	5	0
Mrs. Grundy, Sen. (second donation) ..	0	10	0
Mrs. Costeker ..	1	0	0
	£4,467	11	1

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. M. J. Worsley; Ancient Chapel Sunday School, Liverpool (per Miss Alison Hall); Miss Norton; E. J. B.; Plymouth Branch of the Women's League (per Miss Rosa A. Bond); Church of the Messiah Branch of the Women's League, Birmingham (per Mrs. Austin); Miss E. C. and Miss B. Harvey; Miss E. Arundel and Miss O'Dowd; Mrs. Roscoe and maids; Mrs. Thos. A. Johnson; Miss Trimmell; Miss Monks; Anon.; Mrs. Titterton; Miss Warren; H. H.; Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, Adult Girls' Class (per Miss Abbott); Mrs. Octavia Cobb; Mrs. J. E. Richards; Miss Constantia Wicksteed; Mrs. E. Leys; Monton Church, Eccles, Women's Union (per Mrs. Nanson); Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Bury Unitarian Women's League (per Miss Johnstone); Plymouth Branch Women's League (per Miss R. A. Bond); Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee (per Mrs. Duke); Mrs. H. W. Thompson; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Mrs. Hardy; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Miss Short; Miss Anna Bochsler and Miss Harriet Lane; Mrs. Agutter; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff (per Mrs. A. C. Fox); Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Ullet Road Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Odgers); Mrs. Arnold Lupton; Mrs. Wicksteed; Mrs. Temple Moore; Miss Mary Dendy; Miss Kensett; Finchley Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers).

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

DR. DRUMMOND'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

LETTER TO OLD STUDENTS.

THE former pupils of Dr. Drummond, both in London and Oxford, gladly seized the occasion of his eightieth birthday on May 14th, to write to him individually and send their expressions of gratitude and love. They felt that there was thus presented just such an opportunity as they desired to assure him how highly they appreciated all his labours on their behalf and his continued interest in their welfare. The Rev. Dendy Agate, of Altrincham, kindly put himself in communication with all old students within reach, and arranged the simultaneous out-pouring of good wishes. An embossed leather case of suitable size, wherein the letters received might be preserved, was at the same time sent as a united birthday gift.

Dr. Drummond replied as follows:—

MY VERY DEAR FRIENDS AND FORMER PUPILS,—It was truly a delightful conspiracy of kindness and affection which you formed to cheer the heart of an old man; and the beauty of your thought is finely embodied in the noble casket designed to contain the letters, which I reverently place within it, to be handed down to my posterity.

Nothing can be more gratifying to a teacher than the assurance that he has not laboured in vain, and that successive generations of students have all derived some benefit from his instructions. Ten years ago you presented to me an address which touched me deeply; and now you have come individually, with all the variety of personal experience, to tell me that the love which I always felt for my students is returned with interest, and that those who had the closest knowledge of me were not dissatisfied with my work. I have sometimes thought that at least two orders of teaching might be adopted with advantage, so as to meet more fully the varying requirements of different minds; but in our small college this never seemed practicable, except to a very limited extent. Some disquisitions which were suited to more advanced students must have been repellent to the less mature, and I was always grateful to students for the patience with which they attended lectures that, to those who brought no antecedent interest in the subject discussed, must have seemed dry and barren. It is a satisfaction to know that even they found in the teaching as a whole something to quicken and invigorate.

I often had misgivings about my method; but it was deliberately adopted, and I still think it was on the whole sound. It seemed more important to train in habits of accuracy and thoroughness than to pass superficially over a wide field, and even those who could not follow with obvious profit the more minute discussions might at least be guarded against hasty judgments, and come to see that complex theological problems were much less simple than they at first appeared. To this must be added that when my professorship began the very foundations of theology were depending on critical discussions, which, though in themselves of small importance, affected in their result the great question of the authority of Scripture. Since that time the whole theological outlook has undergone a great change, so that some of my early lectures became obsolete and were omitted, and large sections were revised or added, and wholly new courses were written. Of our more social intercourse many of you make mention. Our Saturday walks always gave me the greatest pleasure by bringing us into familiar comradeship, and the informal conferences that we used to have once a week were to me a source of much satisfaction, bringing us closer, heart to heart and mind to mind, than was possible in a lecture.

And now, dear friends, what can I add? I have received other letters besides yours written in much the same strain. Things are said about me which I, who know too well the dark spots in the inward man, cannot possibly accept, though I know they have been written in all sincerity. Two inferences follow: one that there is a great flood of kindness and sympathy still left in the world; the second, as I think I have observed on other occasions, that even through very imperfect instruments Divine ideals are allowed to shine, and it is only with deepest and humblest gratitude that I can believe that the ideals which claimed and fired my youth have not been wholly without effect, though housed in this imperfect tabernacle. With heartfelt thanks I reciprocate your greetings, and I hope you will all live to see the present mystery of iniquity dispelled, and righteousness and brotherly co-operation returning to the divided nations, and bringing in as never before the long-expected Kingdom of God.

Yours sincerely and affectionately,

JAMES DRUMMOND.

18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford.

May 18, 1915.

ADDRESS FROM THE UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at their meeting on the eve of Dr. James Drummond's eightieth birthday addressed to him the following letter, and Dr. Drummond has replied in the letter which is attached.

"We are desired by the Executive Committee of this Association to offer you on their behalf a respectful and most cordial greeting on your eightieth birthday, and take occasion to express the deep gratitude felt by our people far and wide for your many and varied services to the cause of a free Christianity and pure religion.

"We may ourselves, perhaps, be allowed to single out for special mention the generous enthusiasm with which you entered into the scheme which resulted in the provision of a permanent home for the two Associations. We also gladly recall the wise and stirring addresses which you have given us from time to time, by voice or pen, and especially the volume 'Studies in Christian Doctrine,' which you entrusted to us for publication, and which, if we may judge from many expressions of appreciation, will certainly rank high among the valuable contributions made by you to the religious literature of two generations.

"May it be some comfort to you in these saddest of all our days to know that such high things are not wholly forgotten, and to receive these tokens that the sweeter affections are still with us; and may you be strengthened anew to inspire us long with your own courage and trust in Him, to whose tenderest keeping we reverently commend you."

To this letter of greeting Dr. Drummond replied as follows:—

My dear Friends, the Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association,—Please except my warmest acknowledgments of your kindness in sending me so touching a letter of appreciation on the attainment of my eightieth birthday. Though I can truly say that I have never worked for pelf or fame, it is nevertheless gratifying and cheering in my old age, to receive so many assurances that I have not laboured in vain. I have not doubted that "the sweeter affections are still with us"; yet your kindly expression of these affections cannot but give pleasure, and add strength to one's better faith. Above the clouds of war, with all its madness and cruelty, the eternal sun of justice and love is still shining, and surely the higher soul of man must once more arise, and assert, it may be with unprecedented splendour, its true power and beauty. May your Association be largely instrumental in promoting a genuine and redeeming Christianity, "in the Spirit, not in the letter, whose praise is not from men, but from God."

Yours ever sincerely,

JAMES DRUMMOND.

18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford.

May 19, 1915.

OLD MEETING HOUSE, DUDLEY. MINISTER ENLISTS IN THE R.A.M.C.

WE have received the following statement for publication:—

On Sunday morning, June 6, our Minister, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, delivered a special sermon explaining his position in regard to military service during the present crisis, and also expressing his willingness to join His Majesty's Forces if adequate arrangements could be made to supply his pulpit for the duration of the war, and if we as a Congregation could agree to grant the terms necessary for his temporary release. At a meeting of the Congregational Committee held immediately after the service, it was proposed by Mr. E. J. Thompson (Chairman), seconded by Mr. E. C. Theedam, that the magnificent and patriotic proposal of the Rev. E. Glyn Evans to enlist in H.M. Forces, for the duration of the war, be heartily approved, and that he be granted full release accordingly, with their best wishes for his welfare and safe return. During their minister's absence they pledged themselves to maintain, as far as possible, all the work and institutions of the church, and also to give Mrs. Glyn Evans every support in the duties she is undertaking. It was further proposed that during Mr.

Glyn Evans's absence, the full amount of his stipend shall be paid to him or his nominee as usual; this arrangement being subject to adequate provision being made by Mr. Glyn Evans or his representative, to have the pulpit supplied by his fellow ministers in an honorary capacity, it being understood that several ministers have already generously volunteered to give their services. Finally, the Committee undertake to pay travelling expenses of ministers, and to provide hospitality.

(Signed) E. J. THOMPSON, Chairman.

WILLIAM HICKS, Secretary.

THE Annual Proceedings in connection with the closing of the session at Manchester College, Oxford, are announced to take place on Thursday and Friday, June 17 and 18. A Religious Service, dedicating the students who have finished their course to the work of the ministry will be held in the chapel on Thursday at 8. The Farewell on behalf of the College will be given by the Principal and the Welcome into the ministry by the Rev. E. I. Fripp of Leicester.

Speech Day at Willaston School, Nantwich, will be held on Wednesday, June 16. The public proceedings will begin at 2 o'clock.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bradford.—On Sunday morning, May 30, a special service in memory of the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., for twenty-five years minister of Chapel Lane Chapel, was held. The present minister, the Rev. Thomas Paxton, in the course of his sermon, spoke of the late Mr. Jones's work, which, he said, would live on in the history of the chapel; of his greatness of heart, and the large place which he had filled in the lives of those who had known him. In the evening a service of intercession was held, attended by the Lord Mayor of Bradford and the Lady Mayoress (Ald. and Mrs. George H. Robinson). Mr. Paxton preached on 'The Need of the Nation.'

Manchester District Sunday School Association.—Barleycrofts was duly re-opened last week. Great Hucklow, in the High Peak of Derbyshire, where the Home is situated, is now the familiar scene of the important work carried on by the Manchester District Sunday School Association. There are two "Homes" there and, in a normal year, nearly 2,000 guests spend a happy week's holiday in the Homes, in addition to many others who camp in the fields or stay in the cottages. The larger Home for school holiday parties has over 100 beds. It is well situated up in the hills commanding a far view. Part of the scheme completed last week was the equipping of this Home with a complete little isolation hospital. The other Home, Barleycrofts, is for elder girls and teachers. It is the younger and smaller of the two Homes, but it has proved its worth during an experimental period of seven years. During that time well over 1,000 guests have stayed long periods at the Home. Its purchase and enlargement was the main feature of the work just completed. Six charming little bedrooms have been added, and a bathroom with hot and cold water, while the dining-room has been much enlarged and a new kitchen added.

The Home is a fine stone building, standing in five acres of well-wooded land. Altogether about £1,600 has been expended and amounts received at the opening brought the fund within £20 of completion. A special feature of the enlargement has been the naming of the rooms after distinguished women of our community. Illuminated texts and pictures in the rooms commend to the guests the virtues of the ladies they are meant to commemorate. The names so far adopted are those of "Aunt Amy," Florence Nightingale, Dorothea Dix, Mary Carpenter, Mrs. Gaskell, Mrs. Limb and Catherine of Liverpool. There are some of the rooms awaiting names, and suggestions will be welcomed. After inspecting the Homes a company of nearly 100 assembled on the lawns for the opening ceremony. The Rev. J. Morley Mills, President of the Association, took the chair, and introduced Mr. Cuthbert C. Grundy. It was Mr. Grundy who gave the Association its beautiful Home for convalescent children at Blackpool, and his presence was therefore specially fitting. In performing the opening ceremony, Mr. Grundy spoke in a charming way of the kindly thoughts and deeds by which men and women help each other through life. Nor was any form of help better than that which preserved or restored good health. He had been delighted beyond measure by the beauty of the Home and its splendid surroundings. Its spacious reception rooms, its dainty little bedrooms, and its magnificent grounds had far exceeded his highest expectation. Any religious community might be proud of these Homes and of the work they were doing. Mrs. H. E. Dowson, Mr. J. H. Pimley, Mr. H. J. Broadbent and Mr. Peach spoke to votes of thanks and then the ceremony closed. It may be added that Barleycrofts is quite full this week with guests drawn from many northern towns, and that a party of fifty mothers and babies from the Collyhurst Domestic Mission is installed at the Holiday Home.

Pepperhill.—Successful Anniversary Services were held at the Unitarian Church, Pepperhill, near Halifax, on Sunday, June 6. The Rev. Frank Coleman of Hunster preached in the afternoon, and the Rev. J. S. Mathers at night. The little chapel was filled almost to its utmost capacity on both occasions. The collections amounted to £17 11s. 3½d., and were the largest ever taken at a Pepperhill anniversary.

The Van Mission.—The Rev. T. P. Spedding writes:—

"The Van Mission has just held a series of nine meetings in Stepney. At the request of the Committee of the College Chapel, Stepney, the Rev. Fred Hall, of Blackburn, was the missionary; and he also preached special sermons at the chapel on May 30. The Rev. Frederick Summers delivered the address at one of the meetings, and on the last night Mr. Long, the lay-worker at Stepney, was the speaker. Mr. Long had presided over the meetings during the week. All who took part in the meetings were satisfied with the attendances and the general results. Questions about the war were less frequent than had been expected; and it was plain that many people are looking for help from a reasonable statement of religion just now. The friends of the Mission are aware that the Vans in the country are not to be used this summer, owing to the difficulty of arranging a definite tour except at prohibitive expense, and to the undesirability of holding many meetings in places where our churches are not represented. The Mission, however, is taking part in open-air meetings in various parts of the country; and some hundreds of out and indoor meetings are likely to be held during the summer months. Many of the ministers who have been the staunch friends and helpers of the Mission are taking part in this work, besides others who feel equally strongly that our churches are able now, as at other times, to make a useful contribution to the deepening and strengthening of the religious thoughts and aspirations of the people. Meetings already held prove that this work can be done successfully; and that many people are grateful for a statement of religious hope and faith offered without any attempt at proselytism. New factors enter into the consideration of the work that can be profitably attempted just now; but they emphasise the need for a message that shall be helpful to men. The Van Mission, in its plans for work this summer, has had the benefit of the advice and experience of over a hundred ministers, and believes that the result will satisfy the most enthusiastic as well as the most cautious of those who have helped its scheme. The Missionary Agent, while regretting that it is impossible to carry out the full programme for the Mission's tenth year, trusts that the friends of the Mission will see that the work is not allowed to suffer through lack of funds; and that those who have hitherto helped will send their contributions as usual to Essex Hall."

Wolverhampton.—On Sunday June 6, the Sunday School Anniversary sermons, in connection with All Souls' Church, were preached by the Rev. J. Ewart, of Stonebridge. At each of the three services the attendance was good, and the children, trained by Miss K. V. Wright, helped in the singing. The total amount collected exceeded the sum contributed last year by £3.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

ENLISTING FOR LABOUR.

Apropos of the Khaki Dockers, the Railway Magazine reminds us very opportunely of the following passage from Ruskin:—"Depend upon it, all work must be done at last not in a disorderly, scrambling, doggish way, but in an ordered, soldierly, human way, a lawful or 'loyal' way. Men are enlisted for the labour that kills—the labour of war; they are counted, trained, fed, dressed, and praised for that. Let them be enlisted for the labour that feeds; let them be counted, trained, fed, dressed, praised for that. Teach the plough exercise as carefully as you teach the sword exercise, and let the officers of the troops of life be held as much gentlemen as the officers of the troops of death; and all is done. But neither this, nor any other right thing, can be accomplished—you can't even see your way to it—unless, first of all, both servant and master are resolved that, come what will of it, they will do each other justice."

NON-ALCOHOLIC REFRESHMENTS FOR ARMAMENT WORKERS.

Several schemes are on foot for opening "people's palaces" and canteens within works, factories and workshops, and it is cheering news for all temperance workers that the National People's Palaces Association has now been registered, under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, for the supply of non-alcoholic refreshments at popular prices in armament works. Mr. Lloyd George has indicated his approval of the Association's aims, and every advantage should be taken of this unique opportunity for encouraging temperate habits among a large section of the working classes. Among the associations officially represented on the Central Advisory Council are the Women's Liberal Federation, Church of England Temperance Society, National Free Church Council, United Kingdom Alliance, Catholic Women's League, and the National British Women's Temperance Association.

THE SCOTTISH WOMEN'S HOSPITALS.

A splendid work is being done by the Committee of Scottish Women's Hospitals for foreign service in connection with the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies, to which Girton and Newnham Colleges have just given £1,800. The work began, like our own Belgian Hospital scheme, in Calais, and it has spread to Serbia, where heroic efforts are being made to check the fearful ravages of typhus. There are now doctors, nurses and equipment for 800 beds in hospitals in France and Serbia. At Royaumont, near the firing line, the unit is provided with motor-ambulances driven by women; the administrator, Mrs. Harley, is a sister of Sir John French, and Miss Cicely Hamilton, the dramatist, acts as clerk, occasionally sending to the English newspapers those vivid personal impressions which many of us have read with such interest. Dr. Inglis, of the Scottish Federation, who inaugurated the work, has collected enough money to send a second complete unit to Serbia, and now a third is on its way under Dr. Alice Hutchison, who has been through a cholera epidemic in India, served in a former Balkan war, and dealt with the typhoid epidemic among Belgian soldiers. The money subscribed by Girton and Newnham Colleges will be used to equip a hospital unit of 200 beds for the wounded at Troyes, in the Château Cantaloup. The patients will be under canvas.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.
Annual Income £3,466,000
Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000
Additional Representatives wanted.
F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.
Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.
Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.
Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.
Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.
Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.
HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Winter Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

CLIFTONVILLE.—BOARD RESIDENCE. Mrs. J. H. S. COOPER, "Seacroft," Norfolk Road, Cliftonville, Margate, recommended by many friends at Highgate Church. Terms on application.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BROADSTAIRS.—A PAYING GUEST. Moderate terms.—Mrs. TOWNLEY, 15, Lloyd Road, Broadstairs.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct M.S. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD LINEN. Hem-stitched Cotton Pillow Cases, size 18 by 28 inches, bundle of four, 2s. 11d.; postage 4d.; Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON's, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—L. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 12, 1915.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

[ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3807.
NEW SERIES, No. 910.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY of Presbyterian and Unitarian Ministers and Congregations of Lancashire and Cheshire.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

WILL BE HELD AT MANCHESTER,

ON

WEDNESDAY, June 23rd, 1915.

Religious Service in Cross Street Chapel at 11 p.m. Preacher, the Rev. J. H.
Weatherall, M.A., of London. Supporter,
the Rev. H. B. Smith, of Blackpool.

Friends are requested to make their own arrangements for Luncheon.

Business Meeting in the Memorial Hall,
Albert Square, at 2 p.m., A. Nicholson, Esq.,
J.P., President, in the chair.

Tea at the Manchester Athenæum, Princess Street, at 5 p.m., 1s. each.

Evening Meeting in the Memorial Hall at 6 p.m., A. H. Worthington, Esq., B.A., in the chair. Addresses by George G. Armstrong, Esq., of Manchester, on "The Call for Faith in War-Time," the Rev. J. C.
Flower, M.A., of Bolton, on "Moral Emotions and Good-will," Lawrence D. Holt, Esq., of Liverpool, on "Trials of Faith."

H. E. DOWSON, B.A. } Hon.
N. ANDERTON, B.A. } Secs.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses.
Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children
in residence. — For particulars apply to HON.
SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIA-TION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street,
Liverpool.

THE ATHENÆUM

For Saturday, June 19th (No. 4573),

Includes Reviews of
RUPERT BROOKE'S POEMS.
THREE BOOKS ON THE WAR.
EMMA DARWIN.
WONDERS OF WILD NATURE.
MONOGRAPH ON 'MONA LISA.'
GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

J. EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.; and of all Newsagents.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

20. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).
27. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON (late Minister of Essex Church, Kensington).

July

4. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
11. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THE ANNUAL PUBLIC EXAMINATION of the Students of the Unitarian Home Missionary College will be held at Summerville, Victoria Park, Manchester, on Tuesday, June 29th, 1915, commencing at 10.30 a.m.

The Visitor's Address will be delivered at 5 o'clock by the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., of Todmorden. Subject: "The Bible and the Preacher."

On the evening of the same day the Valedictory Service will be held in Cross Street
Chapel at 7.30, and will be conducted by the Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Music by the Choir of the Longsight
Free Christian Church. Organist: Mr. OLIVER
H. HEYS.

For the Committee,

P. J. WINNER, } Hon.
G. A. PAYNE, } Secs.

Knutsford, June 15, 1915.

THE TRUSTEES of the WOOD FUND

Make Grants of Money during
the College Training of Teachers
for Elementary Schools.

Forms of Application may be obtained on application to

CHARLES FENTON,

10, Vineyard Hill, Wimbledon,

Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.

CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL, HIGHGATE, N.

Applications are invited (a) for the SPEARS
SCHOLARSHIP, value Thirty Pounds a year,
tenable by a Unitarian Minister's Daughter, and covering the full school fees for board and tuition at Channing House.

(b) Also for the COMMITTEE'S SCHOLAR-
SHIP of Fifteen Guineas a year, tenable in the School for two years. Candidates must be under Fourteen on the day of Examination, JULY 9th.

For particulars of both Scholarships apply to the HEAD MISTRESS at the School.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—*Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University.*

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as 'being a perfect model of what a School should be for
boys from 6 years upwards.'" — *Lieut.-Col.
Stephenson, Cawnpore, India.*

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

Channing House School, Highgate, N.

WANTED, in September, RESIDENT
MATHEMATICAL MISTRESS. Unitarian. Degree essential.—Apply, stating age, experience, qualifications, to Miss L. TALBOT
at the School.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, June 20.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7., Supply.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORRIS WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTHAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, Flower Services.—3.15, Rev. A. H. BIGGS; 7, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 6.30, Mr. PERCIVAL CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. Wm. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. SIMON JONES, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 { DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. H. M. LIVENs.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11, Rev. S. SPENCER; 6.30, Rev. H. C. C. JONES, B.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, A Student.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. JACKSON, B.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.—Flower Services.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHELD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLINE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Mr. W.-RUSSELL.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Figgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

HANKINSON-LOWE.—On June 15th, 1865, at Great Budworth Church, Cheshire, John Hankinson, of Deanrow, to Margaret Lowe, of Bartington. Present address—Alvechurch, Worcestershire.

DEATHS.

GITTINS.—On June 4, suddenly, at the house of his son, Childer Thornton, Cheshire, Edward Burbury, eldest son of the late Edward Gittins, of Leicester. Aged 68 years.

JONES.—On June 8th, at South Chingford, Essex. Aged 83 years, Eliza, eldest daughter of the late William Jones.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER, 43, strong, capable, and reliable, requires SITUATION as Housekeeper to Gentleman, or as Matron to School. Present situation 11 years with widower who is marrying. Thoroughly conversant with household requirements. Economical manageress.—Apply Miss F. M. DEYNS, Marks, Longdown, near Exeter.

A LADY requires a lady to help her nurse her mother. Age about 30, salary 25l. A light bath chair to push.—A. R., Inquirer Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

CARETAKERS (Man and Wife) REQUIRED at Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel. 52l. per ann.—Apply, by letter, to A. A. TAYLER, 110, Norfolk House Road, Streatham, S.W.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to the Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	299	CORRESPONDENCE :—		FOR THE CHILDREN :—
THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE NATION	301	The Sense of Proportion	303	The River Greta in June	304
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	302	The Belgian Hospital Fund: A Fresh Need	304	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
THE SYMBOL OF EMPIRE	302	The Church and the Army	304	Belgian Hospital Fund	305
QUESTIONS AT ISSUE :—		The Need of Religion	304	The Liberal Christian League	305
Ministers and the Army	303	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	304	The Churchmen's Union	306
				Unitarian Historical Society	307
				NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	307

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE have just received the interesting news from the North of France that the small hospital, which Madame L—— was anxious to establish for Belgian refugees who require nursing and medical care, has been opened. We sent out a consignment of beds and other things for its equipment. And now we shall have to maintain it, and the working expenses will probably cost us about £20 a month. The military hospitals remain our chief interest, and will continue to make the largest demands upon our Fund. But this civilian work has its own special claim upon our help and sympathy, and so long as we have the machinery and resources at our command we must shoulder the burden, and only feel a deeper sense of privilege the larger the amount of work which we are permitted to do.

IN the House of Commons on Tuesday Mr. Asquith made an important statement in justification of his action in forming a Coalition Government. The warm tribute which he paid to his former colleagues should do something to dissipate the suspicion which clings about the public mind that they had to go through some fault of their own. Their disability was one which no amount of energy could have overcome. They represented only one party in the State, and the co-operation of all parties is necessary for the prosecution of a long war, when difficult corners have to be turned and moods of national depression to be overcome.

What I came to think was needed [Mr. Asquith said] was such a broadening of the basis of the Government as would take away from it even the semblance of a one-sided or party character, and would demonstrate beyond the possibility of doubt not only to our own people, but to the whole world, that after nearly a year of war, with all its fluctuations and vicissitudes, the British people were more resolute than ever, with one heart and with one purpose, to obliterate all distinctions and unite every personal and political, as well as every moral and material, force in the prosecution of their cause.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE has set about his new duties with great energy. He has to be not only an organiser-in-chief of industry, but also a charmer in words. His speeches are a mixture of shrewd commonsense and patriotic appeal, and both are needed. For it is evident that the difficulties of the industrial situation cannot be met by fine phrases. To mobilise all our forces, and to concentrate them on the supreme need of the moment, is the aim of all sensible people, and for this purpose there must be a revolution in the workshops. If this revolution can be accomplished swiftly and effectively by general consent, it is only the doctrinaire mind that will cling to the thought of compulsion. This seems to us to be as sound doctrine in economics as it is in morals. It is clear that Mr. Lloyd George is trying to use the Trade Unions instead of over-riding them. If he succeeds he will have enlisted for national service an immense store of productive energy which would undoubtedly lose a good deal of its efficiency under any scheme of conscription for labour.

WE say this without any modification or withdrawal of what we have said on this subject during the past few weeks. The need of the country at the present moment must be supreme over all sectional interests. We must accept compulsion both for the army and for industry without a murmur, if we cannot defend ourselves and fulfil all our honourable obligations to our Allies without it. But we hope that Mr. Lloyd George will be able to charm so wisely that we shall get all the volunteers we need, coupled with a willing surrender of rules and customs which limit production in ways that are contrary to the public interest. But let it be remembered that the appeal must always be pitched in a lofty and inspiring key. We have seen it suggested in some quarters that wages for Government work should be on such a scale that no inconvenience will be felt owing to the rise in the cost of living. That, we believe, is the wrong note; it reduces the whole matter to one of clever bargaining. It also obscures the fact that every man who serves, whether in the field or the workshop, is doing so, not to please somebody else, but to defend his home and to promote the common cause.

FEW people have a better right than Mr. H. G. Wells to admonish us about the place of scientific inventiveness in war. In a letter to The Times he has taken us severely to task for our stupidity in this matter. His suggestion is that we should create some supplementary directive force, which would encourage inventiveness, and give our scientific men their proper place in the solution of military and naval problems. "It is not," he says, "the sort of work for which a great legal and political career fits a man. That training and experience, valuable as it is in the management of men and peoples, does, indeed, very largely unfit men for this incessantly inventive work. A great politician has no more special aptitude for making modern war than he has for diagnosing diseases or planning an electric railway system. It is a technical business. We want an acting sub-Government of scientific and technically competent men for this highly specialised task."

* * *

THE warning is a useful one, and several scientific men have written to support his plea. But the accusation that we have done nothing has about it the tone of exaggeration of a man who wants to prove his case, and is, perhaps, a little angry and disturbed. This war is a much bigger and more difficult business than any of us could possibly realise when it began, and the disposition to make somebody a scapegoat because we have not romped through it to an easy victory has been allowed a good deal too much freedom of expression in the newspapers lately. The Germans have made their bad miscalculations as well as ourselves, and the skill, the dash, and the inventiveness, have not been all on their side. We cannot trumpet what we are doing from the house-tops, and the Government is not so foolish as to answer every big accusation with the official information which would reduce it at once to much more modest proportions. But every now and then the veil of necessary secrecy is lifted. On Wednesday, for instance, Mr. Tennant informed the House of Commons that at the beginning of the war we had only one central flying school capable of training twenty-one or twenty-two men, whereas now we have eleven such schools, capable of training two hundred men. This means that our air service has been multiplied ten-fold.

* * *

THE American Note to Germany has been presented, the full text has appeared in the press, and now silence has fallen while the German Government indulges in the postponements and delays, which it hopes will blunt the edge of the controversy. The Note itself is worthy of the deepest admiration and respect. Its language is calm and dignified, and the principle to which it appeals is the broad and invincible one of human rights. Submarine warfare carried on against defenceless merchantmen, it says in effect, is an offence against the elementary rights of nations, therefore submarine warfare of this kind must cease. The passage which has the strongest interest for ourselves is the one dealing with the sinking of the Lusitania. President Wilson has brushed aside all irrelevant excuses, and fixed the attention of the world upon the deep human issue of right and wrong. The following passage, with its firm insistence on the moral obligations of nations, has little in common with the usual language of diplomacy.

The Government of the United States is contending for something much greater than the mere rights of property and the privileges of commerce. It is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity which every Government honours itself in respecting, which no Government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority.

It is upon this principle of humanity as well as upon the law founded on this principle that the United States must stand.

* * *

THE following expression of opinion on the American situation by Dr. Jowett of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, appeared in The Manchester Guardian on Monday. It has special interest as coming from a man of deep English sympathies, who is living at present in close touch with American life.

President Wilson has been known throughout his public life as a man of very dogged determination. When he was President of Princeton University, if there was one criticism of his administration there it was of his obstinacy when once he had made up his mind. He revealed the same characteristic when he was Governor of the State of New Jersey. He undertook the reform of abuses in New Jersey which no other Governor had even touched. There is nothing weak about him, and all his friends know that once he has made up his mind he will not flinch. Mr. Bryan is a man of very strong pacific opinions amounting almost to the conviction that war of any kind is wrong. I should think he very nearly comes to the point of holding the doctrine of non-resistance, and my own interpretation of his resignation just now, apart from the public criticism of his administration as Secretary of State, is that he knows that Wilson means business and will not hesitate at carrying things to the full length unless Germany surrenders.

Dr. Jowett believes that America can perhaps be of the greatest service to the Allies if she is able to keep out of actual war, and that is apparently the opinion of all men of influence whom he has met in the United States.

* * *

A CORRESPONDENT has sent us a short account of the annual meeting of the Churchmen's Union, which was held in London last week. The meeting was remarkable chiefly for the determination of its members to be on their guard against any drift towards obscurantism and reaction, and for the plain-speaking of the paper by Dr. Sanday, which was read in his absence by Prof. Percy Gardner. In other times there would be something like a theological tornado over the public abandonment of many traditional positions by one who holds such a high position in the Church. The gentle persuasiveness of his language cannot conceal the essential change in his spiritual position. "Bodies," he said, "do not float in the air and materialise at will. If it is a question of believing either that these things happened or that they were talked about and thought to have happened we must choose the latter hypothesis." In other words for him the traditional reliance upon miraculous events has gone. We may be sure that in a mind so sensitive to the beauty of spiritual things this will not lead to critical detachment or barren rationalism. Canon Sanday will render a great service to religion if he can convince many of his fellow churchmen of the truth which he feels deeply himself, that we need lose nothing of the passion and glow of faith when we are quite honest with ourselves about questions of historical evidence.

* * *

WE must not be surprised if there is a revival of crude supernaturalism in some quarters in connection with the war, but we are sorry to see a preacher of Dr. Horton's eminence giving countenance to it. In a sermon preached in Manchester last Sunday he told several stories of marvellous happenings and angelic visitants on the battlefield, which he wished his hearers to accept as literal evidence of God's protecting care for our men. "I had news from the Dardanelles," he said, "last week but one. A sailor on one of our transport ships told me in the simplest language—just narrating the fact of the moment—how airships of the enemy came over the troopship dropping bombs. The captain, who is a man of God, gave the order to the men to pray, and they did pray. They knelt on the deck and prayed and the Lord delivered them. The eighteen bombs, which seemed to be falling from overhead, fell harmlessly into the sea." Does it not occur to people who accept stories of this kind, and others even more marvellous, like the stampeding of German cavalry by a company of angels, that they are really creating difficulties for faith instead of removing them? If the Lord delivers one ship from the danger of bombs because the sailors pray, are we to conclude, when tens of thousands are not delivered, that it is a judgment upon the ungodly or that the arm of the Lord is shortened that it cannot save?

THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE NATION.

It is no matter for surprise if the taste and preference of the individual still claim their rights in face of the common needs of the nation. Since the passing of the great Reform Bill, the liberty of the individual and the rights of conscience have been the watchwords of the party of progress in English politics. We have trained ourselves in obedience to these habits of thought. We have been suspicious of easy agreement with the opinions of the majority. We have lived in an atmosphere of protest against everything which threatens to curtail our liberties. We have encouraged scruples and frowned upon compromise. It is, of course, true, that men have united in larger or smaller groups for the promotion of common ends; but even then the obedience has been conditional, and the group itself has been aware of its deep disagreement with other groups, and has drawn much of the zest of living from the consciousness of this difference. It is this tradition which has dogged the steps of political Liberalism, and often rendered it impotent in face of the misery and injustice which its gospel of freedom has been unable to banish. And it is the same spirit, when it enters as a controlling principle into the spiritual life of men, which has created "the dissidence of dissent," and taught us to revere the lonely conscience as the perfect fruit of Christian discipline.

The catholic mind, whether in the State or the Church, has been aware all along of the weakness of this theory. But within the camp of freedom itself there have been signs lately of the restlessness and dissatisfaction which are the birth pangs of new thought. Serious thinkers who have been nourished themselves on the doctrines of the Revolution, and owe more than they can ever measure to the bracing air of spiritual liberty, are aware that the conception of freedom which the past has provided for them is not final; and they begin to whisper the suspicion that, apart from the enrichment which may come to it from the side of history and tradition and all the complex emotions and duties of social existence, it has almost ceased to be useful. And now the heightened national consciousness, the sense of a common life beating within the limits of the personal life, which has been created by the cataclysm of the war, has come to submerge many of the old landmarks and to make a new and richer doctrine of liberty a practical need of daily life. In face of needs and dangers, which can only be met by common action, any teaching which separates a man from his fellows and makes him sole arbiter of his own fate, is clearly out of touch with the facts. It may be defended by the intellectualist with a whole battery of arguments; but it is defeated by the logic of life.

What then shall we do? Is there no alternative open to us but to march in battalions, and to shout with the crowd? Must we buy our safety at the price of our liberty? Need we say that we have nothing so thoughtless and suicidal as that in view. What is required is a clarifying of thought and a cleansing of conscience, not by retirement into ourselves, but by an act of union with the needs, the affections, the loyalties of the common life to which we belong. We must overcome the impulse, so deep-seated in the pioneers of freedom, to keep ourselves well in hand and resist the popular emotions which are surging around us. Unless we allow ourselves to move with the crowd, and to feel the proud lift of the national consciousness in our own life, our thought will be sterile because its field of experience will be very small, and conscience, however severe it may be in its verdicts, will fail to help and instruct the common mind. The difficulty, of which many of us are conscious at the present moment, is due to the startling enrichment of the materials with which thought and conscience have to deal. Private-mindedness has suddenly given place to public-mindedness; actions, which we thought of a short time ago as so entirely our own affair that no one had a right even to criticise them in a free country, are now seen to be heavy with the tragic issues of life and death for the whole nation. When we begin to plead in the familiar way for our own rights or the sacred privilege of doing as we please, we grow suddenly ashamed, for we are more conscious of the claims of our neighbour for help and protection than we have ever been before, and we know that our life is not our own to do with it as we please.

We are aware that what we have said is not valid against the ultimate verdicts of conscience. There is a point beyond which no man dares to go, for there is a monitor within whose voice is the voice of God. But those of us who have been trained in the ways of individual liberty will do well to be on our guard against any attempt to spread the authority of conscience over all our private preferences and tastes. It is not only the conformist who may become the victim of his own prejudices. There is a fashion in walking alone as there is a fashion in following the crowd. The party of sensitive scruples may depart from moral sanity almost as easily as the party of ready compliance. If freedom for any of us has been chiefly associated with protests, and has been more fruitful in providing us with occasions for dissent than with opportunities for rich and harmonious co-operation with our fellow-men, there is still need for us to ask the ancient question "Where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?" For there is nothing which the non-conformist needs more than wisdom in the use of his conscience. If he is seldom happy in agreement there is clearly something wrong with him. Just in so far as he separates himself from the splendour and passion of the life around him, viewing it with the detachment of a spectator instead of the rapture of a lover, his protests and warnings will fall on deaf ears. They will be lacking in the breadth of view, the quiet sanity, and the abounding human sympathy which command attention and respect.

But it ought not to be necessary to urge this point of view upon the attention of those who profess and call themselves Christians; for Christianity is not a private but a public religion. In some quarters, no doubt, this cardinal fact has been obscured and almost forgotten. In our jealousy for liberty of opinion we have run to extreme forms of individualism in religion. The critical temper has also raised isolating barriers in the mind which have no existence for the heart. But as soon as we give ourselves in a mood of real abandonment to the simplest act of worship this loneliness disappears. The great tradition out of which we have come pulses consciously in our life. The history which lies behind us and around us is changed into a passion of love and aspiration within us. The private mind, even the urgency of merely private needs, disappear as the fellowship of Christian souls widens immeasurably around us, and claims us for its own. We have often spoken of these things in this place before. We recall them now because they set the seal of religious experience upon our plea for an enlargement of conscience and a doctrine of freedom which shall do full justice to the claims of fellowship. Nor could we find a better illustration of the way in which the private citizen attains to ampler liberty and a larger vision of life, when in hope and desire, in effort and sacrifice, he becomes one with the nation.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

KING of glory, King of peace,
I will love Thee ;
And, that love may never cease,
I will move Thee.
Thou hast granted my request,
Thou hast heard me ;
Thou didst note my working breast,
Thou hast spared me.

Wherefore with my utmost art
I will sing Thee,
And the cream of all my heart
I will bring Thee.
Though my sins against me cried,
Thou didst clear me ;
And alone, when they replied,
Thou didst hear me.

Seven whole days, not one in seven,
I will praise Thee ;
In my heart, though not in heaven,
I can raise Thee.
Small it is, in this poor sort
To enroll thee ;
Even eternity's too short
To extol thee.

GEORGE HERBERT.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Of all the parts of God's service, prayer justly challengeth the first place : for, inasmuch as the best of God's children are subject to many infirmities, and even the just man falleth seven times a day, and that man's life (by reason of sin) is exposed to many dangers, troubles and afflictions, it therefore behoveth us much, and concerneth us near, to seek out some remedy, as well to strengthen ourselves from the assaults of our several enemies, that (as much as flesh and blood will permit) we fall not, as to raise us again when we are cast down and dejected, either by the sight of our sins, or the crosses and afflictions of this life. And in this distress, what course shall we think upon to relieve us, or what means shall we find to aid and succour us ? Certainly none other better than that which God himself of His goodness hath prescribed and commended unto us, and by His Word hath commanded us to have recourse unto, whencesever we shall be thus afflicted ; namely, prayer.

BISHOP ANDREWS.

GIVE me, O Blessed God, a firm and assured hope in Thee and Thy gracious promises, that in all my troubles and necessities I may be evermore confident in Thy mercy. Be unto me a strong tower of defence against mine enemies ; that whether the world allure me, temptation assail me, or the flesh rebel, I may fly unto Thee for refuge. And although thou presently put not forth Thy hand to help me, but defer Thy comfort, according to Thy good pleasure, yet keep me from doubting or despairing of Thy aid, because Thy promises are sure. Give me a fervent love and perfect charity to my neighbour ; that I may be as kind to him, and as careful of him, as of one who is a member with me of the same body, whereof Jesus Christ is the Head. Let my love to him be sincere and unfeigned, which may charitably relieve him in his wants, patiently bear with his infirmities, and willingly forgive him all his trespasses against me. Create in me, I beseech Thee, a pure, mild, peaceable, and humble heart, which may think harm to no man, nor recompense evil for evil, but good for injuries. Cleanse me from all earthly and unclean desires, and lift up my heart to Thee and heavenly things : and so write Thy laws in it that I may wholly bend myself to keep them, and please Thee, persevering in the same to my life's end. AMEN.

THE SYMBOL OF EMPIRE.

THE war has enabled us this year to give a deeper meaning than usual to the celebration of Empire Day. The young people of Britain and of the Britains beyond the seas have had their thoughts turned to the solemn responsibility that rests upon all British citizens of vindicating before the world the principles of liberty, of justice, and of righteousness, and it was only fitting that the various local celebrations should find their climax in a Special Empire Day Service at St. Paul's Cathedral. It was a glorious Saturday afternoon. The Cathedral was packed in every part with boys and girls from every district of London—boy scouts, lads' brigades, girls' life brigades, and numbers of similar organisations for the young. The great doors at the western end stood wide open, letting the sun stream in upon the silent gathering. Presently out of the sunlight there moved forward into the doorway a band of lads and young men bearing aloft the sixty-four flags representative of all parts of the Empire, headed by the ample folds of a Union Jack. Every part of the world was represented in those flags ; every continent and every ocean had contributed to form that procession of colour which moved slowly up the nave of the greatest church of the world's greatest city. What was the meaning of it all ? Was it a mere childish pageant or empty ceremony ? Hardly, for see, as they move towards the choir, another more stately procession comes out to join them, and at the head of the symbol of Empire is now seen marching the greatest symbol the world has ever known—the symbol of suffering Humanity—the Cross.

The service is over, the thrilling voice of the preacher has ceased, when suddenly from the organ peals forth the notes of the well-known hymn 'Fight the Good Fight !' The sixty-four young standard bearers, who have been seated beneath the preacher, rise to their feet and move forward. 'Fight the Good Fight !' bursts forth from thousands of voices, and the faces of the wounded warriors who line the choir on either side are thrilled at the sound. Slowly the flag-bearers move towards the altar range themselves on either side, and then kneel down to receive the blessing. The last verse of the hymn peals forth as they kneel : "Faint not nor fear, His arms are near." Yes, underneath all—the fighting and the horror of battle—are, if we can but feel it, the Everlasting Arms.

The strains of the organ have ceased, and the standard-bearers rise to march forth again into the light of day. As they pass the folds of the flags unfurl, and there, in triple emblem, stands graven on each one the mighty symbol that has transformed the world. May we not feel that those who from every land are fighting under the Empire's banner are fighting also under the banner of that great Captain who said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" ?

QUESTIONS AT ISSUE.

MINISTERS AND THE ARMY.

BY THE REV. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

I AM in cordial agreement with the general attitude of THE INQUIRER on the war, yet on this particular question of the duty of ministers in relation to it I fear I am not in complete and absolute accord. You have expressed your sense of the national situation in a way that wins my interest, admiration, and gratitude. If I may say so, your leading articles, always excellent, have never risen to such heights of moral passion and noble eloquence as during this war. Yet I hesitate to urge ministers of military age to join the army, though, if they decide to do so, I shall honour their self-sacrifice in obedience to what has come to them as the highest call of duty. It will be agreed by every constructive Christian (a) that the Christian Church needs for its highest welfare what all human organisations need, namely, diverse and well-marked orders and degrees of service ranked according to special aptitude and vocation; (b) that among special vocations, the Christian ministry, by virtue of its past history and its sacred character, stands peculiarly distinct from other professions and modes of social service. It will also be agreed, I think, that it will be a sad day for the Church when the ministerial office is permitted to be secularised to the level of other professions, however honourable.

In laying down these two principles I wish to repudiate a view for which the Rev. William Temple, a liberal and scholarly Anglican, was recently, but unjustly, very sharply criticised. I do not at all believe that because the Christian Church is an International and Catholic Society, therefore, its ministers have an international and catholic responsibility wholly inapplicable to its lay members. Moreover, I believe as firmly as ever that non-resistance when advocated as a general duty upon all men is a profoundly immoral and unchristian doctrine.

But I think that we ought to be very careful to recognise another principle, namely, that when the duty of active resistance is or is likely to be sufficiently recognised, and efficiently discharged by a given community through its navy, army, and police, then there is need in our social life for that distinct differentiation of function which sets ministers of religion more exclusively apart than any other learned profession, and which preserves and maintains them very jealously as a prophetic and specially consecrated order of men who shall be and remain, unarmed non-combatants. We need them as present living witnesses who, here and now, anticipate and represent that future fellowship, that kingdom where wars shall be no more, and where Love shall not require to defend itself by physical violence against the aggression of evil.

Though the Christian tradition is not for us an infallible or final authority, you will be among the first to admit that we owe it a very deep and reverent respect amounting to a sincere loyalty. Now the Christian doctrine as to war has never been very clear. But a study of its history and development set forth in such books, for example, as Prof. Bethune Baker's 'Influence of Christianity on War,' and Miss Campbell Smith's excellent introduction to her translation of Kant's essay on 'Perpetual Peace,' results, I think, in the conclusion that while warfare was never generally declared to be necessarily unchristian, yet it was felt that men in holy orders ought not, as combatants, to engage in it. This view was not arrived at without much vacillation in theory and inconsistency in practice; but it seems to have become, in the end, fairly well established.

In my opinion this is not essentially either a sacerdotal or a sentimentally romantic view. It can be defended, I suggest, as a nobly rational one. It preserves the reality of a special, prophetic call quite independent of academic and theological training. It also appeals as a holy testimony to an Eternal Ideal of a Blessed Life of Love and Innocence, quite apart from its claims upon our deference to the judgment of the historic Christian Church.

So long as the army is there or can be put there in time, as another necessary order and function of society, I feel there is more to be said than has been said in recent times, for the minister leaving the direct work of fighting to be done by men of other professions and grades of service. Just as it is not for the minister to be a professional actor or lawyer, so, I think, it is not for him to be a soldier. But I attach to this a very important proviso—and here you and I are in heartiest concurrence—that an adequate resisting force shall be really there or can be put there in time to meet any moral emergency.

I will go further, and add that if in a desperate crisis only a minister stood, for instance, between a woman and outrage, I should like to see him resist, fight, and, if need be, kill the assailant in God's most holy name. But in regular warfare, where combatants are present, I think the work of physical resistance and of killing should be done by men who are set apart for that work, and drawn from other spheres of society, and not by men whose special function is that of the professional Christian ministry.

The practical application of this principle of differentiation of social function would seem to come to pretty much what you yourself have expounded. Students of theology, not yet ordained, should be discouraged at this moment of supreme crisis from seeking entrance into the ministry, but they should not be refused ordination if they present themselves and give evidence of a present prophetic call. There, I think, the Anglican authorities have gone wrong. They have overlooked the truth that the ecclesiastical system exists for the Spirit, not the Spirit for the ecclesiastical system. They have, therefore, no right to refuse ordination to any one properly equipped who feels that even to-day the Spirit makes him cry, "Woe unto me if I preach not the Gospel." On the other hand, ministers of religion already ordained, ought not to be pressed or persuaded, or expected to enlist for the army, though they should be permitted to do so if they are convinced that God calls them personally out of the general rule that governs their profession. If they feel they simply must go, as I know some do feel, I shall honour their decision to enlist, and do my utmost to give them every moral and practical support.

But even then I think they ought seriously to consider whether they ought not to join the R.A.M.C. or serve as unarmed non-combatants in their exclusive capacity as ministers of religion for the distinctive function of encouragement, consolation, and mercy, and if possible, in posts of extraordinary hardship and peril.

If the army were not only undermanned, but were likely to remain so, and the cause of justice demanded the instant intervention of all the able-bodied men of the community, my opinion would be different. Then, indeed, ministers should leap forward to offer themselves. But I am not convinced that such a desperate exigency has arisen, or that the ordinary resources are so exhausted as to demand their service in that capacity.

I know well that what I have said may appear as a refuge for the coward, and that ministers of military age who act on these principles may be misunderstood by seeming to claim too lofty a detachment from the lot of other members of the Christian Church who are no less servants of God in their sphere than priests and ministers in theirs.

But this they can bear, if their heart is right before the Holiest, and it is, perhaps, the purest suffering and self-sacrifice they can now offer to their fellow-men.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE SENSE OF PROPORTION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I suggest that the present moment, which is one of the most tremendous in the history of the world, is not a favourable time to discuss in public the question as to whether we are doing our duty, or to defend our reputations against real or imaginary attacks? Let each man of us, according to his conscience, do his duty to the uttermost, wasting no energy on proving to others that he is doing it. None of us has any energy to spare for such purposes: it is all needed, to the last breath, for the great business before us. Nor is the world the least interested in mere discussions. Relatively to what is now at stake their importance is zero: nobody will heed them, nobody will remember them. Let us settle these things privately. By discussing them in public are we not exposing ourselves to the charge that we lack the sense of proportion?—Yours, &c.

L. P. JACKS.

Oxford, June 14, 1915.

THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND. A FRESH NEED.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—When I was in Calais this last time, I noticed that many of the refugees were in want of boots, and on asking at the refuge if these would be provided I found that the stock was very small indeed, "and," said Mme. L—, "they are never the right size, and I have no choice to offer them." On my return home, Mr. A. C. Whitmee offered to undertake the arrangements for supplying this need, as my own house is too small for another department. He asks me to say that if people will send the boots and shoes they can spare for men, women, or children, to Messrs. Mulholland, 53 and 55, Seven Sisters Road, London, N., they will be sorted, repaired, and packed for shipment by them free of charge to this Fund. I hope we shall be able to supply in this way a very genuine need. Parcels should be addressed to: A. C. Whitmee, Esq., Belgian Hospital Fund, c/o Messrs. Mulholland, 53 and 55, Seven Sisters Road, London, N.—Yours, &c.,

Rose ALLEN.

14, Gainsborough Gardens,
Hampstead, N.W.,
June 16, 1915.

THE CHURCH AND THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you not agree that war is absolutely opposed to the spirit and teaching of Jesus? Did he not declare that they that take the sword shall perish with the sword? Is not love for our enemies and passive resistance to evil the root principle of his message? You seem to overlook this entirely and substitute an appeal to violence for the decision of moral questions. Now violence can obviously decide nothing save that one of the two opponents is the stronger. Can a minister of religion be a faithful follower of Christ and fail to oppose war? You say no line of demarcation must or should be drawn between a minister and a layman. Soldiers have been drawn from other professions, why not from the Ministry? To begin with, when a man enters the Ministry he does so from other motives than would govern him if he entered another profession. His object is not to get on in the world, but to dedicate his whole being to the Gospels of Christ and the saving of humanity by love. Certainly he should be prepared to suffer death for his religion, if necessary (is that demanded of other professions?) but in no case to inflict it. The criticism of a Minister of Christ, who believes in war (an attempt to decimate your enemies before you convert them to the glorious truths of love and brotherhood and faith) is surely not that he should be in khaki, but that he should never have entered the Ministry at all. You cannot believe in war and Christ at the same time. The world expects and rightly expects that a minister of religion shall strive to be consistent with the teaching of Christ, even to the point of personal sacrifice. The lawyer, the business man may be a Christian, but he does not consistently adhere to the teaching of Christ, nor does the world expect that he should. A minister must deny himself the luxury of striving after wealth and power and a hundred other things which I need not enumerate; if he is selfish, grasping, worldly, &c., men despise him, because he is inconsistent with his calling. The difference between a Christian minister and a Christian layman is simply the difference between one who has given up this world for God and one who, while striving to follow Christ in many things, still adheres to the standards of this world in business and pleasure, in personal ambition and aggrandisements. You cannot explain this difference away. When a man becomes a Minister of Christ he ceases to be an Englishman; he becomes a citizen of the world, a lover of humanity. That society that publicly and officially sanctions a religion does not demand—has no right to demand—that its priests shall reveal their patriotism by disloyalty to the Master on whose teaching that religion is based. —Yours, &c.,

NEONE RAAD.

Brooklands, Ringwood, June 5, 1915.

THE NEED OF RELIGION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—There are, at times, references in your paper to criticisms passed upon you for opinions expressed and statements made by you in regard to the war. Now please allow me to express my appreciation and thankfulness for your whole conduct of THE INQUIRER since the war started. Immediately after the commencement of the war I took your advice to read my Bible as well as my newspaper. As a man engaged in business, owning it and responsible for it to pay its way, harassed with difficulties that have increased week by week since the war started, your paper and my Bible-reading have been a great help to me. And my experience has been, not a decline in my religious belief, but a greater, stronger, and more vital hold on things religious. It is, with me, not a matter of doubting God, but a matter of doubting men. I believe in God, but I don't believe much in men. One sees the great moral impulse and spirit of chivalry that is moving throughout a large portion of human society in different parts of the world. But one also knows that the same spirit of "frightfulness" and ruthlessness, which pervades the German authorities, is also present in most of the affairs of daily civil life. At bottom, most people appear to be entirely selfish and entirely oblivious of the rights of others. This, then, should be the object of religious ministers and teachers: to save the people, morally and spiritually; to demand of themselves, and of all who are supposed to be religious, that they shall do religiously, and not make talking do.

I would also ask ministers, if it be possible, to give their people a little rest on Sundays from the business of the war. Most of us get enough of worry about it during the week. Let the Sunday services be like the evening Bible reading:—a time of rest and refreshment, morally and spiritually; a resurgence of the spiritual energies; a reaffirmation of religious truths; the fusion and union of one's nature, with the imperishable and eternal verities.—Yours, &c.,

A. SIMPSON.

5, Roman Avenue, Roundhay, Leeds,
June 13, 1915.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Cambridge Bible, the Book of Judges: H. C. O. Lanchester. 1s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. HEADLEY BROS.:—The Quest for Truth: Silvanus P. Thompson, F.R.S. 1s. net.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON:—Eve of Battle: J. R. P. Sclater, M.A. 2s. net. The Campaign of 1914 in France and Belgium: G. H. Ferris. 10s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. ALEXANDER MORING, LTD.:—Madame: A. H. Pritchard.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS:—The International Crisis in its Ethical and Psychological Aspects. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON:—Builders of the Body: Eustace Miles. 1s. net.

THE POWER BOOK CO.:—Character Building and Thought Power: Ralph Waldo Trine. 7d. The Mystery of the Great Name: Shiekh Habeeb Ahmad. 1s. 2d. Woman's World-Wide Work with War: Samuel George. 7d. In Tune with the Infinite: R. W. Trine. 1s. 2d. The Secrets of some Bible Legends: M. Karadja. 1s. net. The Secrets of the Gods: M. Karadja. 1s. net.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN MARSHALL & CO.:—The Hollow Head of Mars: Herman Scheffauer. 2s. 6d. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—Sixty American Opinions on the War. 1s. net. Documents relating to the Great War. 1s. net. The Partitions of Poland: Lord Eversley. The Psychology of the Kaiser: Morton Prince. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. WATTS & CO.:—The War and the Churches: Joseph McCabe. 6d. net. A Christian with Two Wives: Dennis Hind, M.A. 6d. net. Myth and Legend in the Bible: Keighley Snowden. 2s. 6d. net. Chronicles of Man: C. Fellingham Coxwell. 6s. net. Moral Teaching as Life Revelation: F. J. Gould. 3d. The Wider Outlook Beyond the War: C. E. Hooper. 6d. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Review of Theology and Philosophy, Cornhill Magazine, Nineteenth Century and After.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE RIVER GRETA IN JUNE.

ONE of the charms of the Greta is that it seldom looks the same for three days together, and often entirely changes its appearance in a few hours. When I wrote about the river in March it was full, the muddy brown water was rushing fast and carrying all sorts of floating things with it. If a tall man had tried to cross it he would have been carried off his feet long before he had gone in far enough to find out that it was deep enough to go over his head. For some time now the rainfall has been slight, therefore the water is so low that in certain places boys and girls can wade across it. They love to sit on pieces of rock in the stream and dabble their feet in the flowing water; or they make their way to little rock-bound pools to watch the young trout which were left behind as the river sank to a low level. The fish try to hide under stones or behind moss and weed. Sometimes they find it hard to get enough food in these rocky pools, and are glad to eat unusual things. I know of a farmhouse where, after breakfast, the big pan in which the porridge has been boiled is put into one of these pools, and the trout come with eager regularity to feed on the scraps which cling to the pan.

When the Greta is low, pied and grey wagtails have a gay time on the stretches of bared sand and shingle. Here they trip nimbly up and down in pursuit of flies. Swallows, house martins, and sooty brown swifts are frequently seen skimming above the river; they also are chasing flies. In fine dry weather the insects fly high and the birds follow. When we see them fly low we do not go far from home without providing against rain.

In dry weather the water is so clear that everything on and near the banks is reflected in it. At about four o'clock on these June mornings the lights of sunrise cause the rocky summits of the mountains to glow crimson; this colour is reflected gloriously in some of the still rock pools. As the sun mounts the red gleam fades, but there are still plenty of reflections to enjoy. There is the delicate green of the ash leaves, the latest tree to hang out its foliage, and the deeper green of oaks and alders. The flowers on the river bank are also mirrored in the water. The marsh marigolds, or King-cups, as many call them, are about over, and the glossy yellow petals of those which remain will drop at the first touch of the hollow stalks; but the paler yellow blossoms of the globe flower still make a brave show in damp places, and in the very damp spots the wild iris flowers rise among the broad sword-shaped leaves. Most of you will know the purple iris of the garden. The wild kind is a beautifully shaded yellow. You need not hope to find it by your own rivers unless you live in a mountainous district. Another flower of the same bright colour which grows by the Greta is the yellow pimpernel. Its petals do not close at two in the afternoon, or on the approach of rain, as do those of that slightly lesser flower, the scarlet pimpernel.

Among flowers which grow in drier places on the river bank are stitchwort, with its frail white stars, blue speedwells, cranesbill, pink campion and wild strawberry. Cow parsley, too, is in full beauty now. Yesterday, in a shady spot, it was to be seen five feet high. Did you ever try it for table decoration? It is most effective if allowed ample room. The flowers last long in water. If you are sending boxes of wild flowers to a city school, or to hospitals, it is important to send only those which travel well and which last some days. It is well to choose flowers when they are just coming into season. The ox-eye daisies now beginning to break bud by the Greta will, if plucked within the next week or so, last three times as long in water as those which will be gathered in July. School teachers and nurses are far too busy now-a-days to spend time in unpacking and putting into water bunches of flowers which are already half faded, and which, when revived by the water, will barely last the day out.

Resist the temptation to send the lovely purple blooms of butterwort. They look rather like violets, but do not last like them. This plant is rare except in the bogs and heaths of the North. Its leaves all spring from the root, like those of the daisy on the lawn, and are thick with a somewhat frosted appearance. They are cold and sticky to the touch. Insects which alight on them cannot get away. You were told in a former nature article that butterwort kills and feeds on captured insects.

A pair of blue tits are now rearing a family of six in a strange place. Near the Greta, as it flows through Keswick, is an electric street lamp. You all know the cross bar of iron which is placed on lamp posts for the lamp trimmer to lean his ladder against. These tits have built a wee nest in the small hollow just above the place where the cross bar is run through the post. I have just seen the birds take food to their young. A boy who lives close to the lamp tells me he went up the lamp cleaner's ladder two or three days ago and saw six nestlings. A blue-tit usually has a large family. Probably the number of eggs laid in this nest was limited because of the very small space allowed them in this hollow. The light from the lamp evidently does not trouble the birds.

EMILY NEWLING.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

22ND LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4,469	11	1
Dr. Stohr, per Mr. C. E. B. Russell	10	0	0
Sir Robert Blair	2	10	0
Part proceeds Cradley Sunday School Concert for War Funds, per Mrs. Shelley	10	0
Miss Alice A. Freeman	3	0	0
Miss M. C. Martineau (third donation)	5	0	0
East Ham Secondary School Staff Collection, per Mr. W. H. Barker	1	10	0
Mrs. Bramley	3	3	0
Miss A. F. Bramley	1	1	0
Dr. A. H. Thompson	5	0	0
Mrs. Burchett (sixth monthly donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Baines (second donation)	2	2	0
Miss Fullagar (second donation)	10	0
Miss Emmeline Rawson (third donation)	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gimson	1	1	0
Miss H. Beard (monthly donation)	2	6
Mr. J. Frederick Schwann (second donation)	10	0	0
"H." (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison	10	6
Miss F. Short (sixth donation)	2	0	0
Staff of Edinburgh Provincial Training College (third donation)	10	0
Miss Catherine Scott (third donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Dendy (second donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Kenrick Champion (second donation)	1	1	0
Mrs. Priestley Smith (second donation)	1	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Grant from War Benevolent Fund from Kettering Road Church, Northampton	5	0	0
Mr. A. W. Harris (second donation)	7	6
Miss M. A. Beard	10	0
Staff of Gordon & Gotch, Ltd., per Miss B. W. Pritchard (second donation)	10	0
Miss Nettlefold (third donation)	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Tingley (third donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Kenrick (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss Sophia S. Partridge	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. G. du Vallon (third donation)	2	0	0
"E."	1	0	0
Mr. C. I. Montgomery	1	0	0
K. L.	5	0	0
Mr. Henry Marsden (tenth donation)	1	0	0
	£4,571	11	7

In last week's list "A Few Sympathisers'" gift should have been £1 5s. instead of 5s. Also the total should have been £4,469 11s. 1d.

Parcels have been received from:—Cairo Street Ladies' Sewing Society, Warrington (per Mrs. J. Lister); the Misses Passavant; Belgian Refugees (per Mrs. W. Barton Worthington); Mrs. Mellor; Mrs. N. Cave-B.-Cave and Mrs. A. E. Titterton; Mrs. E. Worthington; Miss Short; Miss Minns; the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss Nettlefold; Mrs. Notcutt; Ladies' Sewing Guild, Unitarian Church, Swansea (per Mrs. Reid); Miss Jolly; Mr. Fellows Pearson; Miss Mary Dendy; Miss Muriel Phillips; Mrs. E. L. Cox; Mrs. Thos. F. Ward; Mrs. L. M. Myers; the Mayoress of Ipswich's War Hospital Depôt; Mrs. Piggott; Mme. Lambert; Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. J. H. Green.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN LEAGUE

It was with some hesitation that the committee ventured to resume their public gatherings which had been suspended in consequence of the war, but the experiment on Saturday, the 5th inst., was an encouraging success. The "At Home" in the afternoon was well attended, the suite of rooms lent by the kindness of the Central Church, Bloomsbury, much admired, and the presence of the minister, the Rev. Thomas Phillips, was greatly appreciated.

At 5.30 p.m. a Devotional Meeting was held, the hall being crowded. The Rev. A. Bourne conducted the introductory service, and expressed the pleasure of the meeting at having Dr. Hunter with them.

Dr. John Hunter began by saying it was the first meeting of the League he had attended and it gave him great pleasure to be there. His subject was,

"The Reserve Power in Life's Demands," and he took his text from the 10th Matt.: "Take no thought how or what ye shall speak." These words had often been taken to justify non-preparation for speaking on spiritual things, but there was nothing in the Gospel story to justify such an assumption. On the contrary, the words rightly understood indicated a stored up force ready for sudden demands, and the question he wished to discuss was, "How far can man be prepared for the sudden emergencies of life." It was an habitually prepared life which could alone make us fit for all emergencies. The critical hour calls out, but never creates the necessary forces. The hour of trial discloses the man, he should be prepared for all eventualities. Spiritual experience and mental moral and spiritual preparation must be the equipment of the preacher who would be master of the conditions, though not necessarily on academic lines. We had been surprised at the many deeds of heroism reported from the battle field; indeed the actors themselves did not understand their own bravery, it was the result of latent moral powers stored up. Why do young people often fail when they offer themselves for some work? Because they have no reserve, lack proper preparation. We must fill ourselves first. Social workers often disappoint from the same cause. "I find great comfort in God," said one in the dark days that came to him, but if he had not previously found and experienced God he could not have done so. It is the prepared soul, then, that can meet emergencies, and God's providence does not allow trials to come to us for which we should not be prepared.

At 7 p.m. the Rev. Edgar Daplyn took the chair and introduced the Rev. Dr. Cobb, who surprised the meeting by appearing in khaki. His subject was, "Mysticism and the Creeds." He confessed that he found it difficult to harmonise his mysticism with the creeds, but the creeds meant more than they said. If we got rid of the creeds we might lose all their associations, and that would be a serious thing when we remembered the multitudes who had found consolation and inspiration in them. Our first duty was to be true to ourselves. There were two positions for us to choose from. Shall we decide that the mystic experiences came first and were then crystallised into dogma; or did the historical facts come first and the mystical interpretation follow? There was the advantage in the first position, that it made the creeds arise out of real experience, and thus gave them a foundation of reality which cannot be moved. And the facts of the inner life repeat themselves. Every one has a vision, and if the man becomes a better man we are justified in accepting the vision as real. He might startle them by saying that no historical fact as such could be a part of religion. There were thousands of crucifixions in the first years of our era. What made one stand out? It was the something else attached to it, the inward meaning; that was the mystical reality. The speaker then applied this principle to various articles of the creed, and showed how the Virgin Birth taught that every soul must be made clean before it can be visited by the Holy Ghost, and the lower self of each one be crucified before the soul can ascend to the new life. In conclusion he said that the ordinary person can make nothing of the New Testament; it required the mystic sense to make it clear. Let us believe that whatever is is real, and accept the old teachings made better by the eternal law of progress.

The Rev. G. T. Sadler followed with a short speech, and the Chairman, in summing up after discussion, said that he had learned for many years in his ministry to do without creeds.

The concluding conference was on "The War and Woman's Employment." Both the chairman, Mr. J. Cameron Grant, and the lecturer, Miss Susan Laurence, L.C.C., testified to the value of women's work, and pleaded for "Equal wages for equal work; equality of opportunity and equality of surroundings." A discussion followed.

THE CHURCHMEN'S UNION. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Churchmen's Union was held at Sion College, London, on Thursday, June 10th. At the morning meeting, held at St. Sepulchre's Church, Holborn, Dean Hensley Henson preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion, and this was followed by the celebration of the Holy Communion.

The afternoon meeting was presided over by Prof. Percy Gardner, and amongst the speakers were the Bishop of Hereford, Dean Henson, and the Rev. Shaw Stewart, whilst Canon Sanday's paper was read by the chairman. The large hall of Sion College was filled and the proceedings were followed with great interest. The object of the Union is defined as follows in a leaflet distributed at the meeting:—

"The discoveries of the nineteenth century, scientific, literary, and historical, not only increased the sum of our knowledge but profoundly affected our modes of thought. Some beliefs which had been unquestioned at its beginning were regarded as obsolete at its close. Others acquired a new meaning and importance, as the principle of evolution led men to see God's hand working in similar ways in many different spheres. Consequently much of the traditional language of religion, inherited from an age before science, now appeared artificial or inadequate, and some of it untrue. Many good and devout men began to feel that the formularies of the Church of England put a strain upon their consciences, and they appealed to the authorities for relief."

Prof. Percy Gardner in his opening address pointed out that the present crisis was not a time when they should be silent as to their convictions. A time like this shakes everything that can be shaken so that the things which cannot be shaken may remain. They would, he said, have to undergo a certain amount of criticism, but they could face all this because they claimed their heritage from the past and had hopes for the future. They were unwilling to accept the term "unorthodox" in regard to their theological beliefs. As Canon Rashdall had so ably shown in his recent Bampton lectures, what passes as orthodoxy is a caricature of the better teaching.

The Bishop of Hereford, who looked vigorous considering his weight of years, spoke in a similar optimistic strain. He stated that he was firmly convinced that their Union was not so strong as it ought to be, and they were in need of organising and expanding their movement. He wished to see the "Men's Society" of the Church of England as members of the Union. The time had arrived when the real objects of the Union should be made better known. We live, he said, in real touch with the life of the present, but still there is a great need to-day for fresh illumination and tolerance, and for a comprehensive spirit. He stated that as an "old man" he looked forward in the midst of all the clouds of the present to a greater realisation of this ideal than had hitherto been the case.

The Chairman read a message from Canon Sanday stating that a lecture to be delivered at Oxford on that afternoon made it impossible for him to attend, but he sent a paper to be read at the meeting. This remarkable paper made a great impression on the large audience, and is one of the most important contributions which Prof. Sanday has made to the cause of a free theology and spiritual Christianity. It is difficult to select extracts from such an important pronouncement, and it is only possible to quote here a few sentences which may show how far Dr. Sanday has moved during recent years. Indeed, his present theological position is similar to that presented by Dr. James Drummond as far back as 1870 in his volume on "Spiritual Religion."

All things, he said, are in flux, but great truths about God and Christ—great experiences of the Christian life—remain constant. The forms in which these truths are expressed change. Thus, in regard to the highest things, there is continuity of thought in connection with the highest objects of life, and there is a relativity of expression which guarantees movement and progress. The theory that things cannot change is untenable. The Christian faith was at its source a much simpler thing on its intellectual side than it is possible for it to be to-day. And the Christian talent to know theological truth was never meant to be wrapped up in a napkin. No department of knowledge is immune from the progress of thought. It is sad to think how many people stop short on the surface level. Men think that they believe things but there is a higher sense to belief than that. Continuity of thought and relativity of expression are greatly needed in theology to-day. We have to remember that even relative truth is still truth, and not falsehood. We cannot fit ideas of the present into the moulds of the past. But even as relative truths Christian doctrines have a constant claim on our attention.

Canon Sanday's paper concluded with an earnest appeal to win thinking men to Christ. He stated that it was a sorrow of his declining years to see friends look askance at him on account of convictions which had been forced upon his thoughts and life after the most patient consideration. He did not complain, but would like to state that his most matured thoughts had given him a steady view of things and transformed his experiences into a more consistent whole.

UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

At a meeting, presided over by Mr. John C. Warren, held in the Council Room at Essex Hall during the recent Whit-week gatherings, a Society was formed for promoting the study of the history of the Unitarian and kindred movements in the United Kingdom, and of the Chapels and Congregations connected therewith. In bringing the proposal before the meeting, the Chairman pointed out the desirability of preserving and publishing registers, records, and manuscripts connected with the congregations comprised in the 'Essex Hall Year Book.' He suggested that the annual meeting of the Society should be held in Whit-week in London, and occasional meetings elsewhere, at which papers might be read to be afterwards printed in the Transactions of the Society, together with other contributions and notes on points of historical interest.

Mr. Ronald P. Jones, in seconding the resolution, drew attention to the distinctive architectural features in some of the older meeting houses which were well worthy of study.

The motion was supported by Miss L. Tagart, Mr. Charles Fenton, and others, and carried unanimously.

Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., was appointed treasurer. The subscription for ordinary members is 5s., which entitles to free copies of the Transactions.

The Rev. W. H. Burgess, of Plymouth, was appointed Secretary. The following gentlemen were elected as Vice-Presidents: John Campbell, M.D. (Belfast), the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A. (Aberdare), the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, M.A., D.D. (Oxford), John C. Warren, M.A. (Nottingham). The Council to consist of Miss L. Tagart, the Revs. W. C. Bowie, E. D. Priestley Evans, F. K. Freeston, R. Travers Herford, James Harwood, F. H. Jones, Clement E. Pike, H. D. Roberts, C. J. Street, W. G. Tarrant, and W. Whitaker, with Messrs. Charles Fenton, Ronald P. Jones and Francis Nicholson. The Rev. Alexander Gordon was invited to become President of the Society, but has declined.

THE Annual Proceedings in connection with the closing of the session at the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, are announced to take place on Tuesday, June 29. The Visitor's Address will be given by the Rev. A. W. Fox on 'The Bible and the Preacher.' The Service in Cross Street Chapel, dedicating to the work of the ministry the students who have finished their course, will be conducted by the Rev. Alfred Hall. Owing to the war the usual Garden Party in the grounds of the College will not be held.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church.—The Sunday Schools of the Old Meeting Church celebrated their 128th Anniversary on Sunday last. A choir of children had been trained by Miss Butler, senior teacher of the Girls' Afternoon School, to sing the hymns, which were rendered in an exceedingly pleasant manner; the purity and sweetness of the children's voices being specially marked. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas preached both morning and evening. Good congregations assembled and a large number of the parents of the children were present. The collections for the day were an increase on last year.

The Boys' Own Brigade.—The following letter signed by the Secretary, the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, has been sent to all the members of the B.O.B. who are at present serving in the Army:—

"I am writing to you on behalf of the Boys' Own Brigade Council, the members of which have lately held their annual meeting, to send you their united greetings, their good wishes, and their hope that all goes well with you. You may be interested to know that over 120 members and old members (officers and boys) of the Brigade have answered the call to arms as you yourself have done, and are now serving in various capacities in His Majesty's Forces, on land and sea. We at home have you all constantly in our thoughts, and we are proud to think that from your connection with the Boys' Own Brigade you may have gained something of that bodily health and vigour, that courage and manliness, that willingness to give yourself for a high cause, which sustain you in your present work. We trust that the memory of your B.O.B. days is a strength and inspiration to you, a constant support in those hours (and they must often come) when there is demanded of you all your self-reliance, all that is chivalrous, honourable and pure in your nature. You are enrolled in an army that is pledged to fight for the establishment of great and fundamental principles of integrity and international right, to oppose the spirit of hatred and the lust for supremacy—a hard task this, and one in which you must be constantly face to face with grave difficulties, and incitement towards less exalted aims. In such moments may the counter-spell of the old motto come to you with its clear challenge, 'Quit you like men—Be strong.' May your eye be set upon victory, not merely for our Empire and our Allies, but for honour, justice and goodwill, and your strength be 'as the strength of ten.' Our earnest hope is that you may be spared to come back once more—and soon—to civic life, and to join with us in the work of the Boys' Own Brigade, striving to lay the foundations of a just and lasting peace in the lives of the boys who now fill our ranks; and who look with eager expectation for your return."

Horsham.—The Rev. A. V. Moody, who has resigned the pulpit of the Free Christian Church, conducted farewell services on Sunday, June 13th.

Hull.—The Annual Meeting of the Congregation of Park Street Church was held on June 8, when the annual letter from the minister (the Rev. Lawrence Clare) was read, and reports of the Committee and various societies were presented. Notwithstanding the terrible times through which the nation is passing, reference to which is made in all the reports, the affairs of the church are in a satisfactory condition. As the minister writes:—"The church has risen splendidly to meet the added responsibilities of the time. The school premises have been offered for hospital purposes, money has been raised freely whenever an appeal has been made, and all the work of the church and institutions has been fully maintained." Numbers of young men have volunteered for military service, and to them minister and congregation extend sincerest gratitude. The extension scheme is now completed, and the mortgage paid off. This means the addition to the premises of commodious school-rooms and lecture hall, and other accommodation, the entire cost, over £2,500, having been subscribed by the congregation.

Knutsford.—The Sunday School Anniversary and Flower Services were conducted last Sunday morning and afternoon by the Rev. Dr. S. H. Mellone. The collections, with donations, amounted to £11 11s. 11d. With the close of the present month the Rev. G. A. Payne completes a quarter of a century as minister of Knutsford and Allostock Chapels.

Liverpool.—Mr. Harmon Taylor, who terminates his course at the Home Missionary College this month, has been appointed Assistant Minister at Ullet Road Church. Mr. Taylor, who won distinction as a classical scholar at the Manchester Grammar School, where he was educated, subsequently studied medicine at the University of Manchester with the intention of being a Medical Missionary. He expects to become fully qualified shortly as a medical practitioner, and will thus be able to serve his country and the church in a twofold capacity. It is expected that Mr. Taylor will begin his work at Ullet Road Church on the first Sunday in July.

Manchester, Willert Street Mission.—On the commencement of his work as Missionary at the Willert Street Domestic Mission, Mr. S. Crook of Bolton was welcomed by the congregation and by the President and Committee of the Domestic Mission Society on Thursday, June 3rd. A Dedication Service was held in the chapel, conducted by the Revs. W. Whitaker and A. W. Timmis, and the charge to the congregation and missionary was given by the Rev. Dendy Agate. At a Welcome Meeting which took place in the schoolroom, the President, Mr. G. H. Leigh, J.P., extended a very cordial welcome to Mr. Crook, and other speakers were Mrs. Woodhouse, representing the Collyhurst Recreation Room, Mrs. Albert Nicholson (Provincial Assembly), the Rev. J. Morley Mills (District Association), Mr. Taylor of Bolton, Mr. W. T. Pritchard and Mr. Crook. Suitable musical selections were given by Mr. Bauerkeller.

Moseley.—The Sunday School Anniversary was held at the Dennis Road Council School on June 6. The preacher in the morning was the minister, the Rev. Stanley R. Gibbon, and in the evening the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas of the Old Meeting Church. The collections were slightly larger than last year.

North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association.—We have received the first number of The North Midland Circular, published by the executive committee for free distribution among the members of the churches connected with the Association. The Circular takes for its motto Mazzini's words, "We believe in association (which is but the active belief in one God, one Law, one End) as the method of progress," and its purpose is set forth in the following passage from the editorial:—"Our watchword shall be association. Constantly there will be found in these pages the call for closer co-operation among our churches and reiterated insistence upon the importance of the District Associations. For it is our deepening conviction that if our churches are to be welded into a strong and potent body—not a heterogeneous congeries of undisciplined and individualistic units, but a well articulated association of churches, possessing a high-toned esprit de corps, expert in working together, differing perhaps in personality, but with one mind and one voice upon broad, essential issues, then the District Association must work as they have never worked before. They must foster the life of the churches within their borders, linking up the rich and the poor, the large and the successful, and the small and struggling, in a true comradeship. They must inspire their companies with the larger battalion spirit, and then in the great warfare each battalion will provide its own distinctive and worthy contribution to the whole, and the army in which we rejoice to march will swing along to victory with measured, even tread, and a rousing song." The contents include items of news about the churches at Belper, Boston, Chesterfield, Coalville, Derby, Gainsborough, Hinckley, Ilkeston, Leicester, Lincoln, Loughborough, Newark, Northampton, and Nottingham, in addition to reports of meetings in connection with the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association, the North Midland Sunday School Association, Lay Preachers' Union, and Ministers' Association.

Nottingham.—At the Annual Meeting of the High Pavement Chapel Congregation, the Chairman, Mr. J. T. Perry, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to the various activities which had been taken up in such an earnest spirit of self-sacrifice during the troubled period of the war, and said they were fortunate in having such a minister as Mr. Ballantyne, who not only gave them thoughtful sermons but was constantly looking after the interests of the institutions connected with the Church. The year had been a very trying one, and they could not be surprised that collections and subscriptions had been reduced. The financial warden, in presenting the statement of accounts, also spoke in cordial terms of Mr. Ballantyne's work, the full effects of which, he said, they would not see for another two or three years. Mr. Wilford recorded a great improvement in the Sunday School in consequence of appeals which had been made for help, and Mr. Dixon Lee specially emphasised the value of the liturgy in use at the Church. The service, he said, had a spiritual effect which he did not feel in any other church, and he hoped as little alteration would be made in it as possible. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Gallimore, the retiring Secretarial Warden, to whom the congregation is extremely grateful for the thoroughness of his work. The Secretary (Miss Winsor) and committee of the Belgian Home and those responsible for the other good works arising out of the war were also thanked. Mr. W. E. Goddard was appointed Auditor for the next two years in place of Mr. Ellis, and Mr. Wilford was elected to serve as Secretarial Warden also for a period of two years. The report refers with much regret to the resignation of Miss Phillips, who terminated her ministry at Christ Church on April 18th, and is now at Carlisle. The number of names on the Chapel Roll of Honour has now reached fifty-four, and a complete list of those who have joined the forces will be given in the July number of The Chronicle.

Oldbury.—The Anniversary Services in connection with the Unitarian Sunday School were held on May 30th, the sermon in the morning being preached by the Minister, the Rev. H. C. Hawkins, and in the evening by the Rev. T. Graham, Missionary of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. In the afternoon the Rev. E. Allport (Primitive Methodist) addressed the children. The services were continued on the following Sunday, the preachers being, in the morning, Mr. Hawkins, and in the evening, the Rev. S. R. Gibbon, of Moseley. Mr. Alfred Burges, who has been the Sunday School Superintendent for over thirty-three years, has been presented with a copy of his portrait which has been placed in the vestry as a permanent record of his long and self-denying service. The amount realised by the collections on the two Sundays exceeded the receipts of last year by over £2.

Southampton.—The Rev. A. V. Moody, till recently Minister of the Free Christian Church, Horsham, has accepted an invitation to the Church of the Saviour, Southampton.

Walsley (Bolton).—The Annual Sermons were preached on Sunday, June 13. Mrs. Cropper of Eagley, conducted the morning service. In the afternoon and evening the preacher was the Rev. J. Ewart Jenkins, of Birkenhead. The collections amounted to £48.

Walthamstow.—The late Miss Eliza Jones, who died on the 8th inst. at South Chingford, Essex, at the age of 83 years, may still be remembered by some of the older members connected with the London Domestic Mission. She was a member of the Chapel Street Mission for many years before the removal of the congregation to George's Row, and she continued to attend at the latter during the first four or five years of the ministry of the Rev. F. Summers. On her removal to Walthamstow she attended as often as possible various meetings and services at some of our London churches until the Unitarian congregation was started locally, when she closely identified herself with the movement, and in a humble way rendered what assistance she could. For some time past, however, her advanced age and infirmity had prevented her attending the church, but to the last she felt the greatest interest in it. The interment took place at Walthamstow Cemetery on Saturday last, the Rev. W. H. Rose conducting the funeral service.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	£3,466,000
Claims Paid exceed	£16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax. Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Winter Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoralby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

CHORLEY WOOD.—Charming COUNTRY COTTAGE TO LET, FURNISHED. Three Bedrooms, Two Sitting-rooms, Kitchen, good Hall, and Bathroom (h. and c.). Delightfully situated by a wood, and surrounded by very beautiful country. Fine views. About an acre of ground. Three Guineas a Week for Three to Nine Months. Within twelve minutes of station, G.C. and Met. Railways.—X. L., INQUIRER Office.

CLIFTONVILLE. — BOARD RESIDENCE. Mrs. J. H. S. COOPER, "Seacroft," Norfolk Road, Cliftonville, Margate, recommended by many friends at Highgate Church. Terms on application.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD LINEN. Hem-stitched Cotton Pillow Cases, size 18 by 28 inches, bundle of four, 2s. 11d.; postage 4d.; Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 19, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCH
FOR THE MINISTRY
Bryn Mawr, Pa.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3808.
NEW SERIES, No. 911.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June

27. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON (late Minister of Essex Church, Kensington).

July

4. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

11. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

18. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

STAND UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

107th Anniversary Sunday School Sermons

will be preached

TO-MORROW, SUNDAY, THE 27th.

Preacher, Morning and Evening,

Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., of Southport.

Afternoon Preacher,

Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Heywood.

Services at 10.45 a.m., 3 p.m., and 6.30 p.m.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

(ESTABLISHED 1828.)

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE,
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY

The Honorary Secretary, Mr.
Ronald Bartram, having joined His Majesty's Army, it is requested that ALL COMMU-NICATIONS concerning the work of the Society be sent to
Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON,
4, Ella Road, Crouch Hill, N.

CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL, HIGHGATE, N.

Applications are invited (a) for the SPEARS
SCHOLARSHIP, value Thirty Pounds a year,
tenable by a Unitarian Minister's Daughter, and covering the full school fees for board and tuition at Channing House.

(b) Also for the COMMITTEE'S SCHOLAR-
SHIP of Fifteen Guineas a year, tenable in the School for two years. Candidates must be under Fourteen on the day of Examination, JULY 9th.

For particulars of both Scholarships apply to the HEAD MISTRESS at the School.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

A SCHOLARSHIP of £20 is offered for COM-PETITION in JULY; age limit 14. Also an ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP of £20 for Boys
under 11. Particulars on application.

Scholarship and Entrance Examination—
JULY 9th.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for
boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut. - Col.
Stephenson, Cawnpore, India.

Fees. —25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon. Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

Channing House School, Highgate, N.

WANTED, in September, RESIDENT
MATHEMATICAL MISTRESS. Unitarian. Degree essential. —Apply, stating age, experience, qualifications, to Miss L. TALBOT
at the School.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, June 27.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. B. J. EDWARDS.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. P. FARLEY, B.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 Mr. W. T. COLYER; 7, Mr. KATO, of Japan.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Dr. THOMSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbeldon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, D.D.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 {DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 {STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. O. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. A. MELLOR, M.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. F. TURLAND.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45, Mr. V. A. DENNANT, B.Sc.; 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN W. LEE.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. J. KINSMAN.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.

PETO-HARDING.—On the 21st inst., at Leigh-on-Sea, while on leave from the Front, Warrant Officer (Class 2), Ernest Peto to Alice Rhoda Harding, fourth daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Harding.

DEATHS.

CHITTY.—On June 18th, at "Mildura," Dover, George William Chitty, of "Belmont," Ightham, Kent, in his 73rd year.

HIRST.—On June 18th, Hannah Oakes, wife of Rev. J. Crowther Hirst, of Gateacre.

JONES.—Killed in action at Hooze, on June 16th, Harry Dukinfield Jones, Private, H.A.C., aged 25, youngest son of E. Dukinfield Jones, of Castro, Reigate.

LUPTON.—On June 19th, in France, aged 28 years, Capt. Maurice Lupton, 7th Battalion West Yorkshire Regt., second son of F. M. Lupton, of Leeds.

RAWSTHORN.—Between June 16—18. Killed in action in France, 2nd Lieut. Aldred Eric Rawsthorn, 1/4th Loyal North Lancashire Regt. (T.F.) and of Balliol College, Oxford, aged 23, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Rawsthorn, Ashton-on-Ribble, Preston.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER, 43, strong, capable, and reliable, requires SITUATION as Housekeeper to Gentleman, or as Matron to School. Present situation 11 years with widower who is marrying. Thoroughly conversant with household requirements. Economical manageress.—Apply Miss F. M. DEYNS, Marks, Longdown, near Exeter.

ORGAN FOR SALE, Two Manuals, in Case, fairly good condition.—Address inquiries to Rev. JOHN ELLIS, 175, Mottram Road, Stalybridge.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words, or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	311
TREASURES OF THE SOUL	313
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	313
THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND: MESSAGES FROM FRANCE	314
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Ministers and the Army	314
Christianity and the War	314

A Plea for the Layman	315
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Eighteenth-Century Nonconformity	315
The Work of a Great Parish	315
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Captain Maurice Lupton	316
2nd Lieut. A. E. Rawsthorn	316

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund	316
Manchester College, Oxford	316
Speech Day at Willaston School	317
Humanitarian League	318
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	319
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	320

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

AN appeal has appeared in the Press in the last few days on behalf of the Belgian Red Cross Hospitals. It is an object which has our heartiest sympathy, but as some of the statements made may suggest questions from some of the contributors to our own "Belgian Hospital Fund" a few words of explanation will not be out of place. The bulk of the Belgian hospitals for sick and wounded are military hospitals. They are under the direct control of the army and do not receive help from the Red Cross funds. In Calais, for instance, there are only one or two Red Cross hospitals, all the others, and there are at least 20 of them, are military. It is the latter which have been our special care. We are providing them with a good deal of the equipment and medical requisites which they need, and we have reason to believe that the methods of quiet work which we have adopted have been very acceptable. We hope that the Belgian Red Cross will receive all the support it needs for the group of hospitals under its care. It will not affect our special department of work in any way. Both are needed, and there is no overlapping.

* * *

MANY of our readers are specially interested in the civilian work which we have been able to undertake as a small addition to our main effort. They will be glad to hear that the small hospital under the care of Mme. L——, to which we referred last week, is now in full working order. In the course of a fortnight a house was secured, all the necessary cleaning and painting was done, beds for twenty patients were installed, the nursing was put in the charge of two Sisters, and now sick mothers and little children and broken down old men are being tenderly nursed back to health before they continue their journey to the districts further south, where they must seek a temporary home. A distinguished visitor, who inspected it the other day, described all the arrangements as "admirable." This hospital is in a special sense under our care, and we are responsible for most of the expense. Mrs. Allen has formed the highest opinion of Mme. L—— and her special capacity for this kind of work.

* * *

OUR subscription list this week contains two items of special interest. One is a donation from the Hibbert Trust. We hope that we are not betraying a secret when we say that the Trustees decided not to hold their annual dinner this year. They have chosen a better way. The other gift is one of a guinea contributed by the infants in one of the poorest schools in London. This is the second donation which these babies have sent us. It will be seen that we are within sight of £5,000. May we suggest that there should be a pleasant competition among our readers this week to bring the fund up to that amount, and to start the next thousand well on its way. It will be remembered that if the value of the gifts which we have received in kind is included the figure must be almost doubled.

* * *

PUBLIC interest in the War Loan has been so keen this week as almost to dwarf the importance of the military operations. The primary object is to provide the gigantic funds necessary to carry on the war and to charm money out of cautious or unwilling pockets. But the Government has succeeded at the same time in launching a scheme, which has in it the possibilities of vast social benefits. The economic insecurity of the wage-earner has long been one of the most dismal features of English life. For the first time every inducement has been given him to invest his savings in an attractive Government stock. Possibly the large increase of capitalism on a small scale will tend to strengthen some of the conservative forces in the country; but the creation of common financial interests will do more than anything else to break down the political cleavage between the rich and the poor, and to substitute a sound conception of public policy for the class antagonisms, which have grown so rapidly in the sharpness of their menace in recent years.

* * *

THE great speech which Mr. Lloyd George made in the House of Commons on Wednesday will give the country just the tonic which it needs. In the first place it was business and not sentiment, and it was business touched with imagination and daring in its grasp. We have had more than enough of grumbling and advice and vague appeals for unity during the past few weeks. We want a practical scheme and he presented it, carefully planned in all its details. Moreover, in its candour and frankness it fits exactly the altered mood of the nation. It was a challenge to shoulder a very hard but not an insuperable task. "At first," he said, "we assumed that victory was our due and tribute by fate. We now see that our problem is to organise victory and not to take it for granted." Mr. Lloyd George has evidently won a fine moral victory in his negotiations with the Trade Unions. He brushed the spectre of compulsion aside, as he unfolded his voluntary scheme with the confidence of a man who is sure of his ground. "Not only do I hope, but I believe it will succeed, and, of course, it will be ever so much better that it should, for if it does it will give us the service of willing men."

* * *

WE have received the first number of The Laymen's Bulletin published by the Laymen's Missionary Movement in Great Britain and Ireland. It takes for its motto the words: "The cause of the marvellous growth of the Early Church lay, not in her apostles and apologists or martyrs, but in the faithful daily life of the average common Christian." The motive which has called it into existence is the demand which is made upon all of us, that we should be good men amid the strain and excitement of the present crisis. It addresses itself, not to the immediate demands of the military situation or the discussion of terms of peace, but to the need of stronger faith and the desire for fellowship in the deep concerns of the spiritual life. The Laymen's movement, it is stated, was started "as an expression of the deep unity which exists between men who, holding different opinions upon many matters, desire to recognise God as the dominating factor in human life, and as a summons to the application of faith in Christ 'as the one Saviour and Light of the World,' to all the problems and needs of men of every race."

* * *

THE remarkable series of pamphlets known as "Papers for War Time," published by the Oxford University Press, owes its origin to the Movement, and is an admirable expression of its temper and aim. It has also organised a Conference of Laymen in Oxford which will meet in Balliol College Hall this week-end. The numbers have been limited to under 200, but it is expected that a remarkable group will be drawn together, including some leaders in State and Church, representatives of the business and professional world, and several working men. Those of us who cannot be present will have an opportunity of reading an account of this Oxford Conference in the next number of the Bulletin which will be issued in September.

* * *

THIS first number of the Bulletin contains an article by Viscount Bryce on "The immediate duty of Christian men," which is remarkable for the directness and simplicity of its religious appeal.

The call [he says] is to each of us to begin with his own soul and his own life. We can try to think of what each can do to make the Gospel of love and self-forgetfulness fill his thoughts and guide his conduct. We can endeavour to eschew passion and bitterness. We may do what each of us can to see that our people treat with justice and consideration those innocent persons among us who belong to hostile nations. We must use material weapons against foreign foes, and trust that our arms will prevail through the power which stirs and strengthens those who champion a just cause. But we must never forget that it is by the moral forces that the truest and most lasting victories are won, and that hatred and vengeance are not only unworthy of a great nation and a Christian nation, but defeat their own aims, for they perpetuate the miseries from which the world is suffering. We must try not to break the ties that ought to bind together those who in every nation have faith in the God of righteousness and mercy, and believe that He can and will bring good out of evil.

* * *

IN the June number of Goodwill, which is the organ of the British Group of the World Alliance of Churches for promoting International Friendship, the announcement is made that future issues will probably appear at longer than monthly intervals. Hitherto the magazine has made a strong plea for the spirit of peace and conciliation, and has devoted itself chiefly to dissipating prejudice and to the salvage of every shred of friendship and good feeling between ourselves and the men and women of Germany. With a reluctance which does them all honour and must be shared by all who have enjoyed German friendship and hospitality in the past, the promoters have come to the conclusion that we must recognise quite candidly the deep moral estrangement which separates us from the German people at the present time. Referring to the report of Lord Bryce's Committee on Atrocities in Belgium they write as follows:—

There are limits to the possibility of silence; and, earnestly as we have sought to leave to others the necessary task of censure, a situation has arisen in which we cannot refrain from the clearest statement. Precisely the most Christian elements in Britain are most deeply stirred, and life-long labourers for peace and goodwill are among those who to-day see in the actions and methods of Germany the deadliest peril not merely to the future relations between the lands immediately concerned, but to civilisation itself.

* * *

WE agree with this statement, and it follows that we must accept the impossibility of doing anything effective at the present time to restore relations of friendship between ourselves and Germany. To turn a blind eye to the moral tragedy is out of the question, and no good purpose can be served by appeals to sentiments of trust and cordiality which evoke no public response. But Goodwill need not on that account retire dispirited from the field. It has, perhaps, made the mistake of dwelling too exclusively upon the German aspect of its problem. Let it now turn its attention chiefly to cultivating the spirit of friendship and mutual understanding in quarters where enmity is dead but ignorance still lingers. The alliance in arms needs to be cemented by an alliance of the spirit. Let it try to win the admiration of our insular intelligence for the noblest elements in the life of France and Belgium, of Russia, Italy and Servia. We have to help one another not only to conquer in the field but also to act in a Christian spirit, with mutual forbearance should questions of difficulty arise, with a readiness to subordinate the interests of party to the good of Europe as a whole, and at all times with chivalry and magnanimous justice towards our foes.

* * *

THE proceedings at the close of the session at Manchester College, Oxford, last week were rendered memorable by the cordial tributes which were paid to Principal Carpenter upon his retirement. We tried to express our policy of personal admiration and of gratitude for his long and manifold services to the College when his resignation was announced a few months ago. We can only repeat what we said then and associate ourselves most heartily with the official resolution of the trustees and the affectionate greetings of his old students. For forty years he has given his life to the noble work of training men for the warfare in which there is no discharge, of justice against oppression, of light against darkness, of love against every form of wrong. In that warfare we crown him as a veteran, we trust him as a leader, and we revere him as a generous and unfailing friend.

TREASURES OF THE SOUL.

WE have referred more than once to the destruction of Rheims Cathedral as one of the irreparable losses of the war. The latest report of its condition leaves little hope that much of its perfect beauty will be saved. After a visit of inspection last week the President of the Fine Arts Commission, who described the damage as enormous, issued the following statement:—"Besides the tapestries, the State has collected all the fragments of statues and windows broken by the bombardments, and taken them to a place of safety. Practically speaking nothing is left of the cathedral but the silhouette. The Fine Arts Administration has prepared plans for its restoration, and they will be executed as far as events permit. It will be absolutely impossible to restore the original beauty of the cathedral, but everything possible will be done."

Some people ask us impatiently, "Why should we think of these things now? Why trouble ourselves about a building more or less in the midst of this appalling human tragedy? It is the lives of men that matter, not carved stones and painted glass." But it is just our sense of the sacredness of human life, which makes us deplore so keenly the loss of a sanctuary into which an untold wealth of experience was gathered for the refreshment and peace of succeeding generations. A thousand factories may be destroyed and the imagination is hardly stirred, so colossal is the destructive rage of this war; but the thought of that mighty church at Rheims, scarred with fire and reduced to a mere phantom of its former splendour, sends a stab of pain to the heart and leaves us desolate and afflicted. To what is this feeling due? With some of us the sentimentalism of the traveller or the delicate taste of the artist may enter into it, but the real reason lies deeper. Every shell that crashed down upon it, shattering its glass and splintering its stones, was helping to destroy one of the priceless treasures of the soul.

For consider, a building of this kind is the spiritual focus of a nation's life. As you study it with loving care or kneel beneath its mighty vault it communicates its secret to you. You know that the past is not dead, and that history is more than a record. The building has been the silent spectator of mighty events, of the crowning of kings, of the pageantry of popular triumphs, of the great days of fear and deliverance. It has also watched over the hearts of the common people who have gathered, like pilgrims returning to their home, into its dim spaces for the daily sacrifice and the unceasing ministry of consolation. These things have entered into its stones; it has become part of all that it has seen; and it breathes the glow of their passion or the radiance of their peace into all who tread its courts.

Moreover the destruction of anything that bears upon it the image and super-scription of high and enthralling beauty is in its way far more terrible than the cutting short of a single life. We can understand the poet or the artist saying, "You may kill me but you must not murder my work, for that is myself, and through it I shall speak long after my name is forgotten." We live again in our children, and for most of us that is our only memorial. But the artists of long ago, who peopled Rheims with a glorious company of prophets and saints and filled its rose-window with the jewels of heaven, have linked their lives with ours through the things which they created, and for them the light of life is quenched only when the hand of the destroyer has ravaged everything in which their soul can dwell. This is the real tragedy of the destruction of Rheims. It leaves the world poorer in spiritual influence and power. One of the living scriptures of God has been defaced, and no one can put the soul back into the shattered fragments. Whatever other hands may create to guide the faltering steps of men and inspire their highest thought, nothing can repair this savage waste of the treasures of the soul or turn the grim act of death into the glory of life.

And for the French people no good thing which the future may have in store for them can replace what they have lost. Soon may the blessings of peace be theirs! Soon may the vineyards resound with the songs of them that make merry! But still, as they remember their desecrated shrine, and their hearts are heavy with the bitterness of bereavement, the dirge of the prophet will be upon their lips: "Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned with fire, and all our pleasant things are laid waste. Wilt thou refrain thyself for these things, O Lord? Wilt thou hold thy peace and afflict us very sore?"

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

I with uncovered head
Salute the sacred dead,
Who went and who return not.—Say not so!
'Tis not the grapes of Canaan that repay,
But the high faith that failed not by the way;
Virtue treads paths that end not in the grave;
No bar of endless night exiles the brave;
And to the saner mind
We rather seem the dead that stayed behind.
Blow, trumpets, all your exultations blow!
For never shall their aureoled presence lack:
I see them muster in a gleaming row,
With ever-youthful brows that nobler show;
We find in our dull road their shining track;
In every nobler mood
We feel the orient of their spirit glow,
Part of our life's unalterable good,
Of all our saintlier aspiration;
They come transfigured back,
Secure from change in their high-hearted ways,
Beautiful evermore, and with the rays
Of morn on their white Shields of Expectation. LOWELL.

THE STRENGTH OF ENGLAND.

THE strength of England lies not in armaments and invasions; it lies in the omnipresence of her industry, and in the vivifying energies of her high civilisation. There are provinces she cannot grasp; there are islands she cannot hold fast; but there is neither island nor province, there is neither kingdom nor continent, which she could not draw to her side and fix there everlastingly, by saying the magic words, "Be free." Every land wherein she favours the sentiments of freedom, every land wherein she but forbids them be stifled, is her own; a true ally, a willing tributary, an inseparable friend. Principles hold those together whom power would only alienate.

W. S. LANDOR.

ALMIGHTY GOD, in whom is calmness, peace, and concord, heal the divisions which separate thy children from one another, and enable them to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. May we be made one in brotherly love, and in devotion to thy will. Deliver us from all blindness and prejudice, from all clamour and evil speaking, that by the charity of our hearts and the sincerity of our lives, we may show forth the power and beauty of the religion we profess, to the glory of thy holy name.

AMEN.

THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

MESSAGES FROM FRANCE.

FROM the mass of correspondence which has reached Mrs. Allen recently we have selected a few passages which will convey to our readers the grateful thanks of the Belgian Hospitals, and give some idea of the personal care and the spirit of friendship with which the work is carried on.

From a doctor in charge of a hospital.

"You can scarcely realise what happiness your generosity has brought to my patients, or with what feelings of gratitude they bless the name of your country. If we have been thrilled with admiration for the exploits of our own heroic soldiers on the field of battle, if we have mourned in sympathy with their bereaved families, are not our hearts also stirred by the noble impulses of your countrymen which prompt them to send such help to those who are in need?"

From a doctor in charge of a hospital for throat and ear injuries.

"Rest assured, Madame, of the profound gratitude of all the Belgians, who will never forget the spontaneous and ready help which the whole English nation have given them. Words cannot express our feelings; I can only say with all my heart and a thousand times, thank you!"

From another hospital doctor.

"If there is any one thing that could soften the bitterness through which our country is passing, it is assuredly the sympathy which we have received from England."

From a general in charge of a convalescent camp.

"We are very grateful for this latest gift—one of the many gifts which we owe to the generosity of the English nation. I hasten to express my gratitude for this new proof of your kindness. It will be a great boon to our convalescents, and will help towards their more rapid recovery."

From a doctor at the front.

"I am delighted to receive the case of medical instruments which you have sent. It is a real treasure. I shall take the greatest care of it, but shall use it constantly."

From a matron at a hospital.

"I assure you that all of us Belgians will always remember you and your inexhaustible charity, and will be eternally grateful to you."

Lastly, we may give a few extracts from letters received this week from Mr. Kelland, the official representative of the Fund in France.

"I managed to visit—and see l'Abbé P.—. This hospital is really looking very well; the lower salle was excellent—white walls, beds, tables, beautiful flowers, and flags all over. All were very delighted with the last consignment.... I also visited No. 120 [the house in which the new hospital for refugees has been installed] and saw Madame L—. The papering is getting on, the white-washing finished. It will be possible to get twenty beds in.... The two religieuses are due in to-morrow, and Madame L— hopes to have refugees in on Tuesday. So much for the new undertaking."

The following account was written from a French country-house within sound of the booming of the guns:—

"This is a most delightful place—bungalow, lawn, roses, arbours, shrubs, flower beds, all in perfect order, calm and peaceful as any corner in England; but every two or three minutes comes—like distant thunder or the rumbling of breakers on the beach—the sound of the guns, the firing around Ypres. And this afternoon we had the most picturesque old-world procession of the village children clad in white, with the women and the old men and the priests and the statue of the Virgin, singing hymns and chanting prayers, scattering flowers and branches, banners of the church at the head, flags of the Allies in the rear—the country people going round the lanes praying 'Notre Dame des Champs' to bless the 'cultivateurs d'Autingues,' and give them a good harvest. And always the guns—peace and war! It is incomprehensible!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

MINISTERS AND THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is very gratifying to read in this week's INQUIRER the admirable letter from Dr. Jacks, and perhaps his advice will prevent any more of our ministers tying themselves up in hopeless knots. Mr. Lloyd Thomas has now for some weeks been giving us muddled apologetics, and according to his latest it seems that the Christian Minister in the matter of recruiting and fighting ought to follow the example of that wily bird, the Jubjub, who "lives in perpetual passion," and whose method has been set forth so picturesquely by the poet:—

"In Charity Meetings it stands at the door,

And collects—though it does not subscribe."

For myself I have tried, with more or less success, humbly to follow the advice of that poet who has told us that

"He who fights and runs away, Shall live to fight another day."

But to meet present circumstances I venture, for the benefit of my brother ministers and myself, to suggest the following slight variation—

"He who now avoids the strife

Can preach on fighting all his life."

—Yours, &c., R. H. U. BLOOR.

Exeter, June, 21, 1915.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Raad's letter is almost a challenge to those who disagree with him. Let him be assured that if others have a different opinion it is not without deep searchings of heart, and because of considerations which many appear to overlook. Your correspondent's standpoint is that Jesus taught otherworldliness, that ministers are the only ones called upon to live that life completely, while the laity may do so in part, and in part devote themselves to this world's attractions and ambitions. Mr. Lloyd Thomas's article appears written from the same outlook. It is the great delusion of the day. What mankind needs is that secular life should be made holy and the spiritual life made practical, only so will the world be regenerated. Jesus lived up to his own ideal, so far as any man could, by seeking no worldly possessions, and having no wife or child. But inasmuch as he had to live on the ministrations of others, His life was a proof that the material and the spiritual must be conjoined. The ministerial life of to-day is very different. To make the briefest reference to the economic aspect, it would be easy to show that the average ministerial income is rather above that of the laity, and that ministers live more sheltered lives the mortality tables would alone be sufficient to show.

I wish rather, however, to dwell upon the general question. Can we judge of Jesus' attitude by quoting isolated sayings? It is extremely dangerous. "Let your communication be Yea, Yea and Nay, Nay, for whatsoever is more cometh of evil." How hard to reconcile this saying with his calling his opponents "hypocrites," "offspring of vipers, and children of the devil!" Then it must be borne in mind that all His teachings were coloured by the thought that the order of things under which He lived was coming to an end within a few years. Facts have shown that He was wrong; we live in the twentieth century, and so far as we can see there is every reason to believe that the present order of things is practically permanent. The problem to-day is, therefore: How in a practically permanent world order we are to endeavour to interpenetrate human life with the Christian ethic and its spiritual ideals? To appeal to isolated teachings given 2,000 years ago under a totally different outlook is not going to help us much.

The thoughtful feel that they are in the midst of great problems which have not been solved and may remain mysteries. The relation of matter to spirit, for instance. Many are of opinion that they are two aspects of the one Reality, and that God is immanent in both. In one respect, wars appear to be in the same category as earthquakes and tornadoes, there is an accumulation of menacing force, and it has to be dispersed before the whole system can be made healthy. One cannot claim space to go into these great questions. Let me, however, assure those who in the name of Christ feel it necessary not to identify themselves with the spirit of the nation, that we who think otherwise are no less true to our spiritual allegiance, and that if we are ready to "laugh with those who laugh, and weep with those who weep," yea, and fight with those who fight, we are still true to the abiding power of faith and hope and love, but think that the best way of spreading these ideals is by serving them whole, sharing the common life of our race. Above all, let not the man who regards his life as wholly devoted to spiritual ends look down on his brother; perhaps the roadmender who found his soul filled with beautiful things while breaking stones by the roadside is nearer to the kingdom.—Yours, &c.

E. CAPLETON.

113, Highbury New Park, N.
June 22, 1915.

A PLEA FOR THE LAYMAN.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The difference between the Christian minister and the Christian layman, as described by your correspondent, Mr. Raad, calls for critical comment. I quote these words as printed in the letter of your last issue:—"The difference between a Christian minister and a Christian layman is simply the difference between one who has given up this world for God, and one who, while striving to follow Christ in many things, still adheres to the standards of this world in business and pleasure in personal ambition and aggrandisements." The atmosphere of the cloister seems to breathe through these words. One is made to feel he is back again in the days when the influence of monastic life was supreme, and when an arbitrary distinction between the sacred and the secular made religion such an artificial thing. The Christian ministry wore a halo in those days, but surely it has long since disappeared.

I have very great respect for the Christian minister's calling. Without it the world would be much the poorer. The religious life of the people, through lack of the knowledge for which the Christian minister is usually given a life of greater leisure to acquire, would be more subject to the perils of superstition and fanaticism than it has been in the past. It needs the guidance of an educated Christian ministry to keep it intellectually sane. But it is conceding far too much to the Christian minister to say that he alone has "given up the world for God," whilst the Christian layman "still adheres to the standards of the world," though he may strive "to follow Christ in many things." Indeed, the modern Christian minister does not "give up the world" at all in the sense in which that phrase was originally used. Vows of poverty are not now expected of nor are they taken by the Christian minister, and so the line of distinction which your correspondent draws between the Christian minister and the Christian layman in this connection is as artificial as it is invidious. The Christian minister, however, is expected to give up the spirit of worldliness and to refrain from slavishly following those standards of the world which are out of harmony with the moral sense. Only in that way can he be said to give up the world for God. But the same thing is expected of the Christian layman. If he did not give up the world for God in that sense there would be little hope for Christian civilisation. As a matter of fact some of the most self-sacrificing work in Christianising the world has ever been done and is still being done by layman in business and social life, and they could claim that they have "given up the world for God" in a truer sense than that in which your correspondent applies it so exclusively to the Christian minister.—Yours, &c.

J. W. PETERKEN.

Leytonstone, N.E., June 22, 1915.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY NONCONFORMITY.

By J. Hay Colligan, M.A. London: Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d. net.

THE history of Nonconformity in the eighteenth century has not yet been adequately written; nor, as Mr. Colligan says, will this be done till a great deal more research in local records has taken place. So far there is nothing of the kind comparable with what has been achieved for the Anglican history of the period by Abbey and Overton. It is a subject that demands not only broad sympathies and thorough knowledge, but a fine discrimination and a freedom from sectarian bias which have not hitherto been very noticeable in the historians of nonconformity. Mr. Colligan shows himself possessed of some of the qualities requisite for the task; but he is often slipshod both in what he says and in his manner of saying it. As a first sketch of the period, however, his volume will fill a place not yet occupied, so far as we are aware, by anything quite so good. It does not, indeed, pretend to be more than a slight sketch, indicating the main episodes, controversies, institutions, divisions, and lines of development of Nonconformity during that momentous century; and those who wish to pursue the subject further will find references to many important sources of information. It would be interesting to know what grounds Mr. Colligan has for saying that "the meeting house was a building that was not used every Sunday"; he must surely be judging from the practice in some particular locality, for we think that as a rule there was service once a Sunday at least. He has necessarily much to say about the heterodox movements of the time, and on the whole he shows a good deal of sympathy with them. We find him declaring, however, that "the descent to heterodoxy is swift, after the first step has been taken," and he goes on to say that "in no other department is this so true as on the subject of the deity of Christ, and indifference to theology will inevitably appear when the cardinal doctrine of Christology has been broken." He raises here a debatable point; and our own experience does not bear out his opinion. The book in passing through the press has been read by the Rev. Alexander Gordon, and occasionally the author inserts a valuable footnote by him amplifying or correcting a statement in the text. In his concluding chapter Mr. Colligan outlines a scheme for the reconciliation of Conformity and Nonconformity based on an acceptance of "the three historic Creeds of Christendom." But such a scheme would still leave a great many Nonconformists in the land, and these would not be among the least worthy heirs of that freedom from dogmatic tests which so many of the best men in eighteenth-century Nonconformity fought for.

PORTSEA has the repute of being one of the best organised parishes in the country. Its multifarious activities and its controlling spirit of Christian faith have been described in a volume entitled THE WORK OF A GREAT PARISH, written by nine of its clergy, and edited by the present vicar, the Rev. C. F. Garbett (Longmans, Green & Co., 5s. net). The Archbishop of York has contributed an introduction, in which he speaks of the illustrative value of his former parish for those who are engaged in the task of making the Church a living power in the midst of the people. "In the course of manifold experiences of great parishes," he says, "in East London and the North of England, I have never seen anything quite like Portsea. The profit of comradeship of seventeen clergy living, praying, working together; the fidelity of the great band of workers and the loyalty of the people; the throng of confirmation candidates and of communicants; the sea of two thousand upturned faces seen from the pulpit on Sunday evenings in the noble Parish Church—these are memories which can never fade." To all who are engaged in similar work of winning souls, and helping them to find peace and security in the living Christian society with its manifold gifts of grace, a record of this kind will be rich in suggestion. It may not be possible to follow its example in details, but its directness of purpose, its high standard of faithfulness, and its power of organising religious passion for practical ends, will be an incentive to many who fear for themselves and others the influence of a growing vagueness in spiritual work, or the abandonment of methods of teaching and personal influence and pastoral care, which a great experience has consecrated for our use.

WE have received a second edition of the striking series of sermons entitled, "The Immorality of Non-Resistance," by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas. In a prefatory note he writes: "I should like to thank all who have sent me their criticisms of my views. Though it has not been possible for me to deal with these as fully as their importance deserves, I have tried, without unduly expanding the treatment or breaking into its structure, to reply to them in this new edition. (Birmingham, Cornish Brothers, Ltd., 39, New Street, 1s. net.)

"GOODWILL," of which the fifth number has just been published, is the organ of the British Group of the World Alliance of Churches for Promoting International Friendship. Copies may be had on application to the Hon. Secretary, the Right Hon. W. H. Dickinson, M.P., at the offices of the Group, 41, Parliament Street, London, S.W.

"THE LAYMEN'S BULLETIN," to which we call attention in Notes of the Week, is published by the National Laymen's Missionary Movement, 3, Tudor Street, Blackfriars, London, E.C. Subscription for four numbers, post free, 1s.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE ROLL OF HONOUR.

MAURICE LUPTON.

Captain Maurice Lupton, who was killed in action in France on Saturday, June 19, 1915, was the second son of Mr. F. M. Lupton, of Leeds. He was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge. He joined the Leeds Rifle Volunteers whilst still at College, and was sent to the Front in April.

A. E. RAWSTHORN.

2nd Lieut. Rawsthorn, of the 1/4th Loyal North Lancashires (T.F.), only son of Mr. J. J. Rawsthorn, Solicitor, of Preston, was killed in the fighting in which the battalion was engaged last week in France. He was 23 years of age. He was educated at Willaston School and Oxford, being a scholar of Balliol. He was a member of the Oxford University O.T.C., and joined the Loyal North Lancashires in August last. He was appointed Machine Gun Officer to the battalion shortly before it left England.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

23RD LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4571	11	7
H. E. H.	1	1	0
Mrs. Jolowicz, from 72, Compagne Gardens Hostel Fund (third donation, two weeks subscription)	3	10	0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. William Mackey	0	10	0
K. K. (Bolton)	0	5	0
Miss Prance (third donation)	10	0	0
Stanhope Street L.C.C. School, N.W., per Mrs. Perrin (second donation)	1	1	0
Miss A. Shannon	1	0	0
Mrs. C. G. Beale	5	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (sixth donation)	20	0	0
Mr. T. H. Terry	2	2	0
A Friend, per Mr. J. Argyle (third donation)	10	0	0
Mr. S. Gilfillan (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Miss M. E. Dunn	2	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. F. H. Jones	2	0	0
The Hibbert Trustees	15	0	0
Miss J. A. Woolley (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Kippen	0	10	0
Mrs. Thorneley (third donation)	1	1	0
R. B.	50	0	0
Miss B. McAndrew	10	10	0
A Friend, Oxford	1	1	0
Mrs. Barker	0	10	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Fund	1	16	0
	£4,716	8	7

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. A. C. Whitmee; Mrs. Barry; Miss M. E. Swaine; Mrs. E. Worthington; Miss Bowring; A Member of Ilford Unitarian Chapel; Wandsworth Women's League (per Mrs. Ernest Jones); High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, War Relief Committee (per Miss S. Guildford); Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Miss Prance; Miss Davey; Mr. A. A. Worsley; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Monton Church Women's Union (per Mrs. Nansen); Miss L. A. Russell; Mrs. Varian; Miss Gladys Tegerdine; Miss K. F. Purdon; Mr. J. F. Schwann; Camden School for Girls (per Miss Drummond); Mr. Geo. Eyre Evans and Miss Powell Evans; Mrs. Wm. Tangye; University of Bristol Women's War Fund (per Miss Worsley); Mrs. S. Martineau; Miss Eckenstein; Epsom Branch of London Society for Women's Suffrage (per Mrs. Thorneley); Mrs. Williams; Miss A. J. Partridge; Mrs. Usher; Some Ladies of the Unitarian Chapel, Preston (Miss Tabbiner, Mrs. Rowe, Miss Crewe, Miss Smith, Mrs. Whitehead); The Misses R. and J. Cobb; Miss Rowe; Miss Taylor; Mrs. Edmund Grundy; Mrs. S. Sinclair; Miss Warren; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Bootle Free Church Ladies' Work Society (per Mrs. Short).

Boots are needed for the Belgian Refugees in Calais. As announced last week we have been able to make arrangements for the repair and forwarding of boots and shoes through the kindness of Mr. A. C. Whitmee. They should be addressed to A. C. Whitmee, Esq., Belgian Hospital Fund, care of Messrs. Mulholland, 53 and 55, Seven Sisters Road, London, N.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

RETIREMENT OF DR. CARPENTER.

THE proceedings at the close of the College session, held on Thursday and Friday, June 17 and 18, were of exceptional interest and significance, on account of the retirement of Dr. Carpenter from the office of Principal, which he has held for the past nine years, and the conclusion of his forty years of service as a teacher in the College. The celebration of the opening of the new Arlosh Hall, and the presentation of Dr. Carpenter's portrait to the College, at which it was intended that a large gathering of old students and other friends should be arranged, had to be postponed because of the war, but though the numbers present at Oxford last week were only small the proceedings were satisfying in the warmth of the recognition offered to Dr. Carpenter, to some extent in the things that were said, but even more in the sense of those deeper things which words cannot express.

The annual address of the committee opened with a fitting tribute to Dr. Carpenter, and noted that while he now retires from office at the age of seventy, he still holds the Wilde Readership in Comparative Religion in the University, and it is hoped that after his return from an autumn lecturing tour in America, the College may still have the benefit of lectures from him on that subject. The address then recorded the appointment of Dr. Jacks as the new Principal, who is joined by the Rev. Henry Gow on the teaching staff as lecturer in New Testament and early Christian History. Other changes were recorded, including a radical revision of the regulations, both as to curriculum and in the matter of scholarships and exhibitions, and also the introduction of a liturgy, and a choir of men and boys for the chapel services, to be instituted in October next. The concluding reference of the address was to the deepening seriousness of life owing to the War, and the supreme need for vital religion, for consecrated lives and devoted service and deep faith in God, if we are to secure the lasting peace we desire, and build up a nobler national and international life. The sacrifice our young men have made lays upon us all a tremendous responsibility. "It must be the work of the Christian Church, above all, to take the lead in purifying and ennobling the personal and social life of our time. The training of young ministers, filled with faith in God and with the spirit of Christ is the aim of Manchester College, and it is for this work that the Committee appeals with confidence to the continued support of the subscribers."

The Visitor's Address.

The Visitor's address to the students was given on Thursday afternoon by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, and while he made no direct personal reference, the emotional stress of the time, personal, collegiate and national, could not fail to be felt in all he said. The true function of education was the subject of the address, and he quoted Wordsworth's lines :—

"We live by admiration, hope and love,
And e'en as these are well and wisely fixed

In dignity of being we ascend."

As students of the College and candidates for the Ministry, the men whom he specially addressed were there, he said, as pledged to that ideal; they wished that their life work might be to kindle such admiration, hope and love in men's hearts as should give dignity to their lives. Only education which made for that end was worthy of the name. Life itself, was the great aim, in its essential values, in the fruition of right relations with Nature, Man and God, and this had to be achieved often through the most unpromising surroundings, irksome circumstances and unlovely relations. In education two things were essential. There must be no neglect of the drudgery of severe scholarship, and yet they must secure the victory of the spirit over the letter. If they got their training out of a study of the Gospels, that must not prevent them from feeling that they had heard glad tidings. He warmly commended the students' Old Testament work, which he had examined, as of good augury for the College, since it showed a real grasp of critical principle, but at the same time true appreciation of the inspiration of the subject. And finally he referred to the time of supreme national strain and responsibility brought by the War. Some of them, he said, were fighting in the trenches, some of them were defending the fort of the spirit at home. What was it they were fighting for? Victory was a means, not an end. They were revising their judgments on many things, and the trial through which they were passing would show what things really mattered. Only a nation that had such life of the spirit as they recognised in the New Testament records as an enduring power, even under most adverse circumstance, could bring blessing to the world by a conquest of arms. Only those were worthy to win victory who could say from their hearts, our cause is so holy, so august, that it is well to fight for it; it is well to slay our brethren for it, well to sacrifice our friends, our blood, our wealth, our lives; so holy that we will sacrifice everything to it, except the Cause! They must fight and conquer, but beware lest in so doing they sacrifice the cause: "Propter vitam vivendi perdere causas."

The Valedictory Service.

The Valedictory Service was held on Thursday evening, conducted in the first part by Dr. Jacks, the farewell on behalf of the College being given by Dr. Carpenter, and the welcome into the ministry by the Rev. E. I. Fripp. Dr. Carpenter's words of farewell, spoken, as he said, for the last time, in the midst of the most appalling tragedy of history, dwelt upon the essential needs of the spirit and the call which came to them, in this time of crisis, to feed the springs of the deeper life. Mr. Fripp, in his welcome, insisted on the vital importance of the conduct of public Christian worship as the minister's first and chief duty. The world needed it, in his opinion, above everything, for its own sanity, its own happiness and progress. There must be both public and private worship. They fulfilled each other, and the minister must encourage both.

There were only two students for whom the service was held, Mr. R. Philipson, B.A., who looks forward to ministry in the Unitarian connection, and Mr. J. W. Jones, B.A., to whom first class honours in his college work and the Russell Martineau prize for Old Testament, were awarded, and who hopes to enter the ministry in his old Wesleyan Methodist connexion. Dr. Kish, to whom under happier circumstances the farewell would also have been given on his return to Hungary, is at present interned in an aliens' camp.

The Trustee's Meeting.

The annual meeting of Trustees was held in the library on Friday morning, the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, in the absence of the President, Sir John Brunner, being in the chair. Dr. Drummond was there, and among those who spoke, in addition to the chairman and Dr. Carpenter, were the Revs. C. Hargrove, Dr. Edwin Odgers, P. H. Wicksteed, Dr. Jacks, J. Harwood, T. Lloyd Jones, Dr. Blake Odgers, Messrs. G. H. Leigh, H. P. Greg, and C. Sydney Jones. A telegram from Mr. A. H. Worthington, the lay secretary, was read by his colleague, the Rev. Henry Gow, expressing great regret for his enforced absence, and a grateful tribute to Dr. Carpenter for his services to the college.

Sir John Brunner was re-elected President, and Dr. Carpenter was elected a Vice-President with Dr. Drummond and the Right Hon. W. Kenrick. To the committee three new members were added, Dr. Jacks, Mr. Lawrence Holt, and Mr. Philip M. Oliver.

After the adoption of the accounts and address, and the election of officers and committee, the following resolution, moved from the chair, seconded by Mr. H. P. Greg, and supported by the Revs. P. H. Wicksteed and Dr. Jacks, was adopted by acclamation:

"The Trustees of Manchester College, on the completion of Dr. Carpenter's term of office as Principal, after forty years of devoted work as a teacher in the college, desire to place on record their profound and affectionate gratitude to him and their sense of the inestimable value of the service he has rendered. His scholarship, his character, his devotion to the College, have been gifts the worth of which words cannot express. One generation of students after another have found in him not only a wise teacher, but a most generous and affectionate friend. His influence is felt in all the Churches in which his students carry on their ministry, and in wider fields of public service. His scholarship and personality have gained for him and for the college increasing recognition in the University of Oxford. The Trustees earnestly hope that years of strength may still be granted to him for work in his chosen field of study, and that for him and Mrs. Carpenter they may be years of deepening happiness and peace."

The speeches in connection with this resolution cannot be reported. They were rich in the tribute of gratitude and admiration and affection. They were bidding Dr. Carpenter good-bye, said Mr. Wicksteed, "with blessings on him for the work he has done for the College, and the work he is still going to do for us all." And Mr. Greg put the heart of the matter into a few simple words when he asked what had been the outstanding feature in Dr. Carpenter's life. With most of us, he said, the common question is, What can I get? "Now with Dr. Carpenter the whole problem has been, not 'What can I get?' but 'What can I give?' He has given money, we know, abundantly. He has given time, we know, abundantly; but he has given something a thousand times more valuable than time or money, he has given himself, and the best of himself. And as a result, the giver has got what the getter never gets, he has got the love and gratitude of all."

Dr. Carpenter's response must also remain unrecorded. To the disclaimer of natural humility was added happy reminiscence and thankful recognition of the growing influence and opportunities of the College at Oxford. And these were the closing words: "I pray, Sir, that in coming years the blessing of God may rest on those who labour here, on the teachers who teach, and the students who go forth to carry its principles into the work of their lives; and in gratitude for what it may have been permitted me to do, and above all for the confidence and affection which have been so generously and continuously bestowed on me from the committee, my colleagues and the students, I resign the trust committed to me."

On Friday afternoon a more private meeting of Dr. Carpenter's past and present students with him and Mrs. Carpenter was held in the library, when they presented an address signed by eighty-eight of their number. If it had not been for the stress of the war time there would have been many more names from India, America, Hungary and Japan. So it was said: "We speak, we are sure, for more than those whose names are added to this address when we say how deeply we feel this occasion, and how truly we desire that you should feel the gladness of the recognition and grateful affection with which we gather about you." It was a very happy gathering, happily concluding the proceedings of the week.

SPEECH DAY AT WILLASTON SCHOOL.

ALL roads led to Willaston on June 16, and parents and friends of the School founded fourteen years ago by Philip Barker came from the north and the south, and from the east and the west, to share in the annual celebration known as Speech Day. The weather was delightful, and this was fortunate, seeing that the whole of the proceedings excepting the actual speeches, which were delivered in the gymnasium, took place in the open-air amid the charming surroundings of the well-kept grounds.

The Headmaster (Mr. H. Lang Jones, M.A.) received the guests with his usual urbanity, being assisted in this function by Mrs. Jones, who is as popular with the boys as "the Head" himself.

The gymnasium was crowded, indeed, it is said that the attendance was larger than usual, in spite of the war. Newbolt's hymn, "In time of war and tumult," set to music by Mr. Lang Jones, was sung by the boys, and then the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, chairman of the board of governors, spoke at some length, displaying in happy combination the wisdom of age with the enthusiasm of perennial youth.

After cordially welcoming the visitors, Mr. Dowson said he was one of those to whom the late Mr. Barker left his estate, with instructions to found that school if they saw their way to do it. He heartily agreed with the trust, it was the trust of the open door in religion; it was broad enough to allow of boys being educated there from all homes, whatever might be the religious faith of their parents. Philip Barker was an ardent lover of the simple faith which was held by those who worshipped in the chapel hard by, but the deep and noble principle of his faith was his belief in the absolute freedom of thought. That was the principle of the teaching given in that school. They had in their present headmaster a man who was born in that spirit and infused that spirit into those who came under his influence. He was exceedingly proud to be the chairman of the Willaston School. Of the boys turned out from that school, fully half of them were at the present moment serving their country. That was the spirit of the public schools to-day and Willaston was taking its place among the public schools of England in the Roll of Honour. Referring to some panels on the walls, containing the names of members of the cricket and football teams, Mr. Dowson said he believed in athletics from the bottom of his heart. If ever young men wanted training in the high spirit which implies duty and service, it was to-day.

The Headmaster, in a racy speech, described the continued progress of the school. There was never a time, he said, when educational needs were more real and pressing. We used to bow down to Baal—the German system of education; but we had now found out what these German methods meant. Involved in the German system of education was an absolute compulsion of uniformity throughout the social organism, right from the beginnings of school life. In England, on the other hand, education had up to a certain point been the freest of the free. But secondary education had been gradually falling into the clutch of red tape, and, if he might be permitted to mix his metaphors, was being gradually throttled by it. He was, however, glad to say that they at Willaston had remained free and untrammelled; they had escaped from the toils of red tape, not only in their religious education but as regards their whole educational structure. Willaston School had always felt free to follow what they thought were the best lines of education, and that to a large extent was true of all public schools. They had particular advantages in that way. It seemed to him that they could put on one side the German method; they had seen the result of that. It was the method of the drill-master. They could put in force what he would rather call the method of the teacher. In spite of difficulties the school had had a successful year, and their numbers had been maintained. The successes of the year included an open exhibition of £30 a year at Worcester College, won by D. P. Hirsch. Having obtained that amount of success, Hirsch was now devoting his energies to the training of recruits! That was significant of the attitude of boys and young men at the present time. Drill was now part of the daily occupation of the boys at Willaston School. He (the headmaster) intended to make himself proficient as a drill instructor by taking a course of instruction at Cambridge during the recess. A long list of boys who are serving their country was read out. It contained the names of Coventry, Rostherne, Freeman, and Hirsch, all of whom had won honours at the universities. When the history of the schools at the time of the great war came to be written it would be found, he believed, that Willaston had played a not ignoble part.

The singing of the school song, 'Carmen Willastonense,' and the National Anthem, and cheers for the Chairman, the Headmaster, and Mrs. Jones, and the teaching staff, concluded the indoor proceedings. Tea was afterwards provided in the shadow of the west front, and this was followed by the performance of a play, 'In 1815,' commemorative of Agincourt and Waterloo, written specially for the occasion by Mr. D. W. Ross, M.A., one of the masters. It is a well-constructed story, with plenty of incident, and was admirably presented by the boys. The incidental music was arranged by the Headmaster. The items rendered by a group of members of the school orchestra and the vocal numbers by other lads, all of whom formed part of the village community in the play, were among the several loudly applauded features of a clever production.

THE HUMANITARIAN LEAGUE. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Humanitarian League, like many other societies, has suffered as a result of the war. At no time do its activities awaken much interest amongst the general public, since it advocates principles which the average man and woman is not, as yet, prepared to accept, and much of its work is of the nature of a quiet but steady permeation of opinion wherever it can obtain a hearing.

The prevailing sentiment at the annual meeting which was held on Monday, June 7, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, was that of hope, and the two principal speakers laid great emphasis on the immediate duty of keeping faith alive in those supreme ideals, which, if they had been universally accepted, would have rendered the present state of things impossible. The Humanitarian is still published, though it now comes out every second month, and large distributions of books from the library of the League have been made to the British Red Cross Society, and to a number of similar agencies for the benefit of wounded soldiers. The most important work of the year has been the publication of "Killing for Sport," a volume of valuable essays by Mr. George Greenwood, M.P., Edward Carpenter, H. B. Marriott-Watson and others, with an introduction by G. Bernard Shaw, which should serve admirably the purpose of a manual for public speakers and writers who are endeavouring to spread the principles of the League. The book has received favourable notices, in spite of the fact that it has made its appearance at a rather inopportune moment, and by the generosity of one of the members the League has been enabled to send 600 copies to public libraries and other institutions which have accepted them gratefully.

Mr. H. Baillie-Weaver presided at the annual meeting, and after the usual business details had been dealt with as briefly as possible, addresses were given by Mrs. Despard and Dr. Walter Walsh.

Mrs. Despard said that it was often objected in these days that this was not the time to speak of the principles underlying a movement like theirs, but she dissented from that view, believing that there never was a period when it was more necessary for them to stand firmly for those truths which would ultimately save the whole world. Sooner or later this terrible war, which could never have taken place if everywhere there had been the same enthusiasm for humanitarian principles that there was for fighting, would be over. The work of reconstruction would then begin, and in view of the part they would have to play societies like the League, which had done such good work for the benefit of mankind in the past, must not yield to despondency now. One of their great tasks was the discipline of character, and the elimination of hatred—but that hatred of which we are hearing so much, Mrs. Despard added, was not shared by the young soldier, who fully recognised that his enemy was a human being like himself, and that he, too, was fighting for his country. Humanitarianism was something more than mere kindness, though it was a mistake to suppose that mere kindness was a negligible thing, since it was nothing less than love in action. Humanitarianism recognised the oneness of all life, evolving through many forms up to the full consciousness of man, and achieving its triumphs as the result of the sacrifice of myriads of lesser lives which thus made their contribution to the universe. The sense of the dignity of life, its glory and responsibility, needed to be deepened, and with it that fine quality summed up in the words noblesse oblige, which, when once it was accepted, made it impossible to do things that were quite natural at a lower level of humanity.

Mrs. Despard went on to speak of the mysterious power in animals so sympathetically described by Maeterlinck in his recent book, "The Unseen Guest," a power which makes them akin to ourselves. It was specially developed in the dog and the horse, to which we stood in a position of peculiar responsibility, since we had taken them into our lives, and even given them, as it seemed, something of ourselves which made the bond between us and them a very close one. The realisation of what we owed to them, of the relationship which existed between us and all our "little brothers and sisters," as St. Francis called them, made it imperative that we should act with kindness, and a sense of the dignity and respect due to all forms of sentient being, towards the creatures of the sub-conscious world. Could we not echo that beautiful prayer of an Eastern sage:—"I try as hard as I can, as much as in me lies, not consciously to hurt anything that is alive, and where it is impossible not to hurt, Thou art responsible."

Dr. Walsh emphasised the necessity of keeping alive in the world at the present time the ideals of humanity. When drunkenness was rife, he said, that was surely the time to speak of temperance; when vice was rampant, then they should speak of purity; and when war was devastating the world, then more than ever we should speak of mercy, and pity, and love. Force in itself was no remedy and could not extirpate evil. It was just in those times when the idea of force most prevailed that punishments of the most horrible and unnatural kinds were resorted to, and "brutalitarianism" was triumphant. We had to emphasise another method and make it more and more effective in the public mind, and in Bills and Acts of Parliament. But our task did not end there. We had to push on the humane sentiment till it reached the higher systematised and reasoned stage of ethics, and actuated conduct for the good of all. A self-imposed law of life was more effectual than any legal enactment, and nothing could serve as a substitute for the discipline of character. Morality he would describe as the effort of reason to define and realise the common good, and those who opposed humanitarian principles, regarding them as dangerous and "sentimental," did so because they interfered with the selfish interests and pleasures which they had not learnt so to control as to contribute to this common good. They had a great work to do in overthrowing the narrow conceptions of conventionalists, and in showing how social morality is developed by the extension of sympathy to ever-widening groups of people till it included other nations and races, as well as the dumb creatures, who had an equal right to be regarded as ends in themselves. Every nation, just like every individual, and every group of individuals, was an end in itself, and it was the recognition of that fact which had influenced the work of the Humanitarian League. It was their plan to help to bring about the readjustment of international disputes in accordance with the right of all people to the satisfaction of their individual instincts and aspirations, and to place within the reach of all everything that enriched and made life beautiful. They must not despair, for things were coming up their way, though all looked dark at the moment, and the thoughts of men were widening with the process of the suns.

It was announced by the chairman that a conference would be held at Caxton Hall on July 8th and 9th on "The Pacifist Philosophy of Life." There was no idea of discussing the question of responsibility for the present war, or of proposing terms of peace. The Conference was being called solely for the purpose of trying to get into the mental atmosphere of the nation certain ideals and principles which it is essential to apply when peace is concluded, and we are faced with the task of putting things straight in such a way as to make another war an impossibility in the future.

THE important paper by Canon Sanday on the "Continuity of Thought and Relativity of Expression," to which we referred last week, is published in the "Modern Churchman" for June. Copies may be had from Messrs. Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C., price sixpence.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast: Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland.—The annual meeting of the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster was held in the First Presbyterian Church on Tuesday, June 15th, the Rev. M. Watkins, the retiring Moderator, presiding. The Rev. John Barron, nominated by the Bangor Presbytery, was unanimously elected Moderator for the ensuing year. Subsequently the annual meeting of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Association was held, the Rev. W. G. Marsden, ex-President, in the chair. The Rev. D. J. Williams was elected President, the Rev. H. J. Rossington, Secretary, and the Rev. J. A. Kelly, Treasurer, for the ensuing year. The Report refers to the fact that Mr. H. N. Turner, one of the three students under the charge of the Association who had been granted bursaries of £30 respectively, after commencing his first year's course for classical honours at Queen's University, Belfast, had enlisted in the Royal Irish Rifles. The income from all sources for the year together with the balance brought forward from the previous account is £734 2s. 2d., and a balance of £368 15s. 7d. will be carried forward to the next account. The number of orphans under the care of the Society is at present sixty. A united service was held in the afternoon, when the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Kennedy, of Larne. In the evening the Annual Lecture was delivered by the Rev. E. Savell Hicks, of Dublin, whose subject was 'Religious Readjustment.' The lecturer dealt with the development of religious thought and the change in the general attitude towards the "higher criticism," emphasising the fact that newer and truer conceptions had taken the place of the old ones, and that religion, though it had not made men perfect, had not failed. The new age, he said, would be built more firmly on the conception of the rise of man, and the God who patiently throughout the ages worked out his progress. The General Synod was held on Wednesday, the Rev. James Kennedy (the outgoing Moderator) in the chair. The chairman alluded to the war, and to the "Unitarianism of Germany," which was a reversion to the Judaism of the stormy times of the Judges, and not the Unitarianism of Martineau and Channing which saw in Jesus the crown and flower of the race, the Lord and leader of mankind. He earnestly hoped that truth and righteousness would prevail, that German militarism would be crushed, and that arbitration would take the place of war. The Rev. J. A. Kelly was elected Moderator, and the Rev. G. J. Slipper was re-elected Clerk and the Moderator Treasurer for the ensuing year. The Report of the General Purposes Committee, submitted by Mr. Slipper, recorded a most generous response on the part of the members of the Church to the Prince of Wales' national appeal. Various resolutions were passed, including the following on drink and the war, which was moved by the Rev. D. J. Williams and seconded by the Rev. J. J. Magill:—"That the Synod gives its heartiest approval to the policy of the Government in restricting the sale of alcoholic liquors during the national crisis, and expresses gratitude to His Majesty the King for his noble personal example of total abstinence. We commend that example to all our people as worthy of imitation, and call upon them in the interest of the country, as well as their own good, to refrain from strong drink during the continuance of the war." At the conclusion of the business meeting the annual lunch was held, the Moderator presiding over a large attendance.

Dudley.—On Sunday morning, June 13th, a Military Parade and service was held at the Old Meeting House, Wolverhampton Street, Dudley. This was the first time in the history of the place that the pews were filled with men wearing the King's uniform. The Military Parade was headed by a Bugle Band. Next came the local companies of the 3rd/7th Battalion Worcestershire Territorials, under Lieut. Southan; the Dudley Volunteer Training Corp, under Lieuts. T. P. Hanson, W. A. Webb and Newey, and the Dudley division of the St. John Ambulance, under Superintendent Hartland. The Rev. E. Glyn Evans occupied the pulpit, and the fact that he himself had that week enlisted in the Royal Army Medical Corps added to the uniqueness of the service. Besides the troops and the Training Corps there was a large congregation mainly composed of representative people in the town. A collection was taken at the close of the service in aid of Red Cross Funds. Last Sunday Mr. Evans conducted the Sunday School Anniversary and Flower Services in his khaki uniform.

Midland Guilds' Union.—At a Special Meeting of the Committee held on the 21st inst., the resignation of the Secretary, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, who has joined His Majesty's Forces, was accepted with regret. The valuable services rendered by Mr. Evans to the Midland Guilds' Union since its formation, have been greatly appreciated by the Committee and the members of the constituent Guilds, all of whom wish him a speedy and safe return to civilian life. All communications relating to the Union should be addressed to the Rev. W. G. Topping, The Manse, Coseley, who has been elected to succeed Mr. Evans as Secretary.

Midland Sunday School Association.—On Saturday, June 12, a party of about fifty teachers connected with the Midland Sunday Schools met at the Castle Gates, Dudley, and after a very enjoyable walk through the castle grounds and the Wren's Nest, assembled for tea in the Old Meeting House schoolroom, Coseley. In all seventy-nine sat down. After tea, a Committee Meeting was held, followed by a conference. Mr. J. H. Dearne, Superintendent of the Sunday School at Warley Institutional Church, read a paper on 'The Sunday School Lesson,' which was followed by discussion. The Committee note with much pleasure a great revival of interest in the affairs of the Association among the schools of the district. Every meeting in the present year has been well attended.

Stand.—At the annual business meeting of the congregation of Stand Chapel held a short time ago, Mr. W. Taylor Jones, who had been a member of the Chapel Committee for a long number of years—having occupied the position of Chairman for twenty-one years—tendered his resignation owing to ill-health. His friends at Stand felt that they could not accept this resignation without some recognition in a tangible form being made to one who has done so much in the past for Stand Chapel and Sunday School. Recently Mr. Jones has been the recipient of a beautiful time-piece which bears the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. William Taylor Jones by his friends and fellow-workers at the Stand Unitarian Chapel and Sunday School, as a token of their respect and esteem for many years of faithful work amongst them.—May, 1915."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE ITALIAN BLUE CROSS.

Before Italy joined in the war the Roman Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in connection with which Mr. Leonard Hawksley is doing such good work, offered, in the event of hostilities, to provide four hospitals for sick and wounded army horses. The Italian Minister received the proposal with gratitude, and a society is now being organised for which Sir Rennell Rodd, the English Ambassador, pleaded recently in the columns of The Times. It will take some time to convince the public in Italy of the practical as well as of the humane value of an organisation which is new to them; but that is all the more reason why animal lovers in England should show by their sympathy and support that the cause is in every way a worthy one. The administration will be under the capable presidency of Count Scheibler of Milan, whose name is in itself a guarantee to all who are interested in horses, and the Italian War Department will supply fodder, and assist the work of the hospitals in other ways, although the raising of funds is to be left to private enterprise. Contributions may be sent to the British Embassy in Rome, whence they will be passed on to the Italian Blue Cross.

BUSY WOMEN IN BELGRADE.

Dr. Percy Dearmer, who is at present in Serbia, has paid a graceful tribute in an article in The Daily News to the British nurses who are to be seen, in their blue frocks and white veils, everywhere in Belgrade. "They are always brisk and gay," he says, "and they have not the air of being strangers, but walk about as if all Belgrade had always been one family, and they its sisters. They never suffer from shyness, which is, perhaps, why they always make themselves understood, with smiles and gestures, and a word of Serbian ejaculated into a whole sentence of English. They know that they belong to the people; and the soldiers will do anything for them. The soldiers know what the world owes to these busy little women, who are always cheerful and never seem to be tired."

ANIMAL STORIES FOR CHILDREN.

A year or two ago we reviewed in these columns a charming book of animal stories entitled 'Tell Me a Story,' confessing at the time, that we longed to follow the example of the Editor, Mr. Sidney Trist, who had just sent fifty copies to an evening paper for distribution among poor children. It is interesting to learn that a sum of money has now been placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Animals' Guardian Guild for the purpose of supplying village libraries with free copies, and we recommend village librarians and superintendents of Sunday Schools to send in their names and addresses, with a request that this desirable gift should be forwarded to them without delay. The book is full of entertaining tales, lavishly illustrated, and written by well-known animal lovers who have made a special study of the subject; and its chief aim, of course, is to inculcate those humane truths which Mr. Trist has been indefatigable in helping to popularise. Applications should be made to the Animals' Guardian Guild, 22A, Lower Regent Street, London, S.W.

AN INTERNATIONAL GARDEN CITY.

There is something novel, but, at the same time, in keeping with the sentiments expressed frequently by many thoughtful people just now, in the proposal that an international city be established in Belgium to replace one of the ruined towns. It has been suggested, says Progress, that this should take the form of an International Garden City, where all the forces of civilisation shall unite in producing a perfect city of health, a city residential, commercial, industrial, and agricultural, responding to all the several and varying needs of humanity, preserving the beauty and sweetness of the countryside while providing the facilities of the city, and above all, serving as a monument and a testimony from humanity the world over to the valour and the honour of Belgium of to-day. Whether or not this scheme can be realized, the ideas of the Committee deserve the warmest support. They have already received the grateful recognition of the Belgian Government, and have been helped and approved by the British Local Government Board.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Winter Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—MISS SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

CHORLEY WOOD.—Charming COUNTRY COTTAGE TO LET, FURNISHED. Three Bedrooms, Two Sitting-rooms, Kitchen, good Hall, and Bathroom (h. and c.). Delightfully situated by a wood, and surrounded by very beautiful country. Fine views. About an acre of ground. Three Guineas a Week for Three to Nine Months. Within twelve minutes of station, G.C. and Met. Railways.—X. L., INQUIRER Office.

CLIFTONVILLE.—BOARD RESIDENCE. Mrs. J. H. S. COOPER, "Seacroft," Norfolk Road, Cliftonville, Margate, recommended by many friends at Highgate Church. Terms on application.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD LINEN. Hemstitched Cotton Pillow Cases, size 18 by 28 inches, bundle of four, 2s. 11d.; postage 4d.; Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 15, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 26, 1915.

. Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3809.
NEW SERIES, No. 912.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

NOW READY.

2s. 6d. net (postage 3d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—JULY.

UNITY BENEATH THE PRESENT
DISCORD Prince Eugene Troubetzkoy

THE MORAL SANCTION OF FORCE
Prof. Norman K. Smith

A SPIRITUAL BALANCE SHEET OF
THE WAR Cloudeley Brereton

WAR PHILOSOPHY, HINDU AND CHRISTIAN, 1500 B.C. AND 1915 A.D.
S. M. Mitra

WAR AND HOW TO MEET IT: THE VIEWS OF BRITISH THINKERS
Colonel A. Keene

THE WAR AND THE THEORY OF
THE STATE J. A. R. Marriott

AMERICA'S BONDAGE TO THE GERMAN SPIRIT Joseph H. Crooker

BEHIND THE SCENES Eva Madden

SOME INSCRIPTIONS
Bernard Holland, C.B.

CHRIST'S SANCTION AS WELL AS CONDEMNATION OF WAR
The Rev. Canon J. M. Wilson, D.D.

THE GOLDEN RULE AND ITS APPLI-CATION TO PRESENT CONDITIONS
Prof. A. E. Sonnenschein

RACE SEGREGATION IN THE UNITED STATES Philip Alexander Bruce, LL.D.

SUBSCRIPTIONS: ros. per Annum,
Post Free.

From all Stalls and Bookshops.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

July

4. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

11. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.

18. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

25. Rev. NEANDER ANDERTON, B.A. (of Monton).

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

The Quest.

A Quarterly Review.

Edited by G. R. S. MEAD.

Price, 200 pp.: Single Copies, 2/6 net; 2/9 post free.

Annual Subscription, 11/- post free.

Vol. VI. JULY, 1915. No. 4.

Religion and the Interior	Prof. Emile Boutroux.
Life	C. Marsh Beadnell, R.N.
The Cradle of Speech ..
The Lonely Odyssey of Life	Cloudeley Brereton.
War and the World-
Faiths	The Editor.
Creative Art	Arthur Lynch, M.P.
Good and Evil Will ..	A. Clutton-Brock.
A Poet of Mysticism ..	Esther Wood.
Towards International
Morality	G. H. Powell.
Mechanism and Teleology	James H. Hyslop, Ph.D.
The Soul of France ..	Jessie L. Weston.
Communism	Pol de Mont.
Moonlight in the Trenches	V. H. Friedlaender.
Sonnets	Stephen Southwold.

JOHN M. WATKINS,

21, Cecil Ct., Charing Cross Rd., London, W.C.

Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged.

THE IMMORALITY OF NON-RESISTANCE,

And other Sermons on the War.

By

The Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Christ and Non-Resistance
Letter and Spirit
Nationalism and Super-Nationalism
What a Man will Die for
Is it Christian to ask God to help us in War?
Cardinal Mercier and the Catholic Outlook

Price One Shilling net. Postage 2d.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., LTD.
(Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.)

Birmingham: CORNISH BROTHERS, LTD.
(39, New Street.)

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY

The Honorary Secretary, Mr.

Ronald Bartram, having joined

His Majesty's Army, it is requested that

ALL COMMUNICATIONS

concerning the work of the Society be sent to

Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON,

4, Ella Road, Crouch Hill, N.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

A SCHOLARSHIP of £20 is offered for COM-PETITION in JULY; age limit 14. Also an ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP of £20 for Boys
under 11. Particulars on application.

Scholarship and Entrance Examination—
JULY 9th.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."

—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for
boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut. - Col.
Stephenson, Cannanpore, India.

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

Channing House School, Highgate, N.

WANTED, in September, RESIDENT
MATHEMATICAL MISTRESS. Unitarian. Degree essential.—Apply, stating age, experience, qualifications, to Miss L. TALBOT
at the School.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, July 4.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. R. N. CROSS, M.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. A. PEARSON; 7, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. Anniversary Services.—11, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN; 7, Mr. ION PRITCHARD.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. W. WAKE; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. H. JOHNSON, M.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 { DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVEER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. A. MELLOR, M.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Induction Service, Rev. DR. MELLONE, Rev. D. AGATE, B.A., Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A., and Rev. HARMAN TAYLOR.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. BURGESS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. DR. ODGERS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHBEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. FISHER SHORT.

CAPETOWN.
 Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.
 Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.
 Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.
 First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGES.

DICKSON-JOHNSON.—On June 25th, Bonner W. A. Dickson, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Dickson, of Old Charlton, to Dorrie, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Johnson, of 31, Exeter Road, Brondesbury, N.W.

FORBES-TUBMAN.—On June 26th, at the Free Christian Church, Kentish Town, George Dixon Forbes, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Forbes, to Jessie Dorothy Florence, only child of Mr. and Mrs. W. Tubman.

LANE-GIBSON.—On June 26th, at Christ Church, Grantham Road, Birmingham, Jesse Claude, youngest son of John Lane, Aston, to Ada Sophia, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Gibson, The Laurels, Esme Road, Sparkhill, Birmingham, granddaughter of the late Rev. Matthew Gibson, of Evesham.

DEATH.

NEW.—Killed in action, in Gallipoli, on June 4th, Oswald New, Petty Officer Mechanic, Armoured Car Squadron (attached R.N. Division), dearly loved eldest son of the late Leonard New, and of Mrs. New, of Longacre, Stockport, aged 30 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER, 43, strong, capable, and reliable, requires SITUATION as Housekeeper to Gentleman, or as Matron to School. Present situation 11 years with widower who is marrying. Thoroughly conversant with household requirements. Economical manageress.—Apply Miss F. M. DEYNS, Marks, Longdown, near Exeter.

ORGAN FOR SALE, Two Manuals, in Case, fairly good condition.—Address inquiries to Rev. JOHN ELLIS, 175, Mottram Road, Stalybridge.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	323	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		The Unitarian Home Missionary College .	329
THE DUTY OF LOVING-KINDNESS	325	Dr. Abbott on the Fourfold Gospel	327	The Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire	329
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	326	A New View of the Dissenting Academies .	328	The Sunday School Association Motor Ambulance	330
MIDSUMMER MADNESS	326	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	328	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	330
CORRESPONDENCE :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	331
Ministers and the Army	327	Belgian Hospital Fund	328

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE hear from so many of our readers that they always look eagerly for any items of news about our work for the Belgian hospitals that we make no apology for beginning our Notes week after week in the same strain. Our theory is that everybody who knows anything about what we are doing and the extent and the variety of the ways of helpfulness which have been opened up to us, must be interested, and those who do not know shall, at least, have the opportunity of making close acquaintance with it. Moreover, if we may judge other people by ourselves, there is help and succour for us in days when anxieties thicken around us, in keeping our attention fixed steadily upon things that are beautiful and gracious, where charity still abounds and human sympathies are drawn closer, because we have learned to bear one another's burdens. If in this way we walk day by day with God we can look into the abyss without shrinking.

MRS. ALLEN went to France again at the end of last week as the work there required her presence. These official visits have been made easier than they were, and this is, perhaps, the best testimony we could have of the usefulness of our work, and the recognition which has been accorded to it by the authorities. We give some extracts from a letter which we have just received :—

“OUR main business out here,” Mrs. Allen writes, “is, and probably will be till the end of the war, the military hospitals, and it is to their needs that we must give our first attention on arriving here. So the first visit was to the military authorities to get the loan of a motor lorry, in which to convey the 40 cases we had with us to their destinations. Fortunately there was no difficulty here and all was arranged for an early start next morning. We profited by the couple of hours still left of daylight to see something more of the civilian work, and went first to visit the little hospice which we have set up under Mdme. L’s able supervision. Here we found three small wards, one for four, one for five, and one for six patients, a tiny bedroom for the two sisters in charge, and another for the servant, who has two extra beds in her room for emergencies. Besides this there is a sitting-room and a kitchen large enough to take a stove and very little else. All was beautifully clean and tidy, though nothing could be simpler. There are, of course, a good many little things still lacking that are quite essential, but we shall be able to get them in in a few days now. They have had patients in already, all the rooms full, but on the day we arrived they were all going off in the refugee train for the West of France, and had already gone over to the refuge where the main body of the refugees were, refreshed and strengthened by their rest and the kindly sympathy extended to them. This hospice will probably cost us about £20 a month. It is impossible to be certain about this sum until it has been working a few weeks, but that is what we estimate the cost will be.”

“The next day,” Mrs. Allen continues, “we organised the distribution of the large cases to the hospitals, and renewed acquaintances among doctors and nurses and incidentally discovered more needs. At one hospital, for instance, we found that, though they have most cleverly improvised an operating theatre, they had no steriliser, and were making shift to boil dressings and instruments over lamps. This might be serious when things are needed hurriedly, so they are to have one as soon as we can get it out from England, and we also found that they had sent a large number of their patients on to the base hospitals the day before, and in so doing had depleted their cupboards, and they had literally no shirts, no socks, no underclothes at all left. Luckily there is enough in the store here to spare them some at once, which again demonstrates the great value of the store, which has been placed at our disposal out here.”

LAST week Mr. Walter Long made the cheerful announcement in the House of Commons that after the months of war the general condition of the country in regard to poverty and unemployment was wonderfully good. In England and Wales the figures of pauperism were 16 per thousand, and in London they were 20·3 per thousand, which were the lowest figures for a period of 40 years. He also dispelled the apprehensions which had been expressed that there had been a sudden increase in infant mortality, due to a want of proper nourishment or proper care. The increase in the number of deaths of infants was traceable to measles and whooping-cough. Reviewing all the circumstances, he said that the condition of the people was far better than could have been expected.

* * *

WE have no wish to blunt the optimism of this statement. It is of capital importance that the physical condition of the people should be good just when the strain is hardest. But we must not forget that the apparent prosperity is artificial. We are living on borrowed money, and most of our industry is unproductive. Hence the need of a campaign of thrift and economy just at a time when large numbers of people have more money to spend than they have ever possessed before. Moreover, any diversion of labour from purposes of defence to purposes of comfort or luxury can only weaken us in the desperate struggle in which we are engaged.

* * *

THIS was the burden of the speech which the Prime Minister made at the Mansion House on Tuesday. Its closely knit argument was on the text: that simpler living is the path of patriotism.

All money [he said] that is spent in these days on superfluous comforts or luxuries, whether in the shape of foods or in the shape of services, means the divergence of energy which could be better employed in the national interests, either in supplying the needs of our fighting forces in the field or in making commodities for export, which would go to reduce our indebtedness abroad. And, on the other hand, every saving we make by the curtailment and limitation of unproductive expenditure increases the resources to be put by our people at the disposal of the State for the triumphant vindication of our cause.

* * *

THE same argument is put in a telling way by Professor Urwick in an article on "Wasteful Spending" in the Daily News. We may quote part of its indictment of our normal habits, for the need of thoughtful economy must be pressed home in every possible way upon the mind and imagination of our people.

What is necessary [he writes] is to realise that the deeper meaning of expenditure is taking on a far more serious significance every day the war lasts. Waste of labour which may be pardonable in days of peace is unpardonable now. The nation cannot afford it; it is incompatible with the steady and successful conduct of the war. Never in our history has the duty of abstinence been so stringently laid upon the richer classes—of abstinence from the expenditure of money upon anything the supply of which involves the use of labour needed for other purposes. And this means an all-round, rigorous economy; for nearly all kinds of labour, from that of the men who make motors to that of the men and women who make boots is needed for other uses than the supply of what we want.

* * *

PROFESSOR URWICK admits the difficulty of a sudden change in our normal habits. He also recognizes that for every luxury which we drop somebody must suffer. He even hints that some scheme of compensation for shopkeepers might be fair if it can be devised. "They will be the victims, at the time of our economy, of our habits of extravagance in more normal times, when we called them into existence and fixed their occupation by our wants." But he pleads resolutely that the situation must be faced in the only way which is compatible with national safety and personal self-respect.

Let us admit the difficulties; but for heaven's sake do not let us fold our hands and say that nothing can be done. Necessity can always find a way of economy; the one thing we all need is to realise that necessity is now really upon us. The nation cannot allow us to use as much wealth and labour as we are doing; our own consciences will not allow it, when once the issues are understood. We are still buying too much from abroad; we are still eating veal and lamb, as well as beef and mutton—a really criminal waste; we are still ordering "goods" without thinking what labour we are tying down by doing so. Economise further? Of course we can, to an almost indefinite extent. Anyone who is in earnest, looking round the world of the well-to-do, will brush aside the word "impossible."

* * *

THERE has been some evidence of division and cross currents of feeling in German politics lately. It would be unwise to attach much importance to the rumours of dissension between the Imperial Chancellor and Admiral von Tirpitz, but the manifesto of the Social Democrats against a policy of conquest and aggression is significant. Vorwärts has given a fresh proof of its courage and independence by publishing it, and once again it has been suppressed.

We raise anew [so the Manifesto runs] our sharpest protest against all efforts and declarations in favour of the annexation of a portion of a foreign country, and the suppression by force of another people suggested in the speeches of certain political personages. The mere expression of such a policy pushes further and further off the fervent desire for peace. The people desire no annexation. The people desire peace. If the war, which daily demands new sacrifices, is not to go on indefinitely until all the nations have been completely exhausted, one of the Powers taking part must stretch out its hand to peace. Germany has already proved itself unconquerable and can, therefore, take the first step towards peace.

WE are far from thinking that there is here any real hope of peace. The Social Democrats are not strong enough to stem the tide of German aggressiveness. Moreover, none of the Allies can dream of peace on the basis of an unconquerable Germany. Things have been done which cannot be undone, and they have changed the face of the world. To revert to the position before the war would not be peace but disaster. We agree with the stern verdict of Lord Bryce: "We cannot afford to make peace on equal terms. We cannot afford to let an army which has behaved like the German army in Belgium leave without the brand of infamy and the taint of failure upon it." This is not vindictiveness but a respect for public justice, and is quite compatible with a most earnest desire to welcome every sign of reversion to a better mind on the part of a section of the German people. The political party which has repudiated the desire to annex Belgium may go on, under the guidance of an awakened conscience, to realise that Germany must compensate and restore the country she has wronged. We should then have some real ground for co-operation in the work of peace.

* * *

A LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE, attended by about 200 representatives, was held at Oxford last week-end to consider how it is possible "to strengthen the moral and spiritual life of our people, and prepare for better things for our country and for the Kingdom of God when the war is over." An impression of the proceedings has appeared in The Manchester Guardian, from which we learn that "a dread of a tidal wave of materialism sweeping over civilisation after the war lay like a deep shadow over the Conference." We hope that this is merely the biased opinion of a single correspondent, for it is not in this mood that men of faith brace themselves for heroic tasks. We have had more than enough of high-minded foreboding clothed in words of delicate and fragile beauty. Some of our spiritual mentors need to remember not to be anxious for the morrow. They cannot read the secrets of the future, but they can spend themselves in brave and cheerful action to-day. A religion which goes to meet its difficulties half way is preparing itself for defeat. Difficulties, of course, there will be, many of them quite new in our experience; but is it reasonable to suppose that when men have drained the cup of sorrow to the dregs in obedience to the high calls of duty, and seen with their own eyes the frailty of this mortal life, they will be more exposed to the dangers of materialism than they were in the safe and luxurious days before the war?

THE DUTY OF LOVING-KINDNESS.

THERE has been an interesting discussion on the duty of Non-Resistance in the columns of the Manchester Guardian lately. It has been rather abstract and inconclusive as such discussions are liable to be. Their vigour in argument is often in inverse proportion to their contact with the hard facts in the midst of which men have to live and do their duty. The Quaker testimony against violence has shared the fate of most lonely protests. It has often hit the mark and stood between us and our evil deeds; but at other times it has failed, because it has hardened into a mere prohibition and ignored the occasions when there is no middle course between resistance and complicity in wrong. It is clear that the young men of the Society who have joined the Army and are fighting for what they believe to be the cause of goodness and freedom feel this deeply. They have broken a rule in order that they may follow the living voice of conscience, and we are not surprised to learn that many of their fellow-members have expressed their sympathy with them. We have no wish to moralise over an awkward situation. We hope sincerely that it will be faced when the war is over with tact and good sense, without any threat of stern discipline or disruption. Quakers, like other people, have a certain amount of the gritty substance called legalism in their composition; but in their doctrine of the indwelling Spirit, who guides men into all truth, they have the best way of escape. It will mean a real enlargement of mind for them, if they have the courage to treat the young men, who have gone forth to defend their liberties, as a cause of joy and not of sadness, recognising that they could not have done anything else without dishonour.

In any case there are signs that staunch and broad-minded Quakers are beginning to recognise the danger of tying down their religious policy to a phrase. Perhaps they are conscious of the difficulty of trying to win the world with a negation in the day when great duties must be done. Merely to testify against war is not enough unless they can put some conquering ideal in its place, and show us a better way out of our dangers and entanglements at the present moment. In a recent letter to the Manchester Guardian Mr. J. W. Graham recognises the danger of mere negations, and in doing so makes some remarkable admissions. After pointing out that their testimony against war is not a matter of texts but is based on "living and immediate conviction," he continues:—

"I should like, however, to disavow the term 'non-resistance' as descriptive of our attitude. It is quite the usual term, but it is becoming felt among us that it expresses both too much and too little. That is because it is a negative, prohibitory, legalistic word, and covers in its condemnation the use of force by the police and in other order-keeping ways. We do not hold the Tolstoyan testimony against these. We need also some word more positive and constructive and adaptable than 'non-resistance.' I find it myself best in the word 'loving-kindness,' which expresses the law which should, in my view, guide the actions of nations as of men."

We find ourselves in hearty general agreement with this statement, though we fear that we should differ very widely from Mr. Graham in our application of it to present circumstances. We are quite prepared to take the word "loving-kindness," and to fill it with the noblest and richest meaning which we can glean from the Spirit of Christ and the moral experience of the human race, and then to accept it humbly and gratefully as our ideal for our private duties and our public actions. But surely it is more than a little inconsistent to limit and circumscribe its meaning in such a way as to include the ordinary methods of law and order in our internal affairs and to condemn all wars without further argument. We find it difficult to accept the policeman and to banish the soldier or to regard a criminal judge as an emblem of loving-kindness while General Gordon is rejected as a servant of ill-will. We believe that all of them, so far as they are just and honourable men, may be instruments in the hands of the unseen Power who, sometimes in blessing and sometimes in chastisement, works for the good of men.

This, however, is a minor point. What we want to urge upon the attention of our readers is the truth of the dark saying that in a world of mingled good and evil, where the weak are still subject to oppression, and base ambitions acknowledge no claim of justice or pity, a stout and determined resistance may be the only way for those who would be loyal to loving-kindness. This is the situation in which we are placed at the present moment. It is the strength of our attachment to the highest ideals of Christian behaviour, which makes us stern and inflexible of will and resolute to oppose any weak terms of peace. We want to give wide scope in the earth to the spirit of fellowship and mutual help, and we know that we cannot do it, if we compromise with honour and leave our friends and neighbours to the mercy of a lawless invader. How would the cause of loving-kindness have been helped, if last autumn we had abandoned Belgium and France to their fate and left ourselves exposed to a military menace which would sap the foundations of our freedom? "It was perfectly possible," to quote the words of Professor Gilbert Murray, "to stand aside and proclaim our neutrality. But apart from questions of honour, to proclaim neutrality was quite as grave a step as to proclaim war. Let no man imagine that we can escape blood-guiltiness by standing still while murder is committed before his eyes."

We must, accordingly, utter a word of serious warning against any attempt to identify the spirit of loving-kindness with opposition to all wars in general and this war in particular. It is in no sense an equivalent for the policy of non-resistance. The little groups of people who call themselves pacifists are much inclined to comfort themselves in their isolation with the thought that they are the only lovers of peace and goodwill in an unbelieving world. The plain fact is that nearly everything that is noble in the country, daring in heroism, long-suffering in charity, passionate in the love of peace, is against them. We have had a rude awakening from some of the sentimental dreams of more tranquil days. We can no longer worship gentleness divorced from power or Divine good nature without its awful mandates of righteousness. The work of justice must be accomplished though men bleed and die in its service, and freedom still calls for its noble army of martyrs. But the duty of loving-kindness remains as the inmost desire of our souls, the will to heal and bless and save. It will guard our hearts and minds from baseness and malice, from inglorious pride, from hardness and contempt, and make us slow to anger and quick to forgive. It will also keep us secure from weakness and dismay when God comes to us not as the Father of mercies but as the King of Terrors, and commands all our strength for hard and distasteful duties. We mean to do them, without wavering and without a trace of self-pity, because anything else would be a betrayal of goodness and cut off the promise of loving-kindness at its source.

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

THE hope of Truth grows stronger day
by day;
I hear the soul of Man around me
waking,
Like a great sea, its frozen fetters breaking,
And flinging up to heaven its sunlit
spray,
Tossing huge continents in scornful play,
And crushing them, with din of grinding thunder,
That makes old emptinesses stare in wonder;
The memory of a glory passed away
Lingers in every heart, as, in the shell,
Resounds the bygone freedom of the sea,
And every hour new signs of promise tell
That the great soul shall once again be free,
For high, and yet more high, the murmurs swell
Of inward strife for truth and liberty.
LOWELL.

THE FATHER OF OUR SPIRITS.

THE Idealist, who contemplates and worships God as Thought, and sees Him as essential Truth, Love, Justice, and Beauty, is satisfied with that idea as long as he can live apart in his study, and separate himself from the strifes of the world. He worships in peace, and is at rest, and I have said there is a rightness in his worship. It is in spirit and in truth. But when such a man, at some great crisis of human history, is thrilled with the excitement of humanity, and going forth to take his part with men in fighting for freedom or his fatherland, or for any of those truths which are the saving ideas of mankind, finds himself one of a great company, all moving with one thought, all breathing the same passionate air, yet, though united, each having their own personal inner life, their own separate way of feeling the same emotion, their own especial worship in the words of their own heart, their own personal need of One on Whom beyond man's help they may rely, to Whom, as to a Father and Friend, they can entrust, as they go into fight, their children, their wife, or the maiden whom they love—think you that then his conception of a God Who is Infinite Intelligence, essential Love and Truth impersonally conceived, will be sufficient? No, when Fichte, idealist of idealists, left the classroom as the drum went by, and marched with his scholars to the war of Independence, he did not abandon his ideal conception of the great "I AM," whom he abstained in general from clothing with the attributes of personality; but he added to it the conception of a Father and Lover of men, who went with each of them hand-in-hand, as man with man, to battle. And all of us men who feel strongly in such high moments, and in the feeling realise most deeply our own and others' personality, are forced to do the same. We worship God then as Liberty and Truth, as all the ideas for which we contend; but, for ourselves in our danger, that we may have the noblest courage; for ourselves that we may have comfort in the hour when the dearest ties are severed, it may be never to be knit again; for our brother men who march with us in like trouble, and needing like support; for all in this moment of supreme excitement, we take with us a Personal Father Who will be human to us and yet Divine, and adore Him in our hearts. And when upon the battlefield we receive our dying comrade's last message to his wife, when we pass in the rude hospital from one sufferer to another, when with a few we have to sacrifice life without one single hope of being saved, that we may keep a post for the safety of an army, we do not speak then of a God of ideas, of an impersonal Essence of Love and Truth, but of a living, loving Friend, who will be a Father to the widow, Who stands, as if in human form, and speaks in human voice to the wounded who is torn with pain, to the doomed who dies unknown, for duty. In such hours the Idealist worships the personal Fatherhood of God.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

O LORD, who art our Guide even unto death, grant us, we pray thee, grace to follow thee whithersoever thou goest. In little daily duties in which thou callest us, bow down our wills to simple obedience, patience under pain or provocation, strict truthfulness of word and manner, humility, kindness; in great acts of duty or perfection, if thou shouldst call us to them, uplift us to self-sacrifice, heroic courage, laying down of life for thy Truth's sake, or for a brother. AMEN.

MIDSUMMER MADNESS.

The elder's scent! Midsummer eve!
But now has dawned Midsummer day!
Hans Sachs—Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger.'

How is it that certain days come back to our memories sweet as the elder's scent? Do the saints of those days bless us, "unbeknownst?" I remember a Good Friday long ago when I was a boy. I had surreptitiously got possession of a volume of Byron's poems, and in a corner I feasted. Perhaps Byron as an emotional exercise is hardly ascetic enough for a Good Friday. But what a day I had, and what a night of dreams! And lately I kept Midsummer Eve in royal fashion. The day turned very cold towards the evening. Here was a blessed opportunity not to be lost. We cannot in our warm climate of Devonshire expect Nature to be so kindly paradoxical every year. I thanked her, lighted a fire, drew up a wicker chair, and got out some books. Only a day or two before I had procured from a library a version of Aristophanes in Latin. The fact that a mortal man in the eighteenth century had undertaken the stupendous task of turning Aristophanes into Latin stirred my fancy. Where does Browning's grammarian come in beside this audacious Frenchman? For Frenchman he rightly was who perpetrated this Rabelaisian enormity. I turned to those immortal passages where the genius of laughter has got all the stops out and is going fortissimo. Dionysus and the chattering frogs, and that bit in the 'Acharnians,' where the peasant gives the swaggering soldier-man a piece of his mind. And he gives it him in huge chunks; only a mouth from Brobdingnag could frame such words. My gallant translator, I confess, disappointed me. I reverence his pluck, his fortitude. It is but British. But though a Frenchman, unless my Latinity is sadly at fault, he was not a humorist. But then if he had been he would never have undertaken such a Gargantuan labour. Pax tecum, Monsieur Greatheart! And so I turned from this tough Hellenist of the brave days of old to a Hellenist and Humanist and Humorist of to-day—the sweetest and most genial soul in Europe—Anatole France.

It was getting late, and I was relapsing into that condition when we don't merely read with the eyes, but take in the print through the pores of the skin, and feel it all over us. I read over those eleven pages on Bismarck in one of the volumes of 'Life and Letters.' What a picture! What sympathetic appreciation! What a judgment! The man and the work of his life. The fierce animal-arrogance of the wild boar. The strange streaks of poetry in his love of nature. "The sea is the great mistress of this chaste giant." The force in speech and deed. And then that solemn evening towards the end, when the giant looks back on his labours, and finds that they have no joy in them. "Never was Prince Bismarck so great as upon that evening." Perhaps, after all, the Germans do understand Shakespeare a little. Prince Bismarck doubted of himself. What is a life-work worth that brings no joy to oneself or others? Is not this the secret of Shakespeare's divination? Here is food for philosophy. A touch, and Bismarck might have been a—Hamlet! Solemnly the clock of our cathedral boomed out twelve, Midsummer eve had passed into Midsummer day. I thought of man and his blustering words and prodigious deeds, and the genius of Aristophanes by its magic turning them into a mere hullabaloo of "sound and fury signifying nothing." Then came to me, even as the elder's scent, that reverie of old Sachs at the dawning of Midsummer day.

Mad! Mad!
Every one mad!
Where'er my gaze I turn,
In vain I seek to learn
Why men so hate each other.
Why friend with friend should fight,
And brother fall on brother
In aimless, frantic spite!
What name were fit for this?
The ancient madness 'tis
That runs through all our striving,
To folly ever driving!

R. H. U. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

MINISTERS AND THE ARMY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is difficult to answer two critics in the brief space of a letter. Their main objection seems to refer to the distinction I drew between the life expected of a priest and that of the would-be Christian layman. That distinction I still maintain. Your correspondent is certainly correct when he declares that the teaching of Jesus had a direct and vital bearing on the coming of the kingdom of God. It was to supercede the effete and unjust civilisation of that time. Christ was mistaken as to the sudden, catastrophic end of the world; but does that matter? The necessity of the kingdom remains unchanged. If Jesus came to England to-day, the burden of his message would be the same:—"Repent ye, the kingdom of God is at hand." To Christ it was both a present and a future reality. Present, in as much as he demanded that the lives of his disciples should be passed in accordance with its laws; future, in so far as it referred to the subjugation and metamorphosis of the earth into that glorious heavenly kingdom. The root principles of modern civilisation are rotten to the core, and the need of the kingdom of God as urgent as ever in Jesus's day, whether we call it Utopia, a Pantisocracy, a city of the sun, or Socialism. But we need not go to Plato, or Bacon, or Butler; the message of Jesus will still suffice. Since supernaturalism is dead, his demands on his disciples are more rigid and insistent now than ever they were when he preached by the Sea of Galilee. No magic act of God will now transform the world; it rests on the faith and loyalty of the followers of our Lord, and it will continue so to rest, whether men call themselves by his name or no. Jesus demands now, as of old, that his disciples shall make the kingdom a present reality by living in harmony with its fundamental laws. A minister of Christ who fails to do so is unworthy of his vocation. The average Christian layman adopts the methods of modern commercialism in his everyday life and conduct which are essentially antagonistic to the teachings of Christ. I venture to affirm that it is impossible to be a consistent Christian and a successful business man at the same time. The difference is one between modern civilisation and that of the kingdom of God. I do not deny for a moment that the former has produced and still produces men and women who are noble, self-sacrificing and true; but the best in Paganism aimed at that. It is this something more that marks the Christian, and just that which the priest should, par excellence, reveal. Christianity is not fundamentally a moral code; it is the ideal of a civilisation absolutely opposed to that which at present obtains. I do not mean to imply that a layman cannot be a consistent Christian. God forbid! I do say that while he adopts modern methods of business and is content to profit by them, he fails to be a true follower of Jesus on just that point where Christianity differs from Paganism. A Pagan might possess all the virtues, only it was never part of his creed to oppose the existing state of things. In conclusion, let me add that my original letter emphasised the fact that the world rightly expected that a minister should refrain from some things that a layman might do with impunity. Taking up arms against a fellow creature is certainly among the number. As a final word, why is my critic so hard on the cloister? Personally, I feel that if priests would only prove faithful enough, we could not easily do better than go back again to monasticism. Above and beyond all, it was farthest from my thought to look down on any man.—Yours, &c.,

NEONE RAAD.

Brooklands, Ringwood, June 26, 1915.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

DR. ABBOTT ON THE FOURFOLD GOSPEL.

The Fourfold Gospel. Section III.: The Proclamation of the New Kingdom. By Edwin A. Abbott. Cambridge, at the University Press, 12s. 6d. net.

DR. ABBOTT'S great study of the Gospels grows in the richness of its contents and its spiritual suggestiveness as it proceeds. He is quite aware that few people are likely to read his minute investigations as a whole, and in his very full indices he has made provision for those who must confine themselves to the consideration of his method in a few detached passages. But no one who reads even a few pages of this volume can fail to carry away the impression that for Dr. Abbott the justification of all his labours is to be found in the illumination of what is vital and original in the Gospel itself. He believes that on the whole the inwardness and universalism of the Fourth Gospel are true to the intention of Jesus, and that the Evangelist set himself deliberately to interpret many things which had been crudely misunderstood; or to use his own phrase, Luke often corrects Mark wrongly while John explains him rightly. This view leads to the contention that the object of Jesus from the first was "not the establishment of what men would commonly call a Kingdom, but the diffusion of what we should rather call the atmosphere of a Family, a spiritual emanation spreading like an ordinary circle from a source within Himself as its centre, and passing into the hearts of all that were fitted to receive it, so as to give them something of His own power or 'authority'—a term defined in the Prologue of the Fourth Gospel as being 'authority to become the children of God.'" "Christendom," he says a little later on, "will not be true Christendom till the most commonplace Christian soul is expected to thank God for having given him a power, to some slight extent at all events, of forgiving sins like a priest, of diffusing the truths of the Gospel like a Evangelist, and of reigning over his animal impulses like a king."

This is the guiding principle which gives some degree of unity to the discussion of various incidents which occur in the early chapters of Mark, the Calling of the Fishermen, Jesus healing, the Forgiveness of sins, the Old and the New, Jesus and the Sabbath, the Appointment of the twelve, and several others. We may refer briefly to one of them. The narrative of the Syrophenician woman in Mark is omitted in Luke. It was clearly inconsistent with other things which occur in his Gospel; but he does nothing to explain it or to remove the painful impression which it might create in the minds of readers of Greek race.

The Fourth Evangelist on the other hand, sets himself in more than one place to produce an assurance of the sympathy of Jesus with non-Jewish people. Dr. Abbott argues that, logically and spiritually, this is in accord with his teaching and example. "The permanent and essential message of Christ," he says, "seems to have been unrestricted by national limitations." The method employed is one of interpretation, it is symbolic and indirect, but a clear impression is conveyed to the mind of what Jesus really meant.

We cannot close this short notice of a volume of absorbing interest without a word of gratitude for the clearness with which Dr. Abbott emphasises the triumph of the spirit over the letter at a time when some people, with misguided earnestness, are trying to entangle Christianity in the slavish literalism of rules and precepts.

"The heavens declare the glory of God" [he writes]. So does the Fourth Gospel. Let us turn, then, with fresh hope and faith to its teaching, to the letter as well as to the spirit, but always seeking the spirit through the letter. And let us especially meditate on its reasonable and seasonable doctrine about the Paraclete of Christ, how it has power to 'teach' us 'all things'—teaching us what to say and what to do in answer to the importunate questionings and clamorous demands thrust upon us by the social, political, and national problems of each generation—and teaching us all this, not through a lesson-book of rules for saving our own souls, but by bringing us into the circle of God's family, where each soul looks for instruction to the Father's face, and finds its weak self strengthened as well as enlightened by Him who gives Himself to His children."

A NEW VIEW OF THE DISSENTING ACADEMIES.

Dissenting Academies in England: their Rise and Progress and their Place among the Educational Systems of the Country. By Irene Parker, M.A. Cambridge University Press, 4s. net.

THIS little book will bring a fresh interest to people who are enthusiastic about the Dissenting Academies; for the writer, too, is an admirer of them, but not for reasons usually held. It is written round the idea of realism in education. From this point of view, the great religious struggle which ended in the Uniformity legislation of 1662 and onwards, and so caused the academies to spring into existence, is not the important matter. So far as educational history is concerned, the academies were "an expedient of the moment," while their true glory is, that they continued and reinforced a great movement towards a humaner education—less formal and verbal—which began with the Renaissance. "When the complete history of education in England appears, probably no chapter will cause more surprise than the one dealing with the period which saw the rise of the dissenting academies. During a period when the grammar schools slept and the universities were sterile," they introduced "modern" subjects, including "science," in addition to the old "classical" studies, and succeeded in making their conception of what constituted a good middle-class education seem the only one possible. This new education, employing the newest methods advocated by educational reformers, and opening the doors of the schools to the "people," is realism, and it is the forerunner of the modern universities in our commercial centres. "The spirit which animates the Dissenters was that which had moved Ramus and Comenius in France and Germany, and which in England, had actuated Bacon, and later, Hartlib and his circle. The academies were the first educational institutions in England to put into practice the realistic theories which had found expression in the works of a series of writers from Rabelais and Montaigne, Mulcaster and Elyot, to Milton and Petty."

Apart from this very interesting attempt to "place" the academies, the book will give much pleasure and amusement by its quaint illustrations of the manners and doings of those old-world students, their expenses and preachings, their letters home to their "honoured parents," the necessity of speaking only in Latin until after evening prayers, the new study of the French language, "read without regard to the pronunciation, of which Mr. Jennings"—the tutor—"had no knowledge." It is interesting also, to see that Miss Parker makes the point, that a regrettable change of policy occurred, just when a still further and important development was coming about—the attempt to give a "business" education in accordance with the liberal ideas of Priestley. This hopeful development was checked by the new requirement that henceforth the students should accept definite creeds. "It was probably owing to this departure from their original practice that the academies gradually declined towards the end of the eighteenth century." Manchester New College escaped the evil contagion—the result of the souring and stiffening which overtook the great Evangelical Revival. By the way, Manchester College, Oxford, is stated to be the "lineal descendant" of Manchester New College, which is much the same as saying that a man living in Oxford is the lineal descendant of the same man when he lived in London. With regard to Warrington Academy, Miss Parker may seem to its admirers to be taking away some of its glory by denying its descent from Frankland's; but, in fact, the emphasis laid upon the breach of continuity only serves to bring out more strongly the great educational advance achieved at Warrington. W. WHITAKER.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.:—The Foolishness of Solomon: R. C. Trevelyan 3s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Mind in Animals: E. M. Smith. 3s. net. How Luke was written: E. W. Lummis. 4s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. CORNISH BROS., LTD.:—The Immortality of Non-resistance: J. M. Lloyd Thomas. (2nd Edition.) 1s. net.

MESSRS. HEADLEY BROS.:—The True Way of Life: Edward Grubb. 2s. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.:—Thy Dead shall Live: C. Knapp, D.D. 6d. net. The Life and Works of Walter Bagehot: Edited by Mrs. Russell Barrington, 10 vols. 3l. 15s. net.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Meaning of the War: Henri Bergson. 1s. net.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE:—Politics and Crowd Morality: Arthur Christensen. 7s. 6d. net. The Ephesian Gospel: Percy Gardner. 5s. net. Confucianism and its Rivals: Herbert A. Giles. 6s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Quest, The Hibbert Journal, The Cornhill Magazine, The Nineteenth Century and After.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

24TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4716	8	7
The Misses Murray (fourth donation)	0	10	0
Compagne Gardens Belgian Hostel Fund, per Mrs. Jolowicz (two weeks' subscription)	3	10	0
Miss B. A. Prevett	0	5	0
Miss E. Rosalind Lee (third donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Fellows Pearson (fifth donation)	20	0	0
Mrs. J. C. Ledlie (third donation)	1	0	0
St. George's Chapel, Exeter, per Miss Margaret Bloor	1	1	6
Mr. Robert Williamson	1	0	0
A. and N. T.	0	10	0
From Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, per Miss E. A. Kitson (third donation)	5	10	0
Mrs. Cumberbatch	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (fourth donation)	1	0	0
The Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, per Mrs. Manning (second donation)	2	0	0
Miss Rooth	1	0	0
Collection by the Rambling Club of Ilford Unitarian Church	1	0	0
Miss Stark	2	0	0
Miss Holland (third donation)	2	2	0
Miss Emily Shannon (second donation)	2	0	0
Miss Mary Shannon (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Miss I. M. Hervey (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Suffield (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Meads	0	1	0
Miss B. P. Freeman	3	0	0
The Staff of Haverstock Hill Central School, per Mr. F. Chappell (fourth donation)	1	12	0
Mrs. Webb (third donation)	10	0	0
Mr. W. Barton Worthington	5	5	0
Mrs. J. M. Perry (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. W. Kirkhope (second donation)	1	0	0
Wimbledon Unitarian Church, per Mr. W. N. Martin (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Pearce (third donation)	1	0	0
Miss Mabel Thomas	1	1	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (third donation)	20	0	0
Mrs. Arthur Read (second donation)	5	0	0
H. W. Stephenson, from the Victorian Street Choir, Loughborough	0	11	6

	£	s.	d.
Miss Innes	0	10	0
Miss M. Roberts	1	0	0
Miss E. Hibbert (fourth dona- tion)	1	0	0
	£4,825	7	7

Parcels have been received from:—

The Misses Murray; A Few Friends at Gee Cross (per B. H. Berry); From "7." Leeds; H. M. Dare; Miss Bruce; Mrs. Notcutt; Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. Baily; Cairo Street Ladies' Sewing Society, Warrington; Effra Road Church Brixton (per Miss Caiger); Miss Rathbone; Mrs. Charles; Miss B. Kearne; T. A. C., Edinburgh; Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Mrs. Harris; Mrs. O'Connor; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Miss Minns; Mrs. R. T. Gilson; Mrs. Webb; Women's League Church of the Messiah, Birmingham (per Mrs. Austin).

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THE Annual Proceedings at the close of the Session were curtailed this year, with respect to some customary social functions, on account of the war. The proceedings began with the Public Examination in the morning of June 29, when the outgoing students especially acquitted themselves in a manner which called forth high commendation when the Visitors' Address was given later in the day.

A considerable company of old students and Ministers and other friends of the College assembled in the afternoon to hear the Visitors' Address, which, in the unavoidable absence of the Rev. Philemon Moore, was delivered by the Rev. A. W. Fox, of Todmorden.

Mr. F. W. Monks, who presided, said that as years go by, the College is ever making a stronger position for itself.

The Rev. A. W. Fox after congratulating the students upon the high level of work attained during the Session, commented upon the very excellent effect of the Student Ministry at the Oldham Road Church, which he regarded as a proof that the College was true to its name and purpose as a Missionary College. He then took for the subject of his address, "The Bible and the Preacher." He urged strongly the value of the Book of Books for the teaching of religion and conduct, and as a quite unique aid to the preacher as a basis for sermons, a mine of historical illustration, and an inexhaustible storehouse of all the kinds of material which would be found most effective in making men realise the nature of, and their need of, the kingdom of God. Our Unitarian forefathers, even when they lacked the invaluable aid of historical criticism, were able by their reading of the Bible and close acquaintance with its contents to see that the orthodox doctrines were often without foundation, and if present day Unitarians would study their Bibles more, and learn, not merely what had been written about them, but their actual contents, they would realise the truth of Dr. Priestley's testimony, who, when he lay dying, dwelt upon the advantages he had received from daily Bible-reading. It is no empty eulogy to speak of the Bible as unique. It contains the fullest revelation that God has made of his own nature to a particular nation. Even the Old Testament, which there was a tendency to disparage, had a peculiarly exalted place among all the Sacred Books of the world. It is true that there is much legendary matter, but half the truth of history is to be found in legends if people will but look at them aright. The stories of the Garden of Eden, of Nathan and David, and of Daniel, were cited as instances of the most telling and awakening presentation of ethical realities. Where will you find a sounder land reformer than Amos? What modern prophet dares to inveigh against the follies of fashion in the manner of Isaiah? Coming to the New Testament, which he said was perhaps in less need of advocacy, Mr. Fox pointed to the inestimable value of it as containing the record of Jesus, and the Address ended with an impassioned and eloquent appeal to young preachers to make use of the Bible—an appeal which the speaker enforced by reference to his own experience of 26 years in the Ministry.

The Principal (Dr. Mellone) then reviewed the results of the year's academic work, a considerable portion of which, he remarked, is now done in connection with Manchester University. The Principal and Warden both take their share in the lecturing work of the University, and the class-work of our students in the University has secured a number of remarkable distinctions. Coming to the Theological courses, Dr. Mellone announced the following awards:—

Sharpe Prizes, Mr. J. H. Ewbank; for Scripture, Mr. Barnes; for Knowledge, Mr. G. R. Jones; Millson History Prize, Mr. Barnes; Bibby Prize (Greek) Mr. Ewbank; Principal's Special Prize for high level of general excellence in the work of the Session, Mr. C. A. Piper; Warden's Special Prize (Essay), Mr. S. Mossop; Rawson Prize (English Essay), 1st, Mr. Biggins; 2nd, Mr. Jones.

The Principal then spoke of the future and the unprecedented situation in which the world would find itself after the war. When "peace breaks out" the position of the ministry will be one of great difficulty, and therefore one of great honour. The College had not called upon its students to enlist in the army (although they had not discouraged them from doing so and had left it to their own decision). There would be a greater need than ever of the work ministers and the Church alone could do. Dr. Mellone said that the College was glad to take its part in helping to re-create the library of the ruined University of Louvain, and had contributed 60 volumes thereto. He concluded by presenting certificates, attesting the completion of their College course, to Mr. Herbert Barnes, Mr. C. Biggins and Mr. Harman Taylor.

The Valedictory Service for the outgoing students was held in the evening at Cross Street chapel, the Welcome into the Ministry being given by the Rev. Alfred Hall, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Mr. Barnes enters upon his ministry at Oldham Road, Manchester; Mr. Biggins at Marple, and Mr. Taylor at Ullet Road, Liverpool, as junior colleague of the Rev. J. Collins Odgers.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE.

ANNUAL MEETING IN MANCHESTER.

THROUGH long decades of our island story the Provincial Assembly has rallied the historic Nonconformity of Lancashire and Cheshire to the sacred cause of civil and religious liberty. Against foreign aggression and domestic reaction it has stood firm in its testimony that where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty. Amid the echoes of the Crimea, the Peninsula, and the wars of the elder years the Assembly mingled the hymn of faith with the dirge of sorrow, and now, to-day, when the drums of Armageddon are rolling down the wind the Assembly meets again to voice the same high faith and to worship at the same shrine. The Metropolitan City of Manchester, whose sons have flocked from mill and forge to weave their young lives into the tragic pattern of our age, was flooded with the surge of its mighty life while its air vibrated to the roll of drums and the triumph song of bugles when we turned aside to the cool and quiet of our ancient seat of piety in Cross Street to re-examine our spirits in the light of its revered associations.

The service with which the day's proceedings commenced formed a striking contrast to the tone and atmosphere of much that was to follow. In council and public meeting we might dare as nationals to proudly vaunt the justice of our cause. Here we bowed ourselves before the Supreme Arbiter of our destiny to receive his high commission and to catch a glimpse of the light beyond these thousand years of strife. Here we met not as nationals but as members of one great family, now, alas, violently torn asunder, but pledged by the fundamentals of our faith to believe in the ultimate realisation of its undying solidarity and brotherhood. This note breathed through the petitions with which the Rev. H. Bodell Smith lifted us into the sense of the divine presence, and it was at once caught and maintained to the end in the sustained and passionate appeal of the preacher, the Rev. J. H. Weatherall. "The voice of thy brothers' blood crieth from the ground," the preacher proclaimed his text, and the shops are full of books and the platforms crowded with wise men who will tell you why. But in their analysis of the causes they miss the cause which is the simple fact that the world has fallen below its ideal and its faith in the brotherhood of man. None deny the beauty of that ideal, but all are too ready to hold it as an ideal, not as a fact to be realised. Given it, all the "causes" of the war would have been transcended, and the voice of our brothers' blood would not be calling to us, haunting our nights and shaming the pursuits of the day.

Brotherhood had been displaced by pride, the old exclusiveness of a chosen people and the religious insolence of the Pharisee. We must pass beyond brotherhood in the narrow sense of one State and one nation; we must transcend the discredited principle of nationality. If we rely on the diplomacy and statecraft of the past there is no hope for the future. Only in passionate faith and persistent practise of the belief in the brotherhood of man, in the admission of our own shortcomings and the endeavours to amend our lives, is there any promise. We had all left undone in the sacred cause of peace the things we should have done, and we had done things we should not have done. We must take upon ourselves the sense of guilt for not having lived more truly for the ideal. We must go home and test our ideal in daily practice, then would come to us peace in our own lives, and the way of peace in the life of the world. With this word of peace we came out to mingle with the crowds left by the passing of a recruiting band, whose music, seeming to fade away in the distance, was, in its way, another word of prophecy.

Mr. A. Nicholson presided at the business meeting in the Memorial Hall in the afternoon. Replying to the question whether the Assembly could properly meet at such a time he re-called some of the great chapters from its history, and the part it had played in the story of our nation, as a sufficient reply to the suggested doubt. The Report on Public Questions was concerned, in the main, with the war and issues arising therefrom, especially the question of temperance. The note of the Report was one of proud confidence in the cause, tempered by humility in the contemplation of the instrument which, in the providence of history, had been chosen to uphold its claims. "This war," it said, "is unparalleled, not only in its scale and in its horror, but also in the importance of the political, moral, and spiritual issues which are at stake. The independence and liberties of the smaller states, the sanctity of solemn obligations, the whole fabric of international law, the usages slowly established for mitigating suffering and protecting non-combatants, the restraints which the conscience of mankind has striven to place upon lawless ambition and brute force—all alike are challenged by our enemies. Their conduct has been an open defiance of those elementary principles of religion and civilisation which have hitherto been supposed to be the common property of all civilised peoples, and the most hopeful bond between them. We have taken up arms in defence of those great ideals and principles, seeing in their maintenance our most real and abiding interest. It is true that our material interests are also involved, but those might, for a time at any rate, and at a price which it would have been a fatal dishonour to pay, have been safeguarded; moreover, those alone would never have aroused our country to the passionate determination for victory which so rightly inspires it to-day. It is in truth a war of the spirit, and through the clash of arms is heard that of the fundamental principles of good and evil."

Mr. John Dendy, in moving the reception of the Report, expressed the belief that England had been gloriously right in the part it had taken. Miss Johnson (Liverpool), in seconding, urged the call to follow the King's lead. Dr. Mellor desired that it should be made clear that the Report was "received" not "adopted," and this having been done the motion passed without any discussion.

The Hall was crowded for the evening meeting. Mr. A. H. Worthington, in the chair, uttered a grave warning on the need for unity which Mr. G. C. Armstrong, who followed, did not wish to challenge, although as an unrepentant passivist, he also looked beyond the present gloom to a larger unity beyond. The Rev. Cyril Flower spoke on Moral Emotion and Goodwill, Mr. L. D. Holt following with a graceful and optimistic review of the trials of faith.

At the Business Meeting, the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A. was elected President, and the Rev. N. Anderton, B.A., Supporter. The following were elected on the General Committee: the Revs. D. Agate, B. C. Constable, E. D. P. Evans, J. Evans, J. M. Mills, G. A. Payne, C. Travers, and J. J. Wright, Mr. J. R. Beard, Miss Dornan, Ald. J. Healey, J.P., Mr. H. P. Greg, Miss H. M. Johnson, Mr. A. Nicholson, Mrs. Renold, and Mr. J. Wigley.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION MOTOR AMBULANCE.

The British Red Cross Society, writing under date, June 25, reports that the motor ambulance presented through the Sunday School Association for service at the front has carried 440 wounded men during the three weeks, May 7 to May 27.

In the thirty-eighth year of its existence Unity, which keeps up a brave fight for freedom in religion and the noblest ideals of citizenship under the direction of the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, of Chicago, has published a special illustrated number for free distribution at the "Panama-Pacific International Exposition." It contains a record of the progress of the paper since it first started, under the name of "The Pamphlet Mission," in 1870, with a warm greeting by the Rev. Robert Collyer; an article on the far-reaching work of the numerous institutions connected with the Abraham Lincoln Centre; the description of a Peace Service conducted in May at All Souls' Church, Chicago, by Mr. Jones, who is speaking a great deal at present on a subject most dear to his heart under the auspices of the Carnegie Peace Foundation, and a number of hymns and poems by past and present contributors. We are glad to know that a special endowment fund of $30,000 has at last been raised to establish Unity on a firmer financial basis, and we hope our American contemporary has a long period of useful work before it on behalf of liberal ideas.

A correspondent writes to inform us, in reference to our paragraph on the Italian Blue Cross last week, that Mrs. Graham-Harrison, 36, Sloane Gardens, S.W., is the hon. secretary of the fund in England, to whom small sums may be sent, thus obviating delay and possible inconvenience in forwarding them direct to Rome. We are glad to learn that Mr. Leonard Hawksley has lately been made an honorary Major in the Italian army in order to facilitate his work for wounded and injured horses in the war zone.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Exeter.—The annual meeting of the Exeter Assembly was held on June 23rd at George's Chapel, Exeter, in the forenoon. There were present the Rev. W. H. Burgess (Moderator), and the Rev. A. E. O'Connor, of Torquay (Scribe of the Assembly), the Revs. C. E. Jewell, of Crediton; F. Allen, Newton Abbot; A. Lancaster, Tavistock; T. F. Brockway, Moretonhampstead; J. Worthington, Cullompton; F. Wood, Colyton; E. Palmer, Uffculme; and R. H. U. Bloor, Exeter. The Rev. T. Brockway was elected Moderator for the year. A paper was read by the Rev. A. Lancaster on 'Christianity and War.' The following resolution was passed, with one dissentient, on the motion of the Rev. W. H. Burgess, of Plymouth, seconded by the Rev. A. E. O'Connor:—"The members of the Exeter Assembly, while supporting a vigorous prosecution of the present war in the interests of national honour, good faith and comradeship, at the same time urge men and women of good-will in all nations to bend their thoughts upon devising some better means than warfare for settling international disputes and securing international justice."

Ilford.—About twenty members of the Rambling Club connected with the Unitarian Church paid a visit to Hampstead on Saturday, June 26th. The Rev. W. H. Drummond met the party at the station and acted as guide. An agreeable half-hour was spent in Miss Lister's garden at Upper Heath, which is mentioned in Richardson's novel, 'Clarissa Harlowe,' and is redolent of memories of Johnson, Addison, and other notabilities of bygone times. The party afterwards had a delightful ramble over the Heath and through the gardens, Mr. Drummond pointing out residences of famous people, and other features of interest. Mr. and Mrs. Drummond and their family kindly entertained the ramblers at tea at their residence in Cannon Place, and in pursuance of a happy thought Mr. Walter Russell, in expressing the thanks of the club to Mr. and Mrs. Drummond for their kindness, suggested that as a further proof of their gratitude a collection should be made for the Belgian Hospital Fund. The idea was promptly acted upon, and Mr. Drummond, in the course of his reply, said this was the second season that the club had visited Hampstead, and he hoped it would now be regarded as an annual event. The party then walked to Rosslyn Hill Chapel whose beautiful stained-glass windows are a never-failing source of pleasure. Here, amid hallowed memories, in the quiet of the summer evening, a short service of prayer and praise was conducted by Mr. Drummond, and thus ended one of the most enjoyable rambles of the season.

Leeds.—At the morning service at Mill Hill Chapel on Sunday last, the Rev. R. N. Cross, paid the following tribute to the memory of the late Capt. Lupton:—"Most of you have heard, during the week, of the death at the front of Capt. Maurice Lupton, the second son of our friend, Mr. F. M. Lupton. He has been carried away in the very prime of life, in the brightness of his powers. These things become common to our experience in these latter days. This cruel war insatiable in its appetite for men, has taken them one by one, hundreds by hundreds, thousands by thousands, but the commonness and the frequency of the experience cannot abate one jot of the sense of bereavement and loss when it comes so near to our own circle. They cannot diminish by one iota our admiration for the heroism of these young men who have gone to lay down their lives for the larger life of the country. We commit his spirit into the hands of God, and are proud that he was ready to go." Sympathetic reference was made also to the death of Pte. Hobson, who, like his family, was long connected with the Chapel Sunday Schools, and who has fallen in action at the Dardanelles. At the close of the service, the Dead March was played by the Chapel Organist (Mr. A. Farrer Briggs).

Leeds (Holbeck).—The Rev. W. R. Shanks, after eleven and a half years of service, has brought his ministry here to an end and will take up an appointment, under the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, as minister of the congregations at Broadway and Idle, Bradford.

Manchester, Moss Side.—An open-air campaign was inaugurated in connection with the Unitarian Church, under very promising conditions, on June 25th. The opening meeting was held at the Alexandra Park gates, the Minister, the Rev. T. M. Salmon, being the speaker, Mr. E. J. Bradford, Chairman of the congregation, presiding. Mr. Salmon took for his subject, 'God and Patriotism,' and pointed out that as there was an inevitable territorial attachment at the root of patriotic sentiment, it was also inevitable that, in the advance of that sentiment toward maturity, this attachment should not only be deepened, but should be the ground and sphere of the most exalted ethical and spiritual endeavour. The address was followed by an earnest discussion.

Manchester, Oldham Road.—Mr. Herbert Barnes of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to become minister of this church.

Rotherham.—The Rev. H. W. King has resigned the ministry of the Church of Our Father, having accepted the pastorate of the Unitarian Church, Lincoln, where he hopes to commence his duties shortly.

The South East Wales Unitarian Society.—A special summer meeting of the above society was held at Tredegar on Monday, June 28th. On the previous day the Unitarian Society at Tredegar held their first anniversary, services being conducted by the Rev. Simon Jones, B.A., President of the Society. The attendances were satisfactory, especially at the evening service, when the room in the Temperance Hall, where the services are usually held, was well filled. The Executive Committee of the Society met on Monday morning under the presidency of the Rev. Simon Jones. Several matters of interest to the Churches came under discussion, and the financial statement presented by the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Gomer Ll. Thomas, was satisfactory. The Rev. Geo. Neighbour gave a most interesting account of a new and successful movement recently inaugurated at Mountain Ash. Since the beginning of May, Sunday morning services in the Church have been discontinued, and Mr. Neighbour, accompanied by many of his church members, has repaired to the mountain side, where religious services have been held. On the first Sunday some seventy or eighty men were present, and the audiences have gone on increasing Sunday by Sunday, until on Sunday morning last it was estimated there were about 300 present. The audience was a very varied one, ranging from the respectably dressed young man and woman and the father with his family, to roughly clad and coarse-visaged men, who habitually frequent the mountain side on Sunday mornings, accompanied by their dogs, setters, whippets, terriers and what not. And yet these men seem to take a keen interest in the proceedings, joining with 'apparent reverence in repeating the Lord's Prayer, singing the hymns from the hymn sheets provided, and listening with great attention to the address. It is intended to continue these services on Sunday mornings, when the weather permits, until the middle of August, and already inquiries are being made as to what is to be done to continue the good work when the special services cease. That has yet to be decided; but the present feeling seems to be that a determined and tactful effort should be made to organise some movement which shall have a permanent influence for good, and the most favoured idea seems to be the formation of an Adult School. We shall watch this promising movement with great interest and hopeful expectation. At the business meeting in the afternoon delegates were present from the churches at Swansea, Newport, Merthyr, Pontypridd, Pentre, Mountain Ash, Nottage and Tredegar. Unfortunately the greater number of the churches affiliated with the Society were not represented, Tredegar being so far away from most of them. Reports were submitted from several of the churches, most of which were of an encouraging nature. At the close of the meeting the delegates were entertained to tea by the lady members of the church. Prior to holding a public meeting in the Temperance Hall at 7.30, the Rev. Geo. Neighbour spoke for a short time in the open air, and extended an invitation to those present to the meeting to be held subsequently in the Hall. A few accepted the invitation, and there was a fairly good audience. The Rev. Simon Jones presided, and the speakers were the Revs. W. T. Lucan Davies, Geo. Neighbour, and Wm. J. Phillips, whose addresses left a deep impression upon the gathering.

Women's League.—The Manchester and District Associate Branch of the League held its summer meeting on Saturday, June 19th, at Todmorden. Over 200 assembled, the other branches represented being:—Accrington, Burnley, Blackley, Bury (Bank Street), Chesham, Denton, Dukinfield, Gee Cross, Gorton, Heywood, Monton, Nelson, Oldham, Pendleton, Stalybridge and Stockport. A reception was held in the School-room by Mrs. Postlethwaite, President of the local branch, and the party then left for a walk conducted by the Rev. A. W. Fox. Subsequently a meeting was held, presided over by Miss Johnstone of Bury, President of the Manchester District League. Mrs. Postlethwaite gave a hearty welcome to the visitors on behalf of the Todmorden members. Miss Johnstone gave an interesting address on 'Equipment and Munitions,' in the course of which she made special reference to the effective work of Mrs. Bernard Allen in connection with the Belgian Hospital Fund promoted by THE INQUIRER. Miss H. Brooke Herford moved a very cordial vote of thanks to the Todmorden friends for their generous hospitality. She spoke of the war relief work accomplished during the year which has elapsed since the outbreak of war, and said that as time went on there would still be need of this work, but without the deadly, fascinating excitement and novelty which was such a stimulus in the first few months of war. She urged members of the League to labour on—remembering their best was still ahead. Mrs. Nansen of Monton seconded the resolution and Miss Ada Barker responded on behalf of the Todmorden Branch. Miss Shaw of Todmorden moved a cordial vote of thanks to Miss Johnstone for her address, and this was seconded by Mrs. Brockbank of Gorton. The visitors then adjourned to the Church where an organ recital was given by Mr. Albion Barker, followed by a service, conducted by the Rev. A. W. Fox, at which a sermon on 'Loyalty' was preached by the Rev. W. L. Schroeder, of Halifax.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF BELGIAN REFUGEES.

The fact that a great number of Belgian refugees have found employment in this country points to many difficulties which are sure to arise when the time comes for the readjustment of labour after the war, but in the meantime we can only be glad that occupation has been found for so many of them in their unfortunate situation. According to the details given in the Charity Organisation Review, gathered from the First Report of the Departmental Committee on the subject, 64,000 Belgians out of a total of 180,000, not including soldiers, who had arrived in England by January, described themselves as occupied persons. Of these, 16,000 are now in employment in this country. It was almost impossible to place certain unemployed refugees, such as painters, sculptors, and artists (400), merchants (2,800), shopkeepers (2,000), clerks (3,300), and 5,500 other members of professional classes, a total of 13,500, mostly men. On the other hand practically every one of 1,200 carpenters, and very many of the 8,300 men belonging to the metal trades are now in employment, and numbers of other persons engaged in various trades have found work also. Very few agriculturists have come over, about 500 farm labourers and several hundred farmers, and although it was hoped that Belgian glass workers might seek the hospitality of England, only about twenty have arrived so far.

HISTORIC BUILDINGS IN BELGIUM.

A committee has been appointed by the Council of the Royal Institute of British Architects to form a record of historic buildings in Belgium, many of which have been destroyed during the present war. This collection should, it is felt, include all buildings of historic interest in Belgium in view of the uncertain course of future events, and an appeal is made to all who possess photographs, measure drawings, sketches, old prints, illustrated guide-books to individual towns, &c., to present these to the R.I.B.A., where they will be embodied in a branch of the library and duly catalogued. The Council is especially anxious to obtain gifts of photographs taken by visitors to the smaller towns, such as Nieuport and Furnes, where there are often houses and churches of great architectural interest which are not illustrated in standard books on the architecture of the country. All gifts should be addressed to Mr. Martin Briggs, A.R.I.B.A., hon. secretary of the Belgian Architectural Sub-Committee, at the Royal Institute of British Architects, 9, Conduit Street, W.

BOOKS FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

A letter was recently sent to Mr. A. Ollivant, Grove Cottage, Penn, Bucks, by Mr. Alexander Paterson, the writer, asking for books for wounded soldiers in France. "I have been a few days at our base hospital at Rouen," he says. "Several thousand men are there waiting after sickness or wounds to return to the trenches. The Y.M.C.A. have very few books. Badly want more. It is the greatest relief of all, after some months in the trenches, to fall back and read quietly for a day or two. Can you stir up the publishers to send a lot of 7d. books to Miss Gardner, Y.M.C.A. Office, Rouen? It is one of the things that is really wanted." We are sure that many of our readers must have some of these handy little volumes by them which they could well spare for this purpose, or money to spend on literature will be gladly received by Mr. Ollivant.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.

Dr. Walsh preached at the final services in the old premises of the Theistic Church at Swallow Street, Piccadilly, on June 27. During July the congregation will meet in Kensington Town Hall (Smaller Hall) in the mornings, lectures being given in one of the parks in the evenings. After the summer vacation, from August 1 to Sept. 5, services will again be held at Kensington for three weeks, and subsequently, we understand, in Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour Street, where opening services will be conducted on October 3.

POPULAR HINDU LITERATURE.

We may not know much about Michael Madhusudan Dutt's epic, 'Megh-nad-badh,' but it has obtained the largest number of votes recently as the result of a plebiscite in the Bengali magazine, Prabasi, Rabindranath Tagore's 'Gitanjali' coming next. These two books occupy the first two places, both in the general list, as well as in the section of poems. Of the best 100 books, 29 are by Tagore, and it is a remarkable fact that in this list there are works from his pen representing all departments of literature except history and lexicons.

The Sunday School Association.

MOTOR AMBULANCE £500 FUND.

The Hon. Treasurer (Mr. W. Blake Odgers, Junr.) acknowledges with thanks the following donations to this Fund.

FINAL LIST.

Mossley S.S., £1 11s.; Mexborough S.S., 10s.; Mansfield S.S. (Additional), 2s.; Cape Town S.S. (South Africa), 10s.; Ashton-under-Lyne S.S., 12s. 6d.; Wolverhampton S.S., 2s. 6d.; Monton S.S. (Additional), £1 15s.; Mottram S.S., 8s. 3d.; A teacher, Hull S.S., £2; Larne and Kilwaughter S.S., £3; Newry friends, 15s.; Malton S.S., 5s.; N. and E. D., 5s.; Warrenpoint S.S., 10s.; Glasgow: Ross Street (Miss A. McIntosh's Class), 5s.

The Fund is now closed. The total amount received is £753 1s. 1½d., contributed by 275 schools and congregations, and some 50 old scholars and teachers individually.

W. BLAKE ODGERS (Junr.), Hon. Treasurer.
Essex Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

June 24, 1915.

Now Ready for July.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE
SUNDAY SCHOOL
MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS:—

Theophilus Lindsey.
Mary Carpenter.
Florence Nightingale.
William Rathbone.

Junior Department—Lewis W. Lewis, M.A.
Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.

THE MUSTARD SEED.—THE HIDDEN
TREASURE.—THE TWO SONS.—THE TALENTS.

Primary Department—Alice L. Colfox.

BY THE WAY. S.S.A. FILING CABINET, &c.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAW-
RENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,
F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive
4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free
of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHREUBALL, }

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOFFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N. 4.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—
Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17,
Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—MISS SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL
ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class
Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s.
Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent
Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

CHORLEY WOOD.—Charming COUNTRY
COTTAGE TO LET, FURNISHED.
Three Bedrooms, Two Sitting-rooms, Kitchen, good Hall, and Bathroom (h. and c.). Delightfully situated by a wood, and surrounded by very beautiful country. Fine views. About an acre of ground. Three Guineas a Week for Three to Nine Months. Within twelve minutes of station, G.C. and Met. Railways.—X. L., INQUIRER Office.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street,
London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work).
Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SUMMER SALE OF GENUINE
IRISH LINEN! Charming hemstitched and embroidered Afternoon Tea Cloths, 2s.
Postage 3d. extra. Catalogue of hundreds of sale bargains free. Send postcard.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s.
on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.
—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street,
Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—
Saturday, July 3, 1915.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

[ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3810.
NEW SERIES, No. 913.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

July

11. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.

18. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

25. Rev. NEANDER ANDERTON, B.A. (of Monton).

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Now Ready for July.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS:—

Theophilus Lindsey.
Mary Carpenter.
Florence Nightingale.
William Rathbone.

Junior Department—Lewis W. Lewis, M.A.

Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.

THE MUSTARD SEED.—THE HIDDEN
TREASURE.—THE TWO SONS.—THE TALENTS.

Primary Department—Alice L. Colfox.

BY THE WAY. S.S.A. FILING CABINET, &c.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged.

THE IMMORALITY OF NON-RESISTANCE,

And other Sermons on the War.

By

The Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Christ and Non-Resistance
Letter and Spirit
Nationalism and Super-Nationalism
What a Man will Die for
Is it Christian to ask God to help us in War?
Cardinal Mercier and the Catholic Outlook

Price One Shilling net.

Postage 2d.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., LTD.
(Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.)

Birmingham: CORNISH BROTHERS, LTD.
(30, New Street.)

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

A SCHOLARSHIP of £20 is offered for COM-PETITION in JULY; age limit 14. Also an ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP of £20 for Boys
under 11. Particulars on application.

Scholarship and Entrance Examination—
JULY 9th.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."

—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut. - Col.
Stephenson, Cawnpore, India.

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, July 11.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.—Final Service of the present series. The Services will be resumed on October 3rd.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES; 6.30, Mr. J. PIPKIN.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Mr. J. PIPKIN; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAR, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Miss M. FRANCIS.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; 7, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
 ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE REDFERN, M.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45 and (STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. A. SHAW, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30.—Bi-centenary Services, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT, M.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. R. DAVIS, B.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mt. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES PEACH.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. FISHER SHORT.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.]

WORSLEY-DECKER.—On July 1st, at the Toxteth Park Registry, and afterwards at St. Mary's Chapel for the Blind, Liverpool, by the Rev. C. F. GUNTON, M.A., Arthur Algernon, younger son of Philip J. Worsley, of Rodney Lodge, Clifton, Bristol, to Alexandra Laura, youngest daughter of Hermann Decker, of 4, Parkfield Road, Liverpool.

DEATH.

FELL.—On Thursday, July 1st, at 3, Eldon Road, Hampstead, Eleanor Fell, daughter of the late Dr. Fell, of Ambleside, aged 71.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. Victor Moody has removed to "Rydal," Bourne Avenue, Shirley, Southampton.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, YOUNG LADY as HOUSE-PARLOUR-MAID during War; Cook being gardener's wife living in cottage. Convenient house. Two in family. Write, with full particulars, to MRS. PEARSALL, Glæd Hame, Letchworth.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	335	FOR THE CHILDREN:—		Presbyterian College, Carmarthen	342
JULY 14	337	The River Derwent in July	340	John Huss	342
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	338	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		A New Unitarian Church in Sheffield	342
THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY AND THE PRESENT CRISIS	338	Belgian Hospital Fund	341	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	343
		Degree Day at Leeds University	341	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	344

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE have no definite news for our readers about our Belgian Hospital work this week, as Mrs. Allen is still away in France. Letters which have to run the gauntlet of the censorship travel very slowly, and in any case new plans cannot be disclosed until they are fully mature. We may, however, go so far as to say that we seem to be on the eve of an important extension of our activities. We have been aware for some time of the existence of an important group of hospitals for Belgian wounded in the neighbourhood of Rennes. Rumours have reached us of their serious need of help, and we have been anxious to make personal acquaintance with them and their medical staff, as we have done with such happy results in Calais.

It is this new field of operations which Mrs. Allen and Mr. Kelland are inspecting at present. They arrived in Rennes on Monday armed with the necessary introductions, and word has come through that they have been cordially received by the General in command, and our help will be most welcome. Mrs. Allen will describe her visit and give details of the most pressing needs as soon as she returns. Meanwhile, though it is summer, we hope that there will be no slackening of effort on the part of our contributors either in money or clothes. The suffering continues and the needs multiply from day to day.

THE two Houses of the Convocation of Canterbury have been in session during the past week. The problems arising out of the war have occupied a good deal of attention, but there has also been some attempt to inform and instruct the public mind by the familiar method of passing abstract resolutions. On Tuesday, for instance, the following pious expression of opinion was carried in the Lower House:—"That Christianity is concerned, not merely with the private life of the individual, but also with the due discharge of national responsibilities. It is, therefore, a function of the Church to aid in the cultivation of a higher sense of national duty." This is a matter upon which most people have made up their minds long ago, and its acceptance at the present moment as an adequate expression of the judgment of the Church of England is perilously like creeping after public opinion instead of a bold effort to fashion and inspire it.

THERE was more reality about the discussion of the need of religious work among our troops in the Upper House. The Archbishop of Canterbury pointed out that men who came back wounded or ill wanted something more than amusement. He feared that the people who were doing most in a self-sacrificing way for our wounded and ailing soldiers were rather unhelpful to them than otherwise in a spiritual sense. In their desire to give these men a good time they had overlooked to a large extent the importance of providing adequate spiritual ministrations. The Bishop of London spoke gravely of the need of more chaplains for the front. He had evidence that the supply was still very inadequate and the chaplains who were at the front were terribly overworked and in danger of breaking down owing to the strain. All this gave the Bishop of Oxford an opportunity for some pointed remarks on the need of more socialism in the Church. The Church, he said, was facing the same situation as had occurred in the State. They had gone on adopting methods of pure individualism; then there arose a great crisis, and The Times and The Spectator called for industrial organisation in articles which would have electrified their readers a year ago. In a time of emergency they had to rectify their methods, and the Church was confronted with the same problem.

THOSE who have been in the habit of reflecting upon the inadequacy of our present arrangements—and the remark applies with equal force to Nonconformity—will be grateful to the Bishop of Oxford for his criticism. The idea of private property and vested interests enters far too largely into the idea of "a living," and the better paid posts are not always coveted because they provide a wider opportunity of doing good. Our spiritual forces are not nearly mobile enough. At the present time the ablest men ought to be free to go where they can serve best. It is not creditable that the army should lack chaplains of manly character and kindling influence, because we are so slow to modify our habits and the parish or congregation thinks chiefly of its own preference or convenience. At the same time we must not overlook the amount of quiet spiritual work which is being carried on in unofficial ways, through the channels of personal influence and example. The ranks of our army are full of religious men as they have never been before.

* * *

THE following address has been signed by the chief municipal authorities in the United Kingdom, and will be presented on their behalf, to President Poincaré by the French Ambassador :—

"We, the Lord Mayors, Lord Provosts, Mayors and Provosts of the United Kingdom, speaking in the name of those whom we represent, desire to offer through you, our homage of respect and gratitude to our gallant Allies, the French nation. Throughout these islands the hearts of the people have but one sentiment towards them—a sentiment of deep sympathy for their unmerited sufferings and of profoundest admiration for their gallantry in the field. Side by side with them we will fight to the end of this war that has been thrust upon us, until a lasting and righteous peace is won; and it is our earnest hope and prayer that the concord between our two great nations, founded on common sacrifice and cemented by the blood of thousands of their bravest and best, may continue as long as the world endures."

* * *

THERE was a useful debate on National Economy in the House of Lords on Tuesday. The warnings cannot be too loud and insistent. The State, like the private citizen, will have to cut down its establishment charges which were fixed at their present high figure during a time of unexampled national prosperity. In some of the speeches the desire to blame the past for thoughtless extravagance was a little too prominent. Those who live in spacious surroundings themselves should be the last to criticise expenditure on noble public buildings and other things like museums and parks, which add to the comfort and amenity of life for the mass of the people, at a time when we can afford it. What we have to realise is that we cannot afford it now, and are not likely to be able to do so for many years to come.

* * *

CURTAILMENT of expenditure there certainly must be, and possibly before long a reduction of salaries over the whole area of public administration; but it is a question which must be faced with common sense and a sound instinct for comparative values. There are some directions where we must go slowly if we do not wish to cripple the recuperative powers of the nation. To hamper education and so diminish the common stock of intelligence, or to call "halt" in the long battle for sanitation and public health would be disastrous folly. This was the burden of the important speech which Lord Haldane contributed to the debate. He pointed out that they had not only to bring the war to an end, but also to prepare for peace expenditure on a diminished income. In the future we should need merchants trained to hold their own in skill and ingenuity with new competitors. Therefore, it was most unfortunate to take the Education Department as a field in which economy should be exercised. Ruthless economies, he insisted, could not be practised in every direction. They could not be practised in the fighting services now, and they could not be exercised in regard to education, the protection of the public health, and the preservation of infant life.

* * *

At a North of England Theological Conference, which was held at the Independent College, Bradford, last week, Principal Griffith Jones attacked one of our pressing war problems with courage and directness. In a paper on the effect of war on population, he emphasised the danger of stagnation which had been fostered deliberately over large areas of the civilised world during the past generation.

We were face to face [he said] with a widespread revolt against motherhood. A startling fact revealed by inquiry was that the decrease in the birth-rate in all European countries ran along religious and not merely national lines. It was the Protestant communities that were sinners above the others in this respect. The Catholic and Jewish communities were so far untouched with this poison in every land. The special relation of the war to this question took a very serious aspect. The war was working havoc with the male population of the progressive countries of Europe. Prospective fathers were being killed off by thousands, and it might be by millions before the end of the war. If this war continued another year the white races would be bled of their most desirable and promising elements. The women of corresponding age and quality remained, and many of them would remain unmated for life. Meanwhile, the yellow races and the lower races of the East generally were as prolific as ever. The nation could not allow the present state of things to continue, and he relied on much being done to remove the evil by education and religious incentive.

JULY 6 was the 500th anniversary of the martyrdom of John Huss at Constance. A meeting was held by the London Czech Committee to commemorate the event, when Lord Bryce delivered an address in which he gave an admirable sketch of the life of Huss, and expressed to the Czech people in England our admiration for their national hero and our sympathy with them in their present trouble. In intellectual force Wycliffe was greater than his disciple. Huss contributed practically nothing of his own to the fermenting heresies of his day. But he did something much more enduring. He gave to the Christian Church one of the purest of her martyrs, and to his country the inspiring memory of a national leader. At the present moment his name reminds us how often fervid patriotism has gone hand in hand with exalted faith. One of the noblest figures on the Luther monument at Worms is that of Huss, the head slightly bent, the grave face absorbed in contemplation of the crucifix. Will the sons of the men who placed it there pause to remember that this precursor of Luther has won enduring fame not as a critic of Rome, but as a prophet of nationality?

* * *

THROUGH the good offices of Sir Walter Raleigh, Dr. F. C. Conybeare has published a brave recantation of some harsh criticism of the English Government and of Sir Edward Grey in particular, which has been circulated widely in America. He has studied again the published records of the diplomatic transactions of last July and has come to the conclusion that he was wrong in the interpretation which he put upon them.

"My new study," he writes, "has forced upon me the conviction that in my letter to a friend residing in America which, against my wishes and injunctions, was published there, apart from the deplorable tone of my allusions to Sir E. Grey and Mr. Asquith, I was quite wrong in imputing the motives which I did, especially to the former. It does appear to me, as I read these dispatches over again, that Sir Edward throughout had in view the peace of Europe, and that I ought to have set down to the awful contingencies with which he was faced many passages which I was guilty of grossly misinterpreting. I was too ready to forget that in the years of the Balkan wars it was after all he alone who, by his patient and conciliatory treatment of the situation, held in check the antagonistic forces which last July he was ultimately unable to control. I was too ready to ascribe to want of good will on his part results which harsh necessity entailed on him; and I deeply regret that I mistook his aims and, in my endeavours to be fair to the enemy, was grossly unjust to him. I am only anxious to undo, if it be still possible, some of the harm which my hasty judgment and intemperate language has caused."

The candour of this admission is hardly a matter for weak words of praise. Dr. Conybeare has the virtues of a great critic; he knows the value of evidence, and he makes allowance for the fallibility of his own judgment in the pursuit of truth.

JULY 14.

JULY 14 is the Festival of the French Republic. Last year it was kept with all the customary pomp and merriment. The weather was superb. How hot the soldiers looked in their long coats! How free from care the great crowds that surged through the streets! How remote the thought of the savage desolation of war! Even the 'Marseillaise' lost its rousing martial air and seemed only to give a national benediction to the songs of lovers and the laughter of children. This year there will be no streets bedecked with flags and no sounds of mirth. It will be a day of solemnity on which the nation renews its vows and gathers fresh strength from its ennobling memories for the struggle of the present hour. And to us, who are proud and happy to be the ally of France in the greatest contest for freedom which the world has known, the day should be sacred to gratitude for her courage and gallantry, for the burdens which she has borne already, and the spirit, unwearied and undismayed, with which she is facing the future.

Hitherto we have been saved from the worst horrors of war. Our country has not been invaded. Our homes are still inviolate. How much more terrible has been the fate of France. Some of her richest provinces are in the hands of the enemy, and the civilian population, her women and children, have suffered hideous wrong at the hands of a soldiery organised for brutality. No one who has read the article by Prof. J. H. Morgan on 'German Atrocities in France' in The Nineteenth Century for June and weighed its meaning, the things indicated as well as the things described, can fail to admire the collectedness of her leading men, the high self-respect which holds desolating anger in check. The following passage from an article on 'The Soul of France,' by Miss Jessie L. Weston in the current issue of The Quest describes exactly what we mean:—

"The atmosphere is absolutely free from the miasma of poisonous spite. There are no 'Hymns of Hate' to be heard or maledictory greetings exchanged. But those Germans who apparently judging from this silence, write and talk of a possible rapprochement between Germany and France, to the detriment of England, entirely underrate the depth of French resentment. It finds little expression in words, simply because it goes too deep for utterance. Germany has sinned past pardon, as in their belief she has sinned past human punishment. 'What can we do?' they ask, with a shrug of the shoulders. 'We cannot outrage and torture women and children or desecrate churches!' But forgiveness? 'Oh, les pardonner!' said a Frenchwoman, with an eloquent gesture of her hand, waving away the idea as outside the limits of possible discussion.I have heard of men returning from the trenches suffering from absolute 'soul-shock,' due to the recognition of having been brought face to face with a power of evil the existence of which had been previously undreamed of."

This is the living martyrdom of France, and reverence is not too high a word for the feeling evoked by the silent courage and the tragic sense of moral reality with which she is facing it.

There was much talk of a revival of religion in France before the war, and some people will probably regard what is taking place now as only the consummation of a slow spiritual change. But that is hardly a correct statement of the case. It is true that anti-clericalism, of the virulent type described some years ago in the brilliant pages of Mr. Bodley, was a spent force. The popularity of the books of M. Maurice Barrès afforded some measure of the strength of the reaction; but history shows only too clearly that a recoil, led by a literary coterie, may be controlled by other motives than those which spring directly from deep religious conviction. Moreover, the revival of interest in the spiritual significance of life was, at least, as strong outside ecclesiastical circles as within them, and the two movements showed no tendency to combine. In this way the spiritual life of the country was rent asunder. But now the war, through its discipline in seriousness and its sharp disclosure of the true values of life, has revealed common ground. No wise man will attempt to forecast the issue. Will it be a triumph for the Church or a fresh sundering of hearts when the hour of danger is past? For the moment it is the reality of moral union that matters. One purpose animates the whole people, and also makes us one with them. The anchor of this purpose is within the unseen world. The clearness with which it is conceived, and the steadiness with which it is pursued—this in itself is an act of faith.

But July 14 is chiefly a political festival. It commemorates what France means to French men and women, the abiding qualities of her civilisation; and let us remember that that civilisation is idealistic and humanitarian to the core. France can wage war with intensity of purpose and a consuming passion for victory, but she is not a military nation in the sense in which we apply the term to Germany. She could never make her intellect the servile tool of the State or put her imagination in chains. We have been slow to recognise the ardour with which she has explored the problems of government, and the fruitfulness of her experiments in democracy. Prejudice prolongs its life indefinitely when it calls great literature to its aid, and till lately the thunderous periods of Burke or the gentler conservatism of Wordsworth still echoed in our ears. But that is past. The political alliance, which has now been cemented by our blood and our sorrows, is full of good omen for the happiness of the world. For ourselves the sacrifices of the war will not have been in vain, if friendship becomes so secure that it can pass beyond compliments and mutual admiration, and our own life as a people is permanently enriched by some of the best gifts which France has to bestow—mental alertness, imaginative insight into the far-reaching problems of civilisation, and a happy tolerance, which enables good manners to walk hand in hand with strong convictions, amid the differences in social habit, in politics or religion, which often plunge the Englishman into dark forebodings or bitterness of soul.

Soaring France!

Now is Humanity on trial in thee:

Now may'st thou gather humankind in fee:

Now prove that reason is a quenchless scroll;

Make of calamity thine aureole,

And bleeding head us thro' the troubles of the sea.

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

IF thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light rise in darkness, and thine obscurity be as the noonday; and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in dry places.—Isaiah lviii. 10, 11.

THE Christian is prepared to build a temple to God on the grave of every earthly hope, and even out of the stones of the sepulchre. "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it," is a principle which turns even the prison and the Cross to manifestations of divine goodness, and uses the utmost violence of human selfishness and malice as the opportunity for the outflow of an infinite love which, so to speak, absorbs it and swallows it up. EDWARD CAIRD.

FAR 'yond this narrow parapet of Time,
With eyes uplift, the poet's soul should look
Into the Endless Promise, nor should brook
One prying doubt to shake his faith sublime;
To him the earth is ever in her prime
And dewiness of morning; he can see
Good lying hid, from all eternity,
Within the teeming womb of sin and crime;
His soul should not be cramped by any bar,
His nobleness should be so God-like high
That his least deed is perfect as a star,
His common look majestic as the sky,
And all o'erflooded with a light from far,
Undimmed by clouds of weak mortality.
LOWELL.

WE beseech thee, O God, to guide and direct thy people in the way in which they should walk, and to keep them faithful to the duties to which thou hast called them. Give wisdom, uprightness, and a noble spirit to our rulers, and to all who are in places of authority and trust. May the laws by which our country is governed be thy laws, and may the obedience they require be a willing obedience rendered unto thee, the supreme ruler and law-giver of the earth.

May every calling be fulfilled in truth and honesty, with diligence and goodwill. Busied with the labours and cares of our daily life, may we find, in all, the way of honour and righteousness and peace; that at home or abroad, in the world of men or in our solitary hours, in our harder toil, or in simple and lowly tasks, we may be as messengers who speed to do thy bidding, and bring to thee for thy consecration and acceptance the fruit of all our labours and the issues of all our life. AMEN.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY AND THE PRESENT CRISIS*

BY PROF. G. DAWES HICKS.

THE ministry of Christ—wherein does its essence consist, and what is its characteristic difference from other ministries that have claimed the allegiance and the exertions of men? If it is to be a ministry based on the example of Christ's, there can clearly be only one principle by which it must be animated—the principle, namely, of the abnegation or sacrifice of self, of the giving of self away in order to find it in the larger life of Love. "This thought it is," says a well known theologian, "that makes the crucifix sublime—that gives its calm and intensity to Christian Art—that sings in the Agnus Dei, and fills the interval between the heroic and the saintly mind." And he goes on to observe that although the sacrifice of selfish desires has never been unknown among men and cannot, therefore, be claimed as a novelty in the ethics of the gospel, yet the difference between, for instance, the Greek and the Christian conquest of self is to be found in the fact that whilst the one may be described as a self-assertion, the other is a self-surrender, whilst the one is a preference of reason to passion, of honour to meanness, the other is also the relinquishment of personal inclination to what it takes to be the guidance of the Holiest of all. "This conscious identification of God with whatever is felt to be claiming us, this overshadowing sense of His communion with us in every higher trust and admiration, this investiture of the whole moral life with a sacramental value, is," he adds, "the distinctive characteristic of the Christian temper." But I would urge more than this. When there came to men through Christ, the conception of the boundless love of God the Father—a love transcending all the distinctions of birth or rank, of class or country, of culture or education, transcending even the terrible barrier of human guilt and sin; when Christ proclaimed as vital to a religion of love the assurance that no child of man should perish, but that stretching away interminably before him was a future of ever increasing spiritual richness and blessedness, then for the first time there dawned upon the world the truth, in a sense in which it had never dawned upon the world before, of the dignity and worth of man—the truth that not merely as a citizen of a state, but as an integral part of the divine order of the universe, each individual soul had a perfectly infinite value. For Plato and Aristotle, deep and penetrative though their interpretation of the moral life was, the phrase "human brotherhood" had no meaning; and although you may find it gradually acquiring such in the minds of the later teachers of Greece, yet it was only in the light of Christian trust that this meaning was either fully grasped or widely prevalent as a motive power of thought and action. That God is in this world, the Father of every man, the Spirit that is moving them onwards to perfection, stage after stage, revelation after revelation—such is the conviction upon which reposes the truth of human brotherhood, and without which it would have no valid foundation. To keep alive that profound trust, to exhibit its sweet reasonableness amidst all the baffling and distracting details of our earthly existence, to show forth, by personal devotion, the fortitude and nobility and beauty of character which it engenders, to make manifest the consecration it lends to the humblest lot, and the invisible glory it sheds upon all the acts that spring from it—this is still the function of those who would take upon themselves the yoke of Christ, and who would go forth, with Him as their leader, not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give their life a ransom for many.

You are about to enter upon the duties of this sacred calling, and in it I wish you every happiness and prosperity that any faithful servant of the Master may desire to win. Prophecy its message with courage, with the fire of conviction, with joyful hope, with imaginative joy, and have faith that even in the face of what seems to be its very antithesis, its victory in the end is secured—have faith that before it, the gigantic evils which are stalking abroad in the world, must in the long yield and succumb.

I say this, and in no halting tones, in full view of the fact that the moment at which you are commencing your life's work is a moment of unspeakable solemnity, when the very fate of civilisation itself seems trembling in the balance. What a vast and stupendous change has come over the heart and soul of society since last we met for a like purpose as that for which we are now assembled, twelve months ago! All at once, and with lightning swiftness, we have been plunged into the most appalling tragedy of history, into the direst catastrophe that has ever yet been due to the deliberate design of man. Suddenly, last August, almost before ordinary men and women could realise what had occurred, millenniums of progress were cast into the melting pot, and we were back again in days of barbaric savagery. And now, for the time being, at any rate, the material factors in human existence have succeeded in gaining ascendancy and are in large measure quenching the idealisms of the world. The tremendous resources which science has accumulated for the advance of civilisation are being concentrated upon its destruction. A cathedral into whose structure had been breathed the thought and aspirations of an epoch is shattered in a few hours. A library replete with irreplaceable treasures of intellectual genius and patient toil vanishes into smoke; and those who were but yesterday the custodians of learning and scholarship proclaim themselves helpless in the hands of what they call "the grim necessity." And hardly less terrible in its way than the frightful loss of life—the very flower and hope often of the nations engaged in the conflict—is the tragedy of the spirit of which we are the witnesses:—the uprooting of countless ties of sympathetic feeling, the engendering of distrust and even of hatred, the disposition to attribute the worst motives to those who were formerly regarded as being animated by the best; above all, the eclipse of the consciousness of human brotherhood and of faith in the possibility of that commonwealth of mankind in the coming of which so many of us had dared to believe. Can you wonder, if, on all sides of us, doubts and misgivings are being loudly expressed as to the efficacy of a religion that has not made men proof against the commission of so colossal a crime, and that everywhere predictions may be heard that this war will have as one of its consequences the recognition of the failure and collapse of Christianity as a principle of life and conduct? What is all your Christian teaching worth, thousands are asking at the present hour, if after nineteen centuries of its dominance, this is the kind of thing that yet can happen? We are bidden to contemplate the ancient Roman stoics, the men who at the beginning of our era proclaimed, in the words of Cicero, "a universal society of the human race." Few of them, it is true, spoke in disparagement of war, but they did not do so because the Roman empire was encircled by uncivilised, or only partially civilised, peoples, and to have laid down its arms would have been to have flung back into barbarism the great provinces it had won for civilisation. But no such plea can be made by any European state to-day. The present struggle is one of civilised man against civilised man, and assuredly Seneca or Plutarch or any other leader of the Stoic movement would have insisted on the peaceful settlement of the dispute, or else they would have ceased to talk about the brotherhood of man. The inference, then, we are intended to draw is obvious. Ought not the Christian Church to be constrained in very shame to abandon its precepts, and to acknowledge that its insistence on them has been of small avail in the practical affairs of the world?

* Annual Address to the Students of the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, delivered on Wednesday, June 30, 1915.

This is in truth an old argument—although the awful magnitude of the crisis through which we are passing is sure to throw over it a plausibility it has seldom had before—and I have no intention of attempting to refute it now. As a matter of fact, it possesses no more real validity than would the contention that the continued existence of prisons and courts of criminal law proves that the mission of Christianity has been a mockery and a pretence. If, indeed, all the citizens of the European nations engulfed in this deadly strife were Christians not merely in name but in spirit and in feeling, if the inner fire of Christlike love were burning ever in their hearts, and expressing itself in their thoughts and deeds—then, if suddenly and with their mental character still unaltered, they let loose upon each other the ghastly instruments of torture and death, there would be indeed reason for thinking that there was something radically wrong with the faith which animated them, something essentially mischievous in a condition of soul that was compatible with such enormities as these. Not only, however, is that not the case, but no honest critic of Christian morality would ever venture to maintain that the conjunction of features I have indicated is so much as conceivable. No; we may admit with sorrow that the Christianisation of mankind is a slow and tardy process, even in countries where Christian teachers and institutions abound, but that no more shows that its completion would not be a blessing to our race than the presence of ugliness shows the folly of beauty, or the persistence of vice shows the futility of virtue.

I do not think, therefore, that the Christian teacher is, in any way, called upon to recast the tenets of his faith by reason of the dire calamity he is compelled, at the present moment, to be the witness of. What, however, he is, and with alarming convincingness, called upon to recognise and to take account of is the tremendous power of the forces arraigned against him, and the ease and rapidity with which they can, for the moment, acquire the upper hand. None of us knew, before the crash came, except perhaps the very few who were conducting the diplomatic machinery, the trend events were taking, or the influences that were secretly at work tending to let loose the instruments of carnage and butchery. We were resting—and I imagine the majority of the German populace were resting likewise—too complacently upon the assurance that the sanity and moral feeling of mankind were too strong and deep-rooted to permit the outbreak of a scourge so fearful that even the idea of it was hateful and repellent. Nor do I believe, for an instant, that if the people of the various countries concerned had been first consulted a single gun would have been fired. I am persuaded that the spontaneous moral feeling of well-nigh every civilised people on the surface of the globe is sound at the core, and that if it be allowed free play it may be relied upon to throw its weight on the side of the just and right. But the pitiable reflection that every thoughtful man must have upon his conscience at the present juncture is that the mass of the people did not see, and had no conception of, the direction in which the tendencies rife amongst them were inevitably leading.

The story has several times been told of late of the manner in which the ideas and notions of a narrow military clique insidiously crept into and warped the consciousness of the German nation. It is one of the saddest metamorphoses that ever transformed the life of a great people—transformed it, I think, to a large extent without the people themselves being in the least aware of the mischief that was being done—and the sadness of it arises largely from this, that it resulted in the direct opposite of all that is best and noblest in the last hundred years of that country's history. Think of Germany as she was half a century ago—the home of science, of philosophy, of art, and of literature—the guardian of all the higher interests of humanity, whose young men were seeing visions and whose old men were dreaming dreams. Gradually the giants of those days passed away, and no successors arose. A time of smaller things had arrived. Then there supervened the starving mental diet of scientific specialism and mechanical invention; territorial conquest and commercial expansion intoxicated the mind of the community, and the drill sergeant usurped the place of the thinker. Germany became Prussianised, military discipline became everywhere the order of the day, and Nietzsche's doctrine of the will to power, of the virtue of self-assertion, found a soil already prepared for its reception. Yes; we have reason indeed to lament that change. But all the same we cannot pride ourselves that we as a nation have been free from the taint of a similar transformation. Men talk condescendingly now of what they are wont to call the Victorian Age. It was an age, nevertheless, of which every Englishman, and every Welshman likewise, may well be proud. We in that age, like the Germans in the time of Hegel, had come to trust in the rationality and order of the universe; we too were convinced then that beneficial reforms of a social and political kind were to be won along the peaceful lines of argument and persuasion. Freedom was slowly broadening down from precedent to precedent. By degrees democracy was accepted by the constitution, and the constitution in its turn accepted democracy. Yet throughout loyalty to the law of the land had been recognised as a citizen's duty, and observance of it, so long as it continued to be law, as the fundamental condition of progress. Long before the outbreak of this war, however, a new attitude of mind was becoming increasingly prevalent. On all hands, the view was gaining currency that constitutionalism and legality were outworn ideas, useful only to stave off awkward decisions. Men must fight for their rights and women also must fight for theirs. To wait for the conversion of opponents was looked up as an indication of weakness; make yourself sufficiently unpleasant, and opposition would speedily collapse and your object would be attained. This attitude of mind was by no means peculiar to the advocates of progressive measures; it suited equally well those of a reactionary temper. The Ulster conservatives were prepared to resort to force rather than accept a statute they disliked no less than the Nonconformists to resort to passive resistance of what the legislature had decreed. And the bellicose diatribes of irresponsible journalists were quite in keeping with the new egoism. Thus one by one the traditional securities of constitutional government were being undermined; and it was coming to be regarded as a sign of manliness rather than as a ground of reproach to violate not only the letter but the spirit of the law.

In the light of these symptoms, the future historian will, I imagine, describe what has happened as the bursting of a long gathering storm. He will point to the fact that at the beginning of the twentieth century a curiously retrograde current of feeling and sentiment passed through the consciousness of the nations, and that all unwittingly the old dogma that might is right, which Socrates disposed of two thousand years ago in the house of Callicles, re-asserted itself unabashed, and undeterred by the ideal achievements of an epoch glorious beyond comparison in the attainment of the ends that make for the spiritual elevation of mankind. Corruptio optimi pessima will be the refrain that will rise to the lips of those who contemplate the record as it will be handed down to our posterity. Even Plato in his old age seems to have thought that there was working in the world a principle of evil as well as a principle of good, and certainly it would appear at present as though the spirit of Mephistopheles were devising schemes to blind the human conscience. Such will be one page of the narrative, but the history of the period will not terminate thus. Robert Chalmers spoke once of "the cost of moral movement," and monstrously wrong and immoral as all or almost all, wars are, they have not seldom marked fresh stages in moral progress. So I cannot doubt it will be with the present iniquity. The very vastness of the crime against humanity contains in itself the pledge of its true nature standing out at last in a form that will be undisguised and unmistakeable. From this day forward men will see in a new light the meaning of the doctrine that might is right, and the enormity of the procedure of resorting to the method of the animal to win what we take to be our due will stand revealed as never it has been revealed before. For in the merely animal nature the bodily appetites and passions are simply natural tendencies seeking their own ends; but in a being endowed with reason and intelligence, these passions and appetites do not remain what they are in the animal, they draw into themselves a massive power of diabolical wickedness by stealing and perverting the highest goods of the soul. This war, though red in tooth and claw, will yet, I venture to believe, be the prelude to a new and brighter world, in which the Kingdom of the Spirit shall at last acquire supreme command over its own conquests. Men at last will realise the infamy and degradation of basely converting the gains of knowledge, science art, and morality to the creation of an inferno on the fair plains of earth; they will no longer tolerate the depraved ingenuity of employing the gifts of reason to magnify a myriad-fold the brutality of the brutes.

A great moral regeneration is about to renovate the human spirit and to sweeten the habits and intercourse of men. Aye, already, we can see it dawning. Who of us has not, during the last few months, been made aware of the sublime heroism and self-surrender of which the human soul is capable. A new type of Christian self-forgetfulness, of Christian self-surrender, has sprung into being, or rather the old type has found new means of showing forth its inherent grandeur. Mothers have been parting from their sons, husbands and wives have been bravely resolving to bear the strain of anxiety for one another's sake; lovers have been wrenched from their beloved, often never to link hand in hand again. Such episodes are no longer rareties which can be related in the pages of romance or even in the columns of the daily press; they have become habitual, and there is probably no one of us who has not witnessed instances innumerable. "I shall have no friends or relatives left," said a fellow-traveller to me as I was coming here, "if this war continues much longer." The families of the rich and those of the poor are fired with one resolve; in the trenches, on the seas, or at the workshops, there is equally to be found the genuine life of self-surrender. From the universities and colleges, the merchant's desk, and the tradesman's counter, men are hastening voluntarily to perform what they believe to be their duty. And it is in no spirit of bravado, with no tinge of jingoism, that our young men are setting out on their precarious undertaking. There is a seriousness, an intensity, an earnestness in their whole tone and bearing which testifies beyond question to the quiet dignity of the soul that is in them. Two years ago we should have said that a revival of national devotion such as this was simply impossible. "Impossible be strange attempts to those that weigh their pains in sense," but not to those that are impelled to do and dare by a lofty idea of justice and righteousness. We have been taught once again, and with striking demonstration, the lesson we are incessantly requiring to learn, that men are far greater than they seem, far greater even than they themselves are conscious of. Face to face with a tremendous issue, the inner life of a rational being evinces itself as a centre of marvellous and unexpected power; the resources of moral energy prove themselves to be well-nigh inexhaustible. Even natures previously judged to be shallow and superficial rise to the emergency and display qualities of sterling worth. The youth of our own and of other countries are meeting this crisis in the world's history with a courage, a determination, a heroism, falling in no way short of what nerved the Christian martyrs in the days of the Roman persecution. You, gentlemen, are commencing the work of your vocation at a moment that will be for ever memorable in the annals of our race. That it will demand from you the utmost exertions of intellect and heart and will go without the saying. What depths of experience most of those to whom you will minister will have fathomed! From what a width of spiritual insight will they estimate the sufficiency of your message! In countless respects you will have rather to learn from them than they from you. It is unquestionably true that the war will alter many things. It will not, as some writers appear to imagine, render accurate and minute scholarship obsolete, nor convert philosophy into a species of belles lettres. But it will cause the aims and purposes of human life to stand forth with a reality and a vividness they have rarely done before; it will dissipate with unerring directness a thousand mists that have hitherto been blinding our eyes. You will have to contribute your share to the reconstruction of society that must soon engage the energies of us all. It will be part of your function to preserve and keep intact, for the peaceful relationships of life, the splendid enthusiasms and the noble qualities of character which are now being awakened in such profusion. Quit you then like men, and be strong. You, too, must be warriors, with much of the soldier and the martyr spirit, if you are to be a source of power and of helpfulness to the men and women who, after passing through this fiery trail, will seek a religious home where honest thought and manly purpose wrestle with the problems and mysteries of life. You, too, must be warriors, such warriors as he whom Wordsworth depicted, who

If he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven hath joined
Great issues, good or bad, for human kind,
Is happy as a lover; and attired
With sudden brightness, like a man
inspired;
And, through the heart of conflict, keeps the law
In calmness made, and sees what he foresaw.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE RIVER DERWENT IN JULY.

THE sources of the Greta and the Derwent lie not far apart among the Lakeland mountains. The beck which feed them rush swiftly over the same sort of rocky bed. For the first few miles of its course the same kind of animal, bird, insect, fish, and plant life is found in and about the Derwent that is found in and about the whole course of the short Greta, before it joins and loses itself in the Derwent.

But the two rivers do not remain alike until they meet. Why not? Because the Derwent flows into the lake to which it gives its name—Derwent-water. As its waters reach the level land at the head of the lake they lose their speed, and, except in times of flood, flow very gently into the beautiful lake, and creep as gently out again at the other end. It is the short bit of course, a bare half mile, of the Derwent from the lake to the spot where it meets the Greta that I want to tell you about. The land on each side of this portion of the river is a wide flat, the dip of the bed is very slight, therefore the stream glides softly by without a ripple. The plant life that flourishes in and near quiet water is here in abundance. The tall reeds and sedges that fringe many portions of the lake are continued for many yards on either bank of the Derwent. Thin shabby brown plumes, the remains of last summer's feathery glory, still flutter from the tips of faded yellow reeds, while this year's crop of fresh young ones is springing up thickly around them, growing fast day and night. Open with careful fingers the topmost shoot of a young reed and you will find a silvery feather-like growth which is to ripen into a brown plume and take the place of one of these old ones which are slowly fading in the hot July sunshine.

These reeds and sedges are the nesting places of birds which love still waters. Sedge-warblers come here from their winter quarters in warmer lands. They build a fairly deep cup-shaped nest low down among aquatic herbage, or at the foot of a bush among the marshy undergrowth. Restless little birds are they. You can hear them on the move if you cannot always see them, for, if strangers are about, you are sure to hear them rattle out their alarm note of "chuck-uck-uck-uck-chur-r" as they flit along keeping you well in sight, even when hidden themselves amid the forest of tall stems. The best way to see a sedge-warbler at close quarters is to stand still a yard or two from the edge of the green thicket. In a minute or two you are pretty sure to be rewarded by a good view of the bird clinging to the reed stems, and peeping at you. You will know it by the broad pale buff streak over the eye, an unusually broad streak for a small bird. If I call it a brown bird you will receive an impression of sober plumage; but wait till the churring little creature is within two yards of you and in sunshine, and you will be surprised to see what a brave show can be made of browns; golden brown, chestnut brown, buff brown, dark brown. These are so marvellously mixed and blended, with a little black and white thrown in, that the general effect is gay rather than sober. Come late, come early to this part of the river, nay, come at midnight, and the sedge-warblers will waken if they are not already awake, and will "churr" unweariedly. If they stop for breath, or because you are so still that they fancy you have crept away, you have but to stamp on the ground, or fling a pebble into the water, and the clamour begins again.

While you are delighting yourself over the active sedge-warblers you will, if it be in the day-time, see a slightly larger bird with a velvety black head, a white necklet, and black gorget appear from among the willow bushes and poise itself on the top of a tall reed stem, not half way down it, like the sedge-warbler. You will note that the rest of the plumage reminds you of a yellow-hammer, only with the yellow left out. This is not surprising, for this is a male reed bunting, first cousin to the yellow-hammer, or yellow bunting, as he is also called. The female reed bunting is less strongly marked and has a reddish brown head instead of a velvety black one, but she and her mate are apt to keep very close together when she is on the wing, so she is not hard to find. The note is a little like that of the yellow-hammer, but not so clear, and ends with a harsh "zshwee," rather drawn out. The birds rear two or three broods in a season, so you will not necessarily waste your time if you look for one in July, but success will only attend him who has much time and endless patience at his disposal, for time fails me to tell of the cunning tricks of a reed bunting which means to persuade you that its nest is—where it never dreamt of building one! It will be close to water, but with water all about you in river and on marsh that is not much of a clue.

While you are watching these small birds, or when you stoop to gather the beautiful forget-me-nots which grow in great clumps on the margin of the river, you may be half startled by the sudden movement of something almost beneath your feet, and out into mid river will rush a water hen with a loud croaking sort of alarm note. You will know it from a coot by its smaller size, and by the bright red disk on its forehead. The coot's frontal disk is white. The kingfisher breeds in this part of the river, and any day you may if you are there be gladdened by seeing a flash of lovely blue as it flits up or down stream. Trout rise, dragon flies play, sand-martins build, swallows and swifts skim about. All sorts of pleasant things happen when you linger by the Derwent, but I may not take space to tell you of them all.

EMILY NEWLING.

Keswick.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

25TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged (corrected figure)	4825	17	7
Mrs. Blurton (second donation)	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Fred F. Perris (second donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. McEwan	1	0	0
A. J. A. (Walmer)	0	5	0
Mrs. B. H. Crabtree	5	0	0
The Rev. C. B. Upton	5	0	0
Miss E. A. Birchall (second donation)	0	5	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Miss C. Draper	0	5	0
Miss Swaine (fifth donation)	2	0	0
M. A. P. of Bournemouth (third donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Skimming	2	2	0
Miss Hardcastle	1	1	0
Organisers of Children's Care Work, L.C.C., per Miss H. G. Nussey (monthly contribution for June)	1	2	8
Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Chitty (fourth donation)	4	0	0
Eldon Street Girls' School, Barnsley, per Miss M. E. Frith	1	3	6
Mrs. H. D. Roberts (third donation)	1	1	0
Mr. G. Banks (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Thornely, Bowdon (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Lawrence	0	5	0
Miss Hilda Hankinson	0	5	0
A Friend, per Mrs. A. C. Fox, Cardiff	1	0	0
Miss Blake (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Miss Isaacs	2	0	0
Miss A. Frickey, Trinidad	2	0	0
L. G.	0	5	0
	£4,865	7	9

Parcels have been received from: Miss C. Powell Evans; Miss Rosa Robins; Hampstead Ladies' Guild of London Homeopathic Hospital (per Mrs. Morton); Mr. Moses Haworth; Mrs. M. A. E. Titterton and Mrs. N. Cave B. Cave; Mrs. Lawrence; Mrs. Beard; Mrs. J. H. Green; Mrs. E. Worthington; Miss Strauss; Miss Green and Mrs. Lincoln Taylor; Hyde Chapel Congregation and Ladies' Sewing Committee (per Mrs. C. Walmsley); Mrs. A. Robinson; Miss M. A. Oades; Miss Kog; Mrs. A. M. Sedgfield; Miss L. Sharpe; Miss Newling and Miss Bendelack; Miss Colfox; The Monton Church Women's Union (per Mrs. Nanson); Miss E. Prancee; Mrs. Fellowes Pearson.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

DEGREE DAY AT LEEDS UNIVERSITY.

ON Saturday, July 3, the Duke of Devonshire, Chancellor of the Leeds University, presided over the proceedings in connection with the presenting of diplomas and the conferring of honorary degrees. In opening the morning congregation the Chancellor, who was accompanied by the Vice-Chancellor, Mr. M. E. Sadler, and members of the Senate, made special reference to the work of the University since the outbreak of the war. It had, he said, from the very beginning adapted itself to the needs of the time, and placed every possible facility at the disposal of the Government. Many of them who had watched the growth and development of the younger universities had felt sure that in a great national emergency they would come into line with their elder sisters, and be able to take a place in national history and national movement. That he could with truth and honesty claim for Leeds to-day. The whole conditions under which they were living were so varied and different from anything they had been accustomed to that it was not possible to know if they had always done the right thing; but they were always anxious to do it, and to receive the guidance of those who have the best means of judging affairs. He hoped that as a result of the war they would see the happy understanding which had grown up from comparatively small beginnings between the county of Yorkshire, the city of Leeds, and the University increase and become intensified. When they considered what would be the condition of the Empire and the world on the termination of the war they would realise that greater opportunities than had ever been presented before would be given universities to take a leading and active part in the life of the community, and he was confident that if that good feeling which had existed in the past were strengthened, it would be good for the University and the country as a whole. Every one would start next term with the full determination of taking some active, intelligent, and practical share in the history of the war.

In presenting the Rev. Charles Hargrove for the degree of Doctor of Letters, Professor Gillespie said he was for 36 years minister in charge of Mill Hill Unitarian Chapel, Leeds, and not only had he stimulated its public spirit by his words, but he had himself set a fine example of personal participation in social service, and had striven to prove, alike in word and in deed, that rationally organised effort, far from being inconsistent with the true spirit of Christian charity, was an indispensable condition of its effective exercise.

Professor Moorman presented the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, and mentioned that he was a native of Leeds and a member of a family held in high honour by the city. "For 28 years," Professor Moorman said, "he has tirelessly devoted his learning, his eloquence, and the great power of his personality to the furtherance of liberal culture in the towns and villages of England, and wherever he has gone he has enlarged the minds of men and women, and uplifted their hearts, by his reverent and illuminating interpretation of poetry and economic thought. Above all, we look up to him as our leader in all that pertains to the poetry and philosophy of Dante."

Referring to this event the Yorkshire Post says:—"Since the days of Dr. Joseph Priestley, Mill Hill Chapel has been a notable centre of the intellectual life of Leeds, as well as of its social and philanthropic activities. The name of the Rev. Charles Hargrove, who so long and so ably upheld its best traditions, will, with the most general approbation, be entered upon the roll of the Leeds Doctors of Letters, honoris causa. The Rev. Philip Wicksteed, his companion, may almost be regarded as an associate of Mill Hill, at least through his Leeds relatives, but his contributions to the public good of the city have been in the way of admirable popularisings of economic science and foreign literature, both by book and by lecture."

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE, CARMARTHEN.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

ON Wednesday, June 30th, the Session was brought to a close at the Presbyterian College, when the prizes were distributed in the presence of a large gathering. Dr. Dawes Hicks presided, and was supported by four of his colleagues on the Presbyterian Board—Mr. Harold Baily, Dr. Tudor Jones, the Rev. Bertram Lister, and Mr. James Waters. The external examiners, Dr. Talfourd Ely (Classics), the Rev. Park Davies (Biblical Studies), and the Secretary, Mr. James Clennell, were also present.

Principal W. J. Evans gave an excellent report of the conduct and diligence of the students, three of whom were sitting for the B.D. examinations of the University of Wales. Reference was made to a valuable course of lectures which had been delivered by Dr. Langdon, Professor of Assyriology at Oxford. The ordinary leaving certificate was given to Edward Vaughan, James Bennett, W. T. Hopkins, H. Idris Griffiths, D. Cellan Evans, George Davies, D. Tudor James and Ben Davies, and a certificate of honour to D. Ernest Richards and Gwilym J. Thomas. The Chairman expressed his delight at being once more amongst them and congratulated the College and the students on the work that had been done, and on the result of the examination. He also referred appreciatively to the lectures for which they were indebted to the kindness of Mr. Willans.

Short speeches were made by the four members of the Board, and the external examiners, Dr. Talfourd Ely pointing out that the third year men had done remarkably well. Mr. Harold Baily said, on behalf of the Board, that while it was not for them to attempt to influence the students in any way in regard to national service, as it was purely a personal matter for each to settle for himself, they offered every facility for students to go if they felt that that was where their duty led them. They would keep their places for them, and welcome them back with open arms on their return. The Rev. Bertram Lister urged the students to concentrate their energies on the children. Let them not think that the Sunday School did not matter. It was the important thing. Dr. Tudor Jones, Mr. T. Waters, Principal Evans, Mr. Clennell, the Rev. A. Fuller Mills and the Rev. J. Jones, Narberth, also spoke, and Dr. Hicks then delivered his address, which will be found in another part of the paper.

In the course of the proceedings Principal Evans was presented with an album containing photographs of his old students in commemoration of the completion of the 31st year of his professorate. The Rev. J. Evans, Bryn, Llanelly, the oldest of Principal Evans's students present, handed him the gift, in expressing thanks for which Principal Evans said that his father and grandfather were nurtured in the Presbyterian College, and he himself was born on the premises of the old College in Spring Gardens.

JOHN HUSS.

THE following commemorative letter has been sent to the press by a group of scholars who desire in this way to express their sympathy with the people of Bohemia and their admiration of their national hero:—

The violent emotions of the present world-war leave little room for reflection on past development. Even the anniversaries of Runnymede and Waterloo have been relegated to the background by the fierce struggles on the Yser and on the Dniester. Yet nations would be ill-advised to cut themselves adrift from history and to neglect the links with the past which form one of the principal sources of their vitality and the starting point of their loftiest aspirations.

As it happens the course of this summer will recall the memory of a great and tragic event which, though it took place 500 years ago, has left its mark on the destiny of Europe and exerts its influence indirectly on the present struggle. The date we mean is July 6, the anniversary of the death at the stake of the great

Czech reformer, John Huss. He was condemned by the bishops and doctors of the Council of Constance, and put to death by the authority of the Emperor, who had guaranteed his safety.

His crime was the striving towards a revival of early Christian ideals, of the authority of councils, of a reformation of the clergy, of closer participation of the people in the life of the Church.

For the "Holy Empire" of the Germanic nation he was a dangerous enemy because he embodied the consciousness of a great Slav people, because he extended Czech influence in the University of Prague, and reduced German academic pretensions, because, preaching in the Czech language, he appealed to the feelings of his Slavonic countrymen.

The martyr of 1415 left two legacies to the future—the appeal for Church reform and the assertion of Slav independence. The force of his ideas was demonstrated at once by the glorious victories of the hosts of Ziska and Prokop over the Germans, and the reform movement of the sixteenth century. The carnage of the Thirty Years' War was required in order to bring back Bohemia into the arms of the Hapsburg father. But neither the Czechs nor public opinion in Europe have accepted the verdict as final. The Czech nationality, though surrounded on all sides by enemies and chained to the German chariot, is intact and hopeful of the future. It knows that the nightmare of German domination is dissolving in spite of boastful clamour.

As for the Allies who are the instruments of this historical destiny, they should not let the anniversary of July 6 pass without recalling the memory of the Slav martyr who was faithful unto death, both to the historical claim of his nation and to the religious aspirations of Europe. In ordinary times the University of Prague would have commemorated July 6, 1415 by a great international celebration in which England would have taken a prominent place.

We have thought that in the present hour of trial we ought all the more to convey to the people of Bohemia our sympathies and our admiration for the memory of her greatest son.

Among the signatories are the following:—Sidney Ball, Ernest Barker, F. E. Brightman, A. J. Carlyle, J. Estlin Carpenter, Arthur Evans, L. R. Farnell, C. H. Firth, H. A. L. Fisher, H. Gow, F. J. Haverfield, D. G. Hogarth, L. P. Jacks, R. W. Macan, G. Gilbert Murray, M. W. Patterson, Frederick Pollock, A. B. Poynton, Hastings Rashdall, John Rhys, W. B. Selbie, J. A. Smith, R. W. Seton-Watson, Cuthbert H. Turner, P. Vinogradoff, Clement C. J. Webb.

A NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH IN SHEFFIELD.

THE beautiful church which the Unitarians of Sheffield are erecting in Crookesmoor Road, at a cost of about £7,000, to replace the old Upperthorpe Chapel (now used for secular purposes), is nearing completion. Unity Hall, one important part of the building, is ready for use, and was formally opened on July 1st in the presence of a numerous company by Mrs. W. R. Stevenson.

It is a roomy, well-lighted apartment intended for Sunday school purposes, and for meetings of various kinds in connection with the church. It will seat fully 400 persons. After Mrs. Stevenson, in a graceful little speech, had declared the hall open, a service was held and a sermon preached by the Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A., of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Tea and a musical conversation followed. At a public meeting in the evening Mr. W. Guest presided. The speakers announced included the Revs. Alfred Hall, C. J. Street, A. H. Dolphin (the minister of the church), Mr. E. Bramley, and Miss Clephan. For the future and until the church is ready Sunday services will be held in the hall.

The visitors to the opening ceremony were afforded an opportunity of inspecting the whole building, and many compliments were paid to the architect, the builder and others responsible for carrying out the enterprise. It comprises three stories. The Sunday school is in the basement.

VISCOUNT BRYCE recently delivered the Creighton Lecture at the University of London, entitled 'Race Sentiment as a Factor in History.' The University of London Press announce the immediate publication of the lecture at 1s. net. It may be obtained from their publishers, Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton of Warwick Square, E.C.

DR. HUNTER will bring the present series of morning services at the Æolian Hall to a close on Sunday, July 11. The services will be resumed on Sunday, October 3.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Blackpool.—The Rev. B. C. Constable of Manchester has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the ministry at South Shore Unitarian Church.

Comber (co. Down).—On Tuesday, June 29th, a presentation was made to the Rev. Thomas Dunkerley on his retirement from the active duties of the ministry. For thirty-five years he has been the Minister of the Comber congregation, and the separation now necessitated by advancing years is deeply regretted by the members of every denomination in the town and district. Mr. John M. Andrews presided over the meeting, supported by the Revs. Dr. Graham, Thomas Dunkerley, E. S. Hicks, J. A. Kelly, D. J. Williams, and others. Many letters of apology for absence were received, including one from the Right Hon. Thomas Andrews, father of the Chairman, who said: "I am not aware that during his thirty-five years' residence Mr. Dunkerley ever made an enemy in Comber, but on the contrary his numerous friends have increased with his years. Mrs. Dunkerley's popularity increased in the same manner, and we can only wish them both every happiness which their faithful and prolonged service so well deserves." The Chairman said that these words expressed the views of all present as well as his own. He felt that it must be a consolation to Mr. Dunkerley to realise that in giving up his active work he left the congregation in a more prosperous condition, judged by every standard, than when he found it. Never had the members of the church taken a deeper interest in its welfare than they did at present. Mr. John M. Orr read the address, which sets forth a record of Mr. Dunkerley's earnest work, and contains this passage among others:—"You have always respected the conscientious opinions of others, and have sought to advance the great truths and principles in which all Christians unite, rather than to unduly or unseasonably obtrude those points of difference which divide the Churches, and arrest the progress and development of the common brotherhood of man." Mr. Robert Milling made the presentation, which took the form of a cheque for £500, subscribed by the present and past members of the church as some recognition of Mr. Dunkerley's long and valued services to the congregation. Messrs. H. P. Andrews, F. J. Orr, Joseph Mitchell, H. D. Todd and several others joined in the expression of general regret at Mr. Dunkerley's retirement, and in the reply read by the retiring Minister the warmest thanks were given for this bountiful act which had turned much of the pain of separation into joy and gratitude. Speeches were made on behalf of the other churches in Comber, and the neighbourhood, and by fellow-ministers, including the Rev. E. S. Hicks of Dublin.

Ditchling.—The Anniversary was held last Sunday, when as usual numerous friends from a distance were present. The preacher was the Rev. Joseph Wood, President of the Provincial Assembly of London and the S. E. Counties.

London: Girls' Own Brigade.—At the invitation of Mrs. Sydney Martineau, the three companies of the Girls' Own Brigade—Hackney, Ilford, and Brixton—between eighty and ninety girls, spent the afternoon at Streatham Grove on Saturday, June 26th. After a delightful time in the gardens the Brigade had tea under the trees, and an inspection was held afterwards by Commandant F. J. Nettlefold, followed by some drill exercises by the Brixton Company, the music being provided by the Norwood Borough Band.

Marple.—The Rev. Charles Biggins, B.A., B.D., has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Marple Unitarian Free Church and will enter upon his duties this month.

Merthyr Tydfil.—The Ordination Services in connection with the settlement of Mr. D. Cellan Evans, of the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, took place on Monday, July 5th, at Thomas Street Unitarian Chapel, Merthyr Tydfil. The Rev. Prof. Moore delivered the charge to the Minister. Mr. H. Jones and Mr. G. Ll. Thomas welcomed Mr. Evans on behalf of the congregation; Mr. F. A. Whiting on behalf of the Sunday School; Mr. J. Lewis for the South East Wales Association; Mr. Hefin Williams on behalf of the churches at Llampeter and Caeronen; and the Rev. E. O. Jenkins on behalf of the Cardiganshire churches. The Rev. R. J. Jones (Aberdare) delivered the charge to the Church, tracing its history from 1662, and giving sound advice to the congregation as to their duties in supporting the Minister in his work. The Revs. E. T. Evans and W. J. Phillips conducted the devotional portions of the service, and the Rev. Simon Jones, B.A. (Swansea), gave a sermon on 'Christianity and the War.' Representatives were present from the majority of the churches in the South Wales and South-East Wales Associations. There were also visitors from other Nonconformist churches in Merthyr.

The Ministerial Fellowship.—The Sixteenth Annual Meeting was held at the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Wednesday, June 30th. The President (the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson) occupied the chair, and there were fifty-two ministers present. By the admission of twenty-two new members the roll was brought up to 227. The report showed that three claims to Benefit had been paid during the year and eight Benevolent Fund grants had been made. The reserve fund was now represented by investments made at a cost of £878 7s. Regretful reference was made to the death of two members, the Revs. W. Rosling and H. R. Tavener. Recommendations made by the Fellowship had been approved by the Ministerial Settlements Board, the National Conference Committee, and a conference of Advisory Committees. A deputation to one of the Advisory Committees in respect to a particular case had been welcomed and was of service. A closing paragraph of the report ran:—"The Committee, feeling deeply the gravity of the national crisis, and sharing in the grief which every minister of religion must feel at the overwhelming horrors of the war, which shatters cherished ideals and hopes, yet feels that this very crisis presents a magnificent opportunity to all our members to assert the power of a living and unconquerable faith, and to build up in the minds of those whom they influence a conviction of the persistence and ultimate triumph of the eternal verities of truth and right which that faith reveals." The Rev. T. Lloyd Jones was appointed President and the Revs. Dendy Agate and C. J. Street were re-elected as Treasurer and Secretary respectively, the officers being thanked for their services. The Revs. Dr. Thakray and W. McMullan were elected to fill places on the Committee, Mr. Arthur E. Piggott and the Rev. E. W. Sealy being reappointed as auditors. Representatives to the Ministerial Settlements Board, the Committee on the Supply of Ministers, and the Joint Committee for the Revision of the List of Ministers, were re-elected. The recommendations of a conference of representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the National Conference, the Ministerial Fellowship, and the Advisory Committees, respecting the procedure of those Committees in issuing certificates to Lay Workers, was generally approved, but the strong opinion of the Fellowship was expressed that it was undesirable that in any case the period of probation for a Lay Worker should be reduced to less than two years. A number of grants were made from the Benevolent Fund and the balance was placed at the disposal of the Committee. The following resolution was passed with two dissentients:—"That this body of ministers deprecates any and every attempt to bring pressure, either openly or by implication, to bear upon theological students and younger ministers to divert them from their accepted tasks to military service. It desires to express the opinion that the question of duty in this matter is one that can be solved only by the individual student or minister concerned, and that there should be no discrimination in the way of respect as between those who decide in one way and those who decide in another." The Treasurer introduced for discussion the subject of the forthcoming Actuarial Investigation, due to take place at the end of the current financial year, and invited suggestions as to the best methods of applying any surplus that may be approved by the Actuary. Various proposals were put forward and discussed, and it was resolved to refer some of them to the Actuary for his opinion as to their feasibility. The Committee were instructed to consider the possibility of further mutual insurance proposals. The meeting, which began at 11 A.M., and adjourned for less than an hour at lunch, finished at 5.15 P.M.

Whitby.—The Rev. S. S. Brettell, M.A., the newly-appointed minister of the Flowergate Old Chapel, received a hearty welcome at a congregational gathering held in the chapel on Wednesday evening, June 30th, Mrs. Tattersfield presided, being supported by the Revs. C. Hargrove, J. Wain, and W. H. Lambelle. In the name of the congregation, Mrs. Tattersfield accorded Mr. Brettell a hearty welcome, and wished for him a long and successful ministry. Mr. T. Bowron, the Rev. J. Wain, the Rev. W. H. Lambelle, the Rev. G. M. Storrar (Presbyterian), and Dr. Hargrove also spoke. Mr. Brettell, in returning thanks for the welcome given him, said it would be his aim to do his best for the congregation both as preacher and pastor. He moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. Tattersfield for presiding and to the other speakers for their addresses.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR. EDWARD CLODD

Referring to the retirement of Mr. Edward Clodd, who has just celebrated his 75th birthday, the Investors' Review publishes the following short appreciation of his life and work:—

"Sixty years a banker. That of itself is surely a rare title to fame; but Mr. Edward Clodd, who has just retired from the post of secretary to the London and Joint Stock Bank, Ltd., a post occupied by him for more than 40 of his 60 years of service, is entitled to honour on many grounds besides his age and eminence in his business. He is one of those by no means rare, and yet peculiarly select, band of men who may be described as "literary bankers," and his fame as a follower of the scientific schools of Darwin and Huxley is world-wide. He was none the less, like the late Walter Bagehot, a shrewd and excellent handler of credit, notwithstanding his diligence in writing books that popularised the science of the day and in many side branches of literature. He well deserved the honour his colleagues did him on his retirement from active service, and everybody who knows him will hope that his keen, active mind will be at the service of his fellow men for many a year to come."

A SUMMER SCHOOL FOR THE DISCUSSION OF WAR PROBLEMS.

There is no lack of opportunities for becoming properly informed, both in regard to the origins of the war and the problems which it is raising for solution at its close. A Summer School for the purpose of discussing these and kindred subjects has been organised by Professor Geddes, of Edinburgh, and Dr. Slater, Principal of Ruskin College, Oxford, and will be held at King's College, Strand, July 12-31. The programme is very varied, and, in addition to two special courses of lectures by Prof. Geddes and Dr. Slater, special conferences on "Relief Work during War" to be opened by Mr. H. C. Hoover (Chairman of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium), and on "Reconstruction in Belgium and Northern France," opened by M. Emile Vandervelde (Belgian Minister of State), and followed by Dr. M. Victor Horta (Director, Ecoles des Beaux Arts, Brussels) will be held. Among the speakers during the three weeks will be Mr. J. A. Hobson, Dr. Saleeby, Dr. A. J. Carlyle, Mr. H. J. Mackinder, M.P., Dr. R. W. Seton-Watson, Mr. G. R. S. Mead, and Miss Margaret MacMillan.

THE SALVATION ARMY JUBILEE.

At a time like the present even such an important occasion as the jubilee of the Salvation Army, which came into being on July 5, 1865, is allowed to pass without much comment, yet now more than ever the ideals which inspired General Booth in starting this great movement are proving their power to lift the burden of sorrow and suffering from the souls of men. The military organisation which, at first, won for the Army a good deal of ridicule and scorn, has proved its efficiency both for peace and war, and the activities of the devoted men and women who have accepted its discipline have been mobilised with remarkable success for the work of healing and saving in every land. In the June number of "All the World," the monthly review published by the Salvation Army, Mrs. Booth pleads for further support for the cause, and trusts that those who, this year, are deterred from giving large sums of money will not hesitate to send smaller sums. The international aspect of the work must, as she truly points out, appeal to every one, "but whether here at home, on the Continent, or in the Far East, our officers labour for the enduring things—for all that makes for the true prosperity and happiness of the nations." We are glad to see that an annual review of some aspects of the Army's work has been issued under the title, "Deeds of Love and Courage."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | MISS CECIL GRADWELL,
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

PARIS.—Beautifully-furnished APARTMENT, airy and sunny balcony, four bedrooms, toilets, bath-room, drawing-room, dining-room, library, cloak-room, electricity, lift, telephone. £20 a month.—Apply to Mrs. FAURE, 14Y, Bd. St. Germain, Paris.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

REAL IRISH LINEN "FLAX-ZELLA." Splendid for blouses and frocks. New art shades. Sale price 8½d. per yard. Summer Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Send postcard to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, July 10, 1915.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3811.
NEW SERIES, No. 914.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

For over Eighty Years
The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

July

18. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

25. Rev. NEANDER ANDERTON, B.A. (of Monton).

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte. Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Now Ready for July.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS:—

Theophilus Lindsey.
Mary Carpenter.
Florence Nightingale.
William Rathbone.

Junior Department—Lewis W. Lewis, M.A.
Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.

THE MUSTARD SEED.—THE HIDDEN
TREASURE.—THE TWO SONS.—THE TALENTS.

Primary Department—Alice L. Colfox.

BY THE WAY. S.S.A. FILING CABINET, &c.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged.

THE IMMORALITY OF NON-RESISTANCE,

And other Sermons on the War.

By

The Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Christ and Non-Resistance
Letter and Spirit
Nationalism and Super-Nationalism
What a Man will Die for
Is it Christian to ask God to help us in War?
Cardinal Mercier and the Catholic Outlook

Price One Shilling net.

Postage 2d.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., LTD.
(Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.)

Birmingham: CORNISH BROTHERS, LTD.
(39, New Street.)

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building
up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well
housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield
University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for
boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut.-Col.
Stephenson, Cannanpore, India.

Fees.—25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hookey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 26, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, July 18.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTEE.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 7, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MURFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VAN NESS of Boston, U.S.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.)
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. WARNOCK.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, Litt.D.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 LISCAID-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Boole Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. ROWE, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HARMAN TAYLOR.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. LESLIE SMITH, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. DR. CARPENTER.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. S. S. BRETTELL, M.A.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEAD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. SHORT.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, H. W. HAWKES.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGES.

COLYER—WITHALL.—On Monday, July 12th, at Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. F. Hankinson, William Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Colyer, of Finchley, to Amy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Withall, of Highbury.

EDWARDS—ODGERS.—On July 15, at the Unitarian Church, Granville Road, North Finchley, by the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, D.D., uncle of the bride, Thomas Harold, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Edwards, of Wolverhampton, to Alice Mary, only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Blake Odgers, of The Garth, North Finchley, N.

DEATHS.

EAVESTAFF.—On June 6th, at Montrose, Holmesdale Road, Sevenoaks, Elizabeth Eavestaff, aged 85.

HARRIS.—At his residence, Bella Vista, Hornsea, E. Yorks., on Saturday, July 10th, 1915, Simon Harris, the dearly-loved husband of L. R. Harris, aged 74 years. American papers please copy.

HERFORD.—On the 7th inst., aged 75, Emily Decima, youngest daughter of the late John Herford, of Manchester.

THOMSON.—On July 12, at Stoneleigh, Rotherham, suddenly, Andrew Thomson, aged 66 years

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, YOUNG LADY as HOUSE-PARLOUR-MAID during War; Cook being gardener's wife living in cottage. Convenient house. Two in family. Write, with full particulars, to MRS. PEARSALL, Glaed Hame, Letchworth.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 347
DEEDS NOT WORDS 349
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 349
A FORTNIGHT AMONG THE BELGIAN HOSPITALS 350

EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY, 1831-1915 . . . 351
QUESTIONS AT ISSUE:—
Has Christianity Failed? 352
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 353
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 353

Conference of Social Service Unions . . 353
Switzerland and the War 354
The Rev. James Hocart 355
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 355
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 355

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE publish to-day an important article by Mrs. Bernard Allen on her recent visit to the Belgian hospitals. It has the fresh personal touch with which our readers are familiar, and illustrates once again the cordial relations which exist between ourselves and those whom it is our privilege to help. It also gives a first impression of the new district to which we must now turn our attention without neglecting in any way the more familiar ground in Calais. The initial expense for equipment will involve a big demand upon the Fund, but hitherto we have only had to make the need known in order to increase the steady flow of gifts, and we go on in strong confidence in the generosity of our supporters. The first large consignment of beds, instruments, medical requisites, and clothes is being made ready as quickly as possible, and will be dispatched to Rennes in a few days. It is interesting to note that the Fund is continually enlarging the area from which it draws supplies. A friend has collected £100 for us in Toronto, and we hear this week that a working party has been started in Trinidad. A fine gift of clothing has just arrived, and Mrs. Allen has sent out instructions about some of our special needs in response to a cordial offer of further help. It is delightful to feel this union of hearts all over the world in the common work of doing good.

* * *

IN our absorption in events nearer home we must not lose sight of the importance of General Botha's striking success in German South-West Africa. The whole campaign has been conducted with military skill of a high order, and now victory has been crowned by moderation. The official terms of surrender are distinctly magnanimous. Nothing has been done to interfere with the comfort of the civilian population, or to inflict dishonour on the troops. The daily life of the colony can go on to the end of the war without any rankling sense of high-handed interference, and whatever may happen to the conquered territory when the war is over a good foundation will have been laid for relations of confidence and mutual esteem. It is a transaction of which the whole British Empire has every reason to be proud.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER expressed the pride and gratitude of the Empire in a few notable words in the House of Commons on Tuesday.

It must be remembered [he said], that the theatre of these operations was at once vast in extent and singularly unsuited for military movements. Deserts of shifting sand, waterholes rare, and often poisoned by the enemy, mines thickly strewed, no pasture for the baggage trains, railways torn up and destroyed—these were a few of the obstacles that had to be encountered and overcome. The striking success of our arms at comparatively small cost, I am happy to say, in casualties, is due to two main causes: in the first place to the admirable strategy of General Botha, which secured the concert and co-operation at enormous distances of the various columns, and next, and perhaps, most of all, to the combined mobility, endurance, and valour of the Union troops, which made effective resistance at any point, impossible. I ask the House at this, the earliest opportunity, to testify the admiration and gratitude of the whole Empire, first, to the illustrious General, who is also Prime Minister of the Union, and who has rendered such inestimable service to the Empire which he entered by adoption, and of which he has become one of the most honoured and cherished sons, and to his dauntless, and much-enduring troops, who, whether of burgher or British birth, have fought like brethren side by side in the cause which is equally dear to all of us, the broadening of the bonds of human liberty.

* * *

It would be premature to expect any definite statement of policy in regard to the German colonies in Africa, but it is not too soon to call attention to some of the difficult problems involved. We did not go into this war with any desire to acquire territory or to extend the bounds of our Empire in Africa or anywhere else. But it does not follow that we ought on this account simply to return her lost colonies to Germany, possibly under suitable guarantees. We must be careful not to sacrifice wise statesmanship to false sentiment. The welfare of the population in these vast territories in Africa must be considered. In South-West Africa, for example, it is possible that the conciliatory policy of General Botha will create a desire for fusion with the South African Union in preference to the hard commercial exploitation of the German official. The tropical districts—Togoland and the Cameroons—present difficulties of their own. They might be held for a period of years as a guarantee for war indemnity, and, meanwhile, the administration could be placed upon a sound basis, justice and personal liberty being secured to the natives. If later on they are transferred to Germany it should be with adequate safeguards for the welfare of the natives and the total abolition of that alias for slavery—forced labour for private gain.

* * *

It must be remembered that hitherto Germany has shown no genius for colonising in districts which bristle with native problems, and her record of cruelty and wars of extermination is a very bad one. There is an article in The Nineteenth Century for July by the Rev. J. H. Harris on 'Germany's Treatment of Natives,' which is particularly well-informed. Here is one illuminating passage in reference to Togoland.

This colony has been under German administration since 1884, and has been subjected to "vigorous" development which has resulted in a long series of punitive expeditions so costly to human life that, according to the Gold Coast Leader, "the German Secretary of State for the Colonies has admitted that from 1903 to 1913 105,000 natives have been killed in expeditions against them." The relief which British occupation has already brought to the natives of Togoland is eloquently expressed in the following extract from a letter addressed to me by a native, and dated the 1st of May last: "The Lord has hearkened unto our cry; we are for ever saved from the clutches of the German Eagle. Do fight for us that Togoland may never be given back to the Germans. Where shall we be, we who hate the Germans so much? Let their coming back be impossible.... We are in the hands of the British Government, let us remain where we are."

Mr. Harris states that when South-West Africa came under German protection in 1884 the total native population was not less than 750,000, and it may have been larger. To-day it has been reduced to less than 100,000, mainly through harsh administration and punitive expeditions.

* * *

LORD KITCHENER made a noble appeal for more men for the Army last week. He has worked loyally with our voluntary system, he has achieved great things with it, and he knows the value, from the purely military point of view, of those who come forward with ready will instead of being driven by the lash of compulsion. But underlying all that he said there was, if we mistake not, a note of grave warning that we can only persist with our voluntary methods in the present crisis if they yield the results which we need. With that judgment no sensible man will disagree. Voluntary enlistment is the only practical answer to the clamour for conscription. Speaking to the young men who still hang back, possibly thinking that the need is not yet extreme enough to make it necessary for them to go, Lord Kitchener said:—

It is not for me to tell you your duty; that is a matter for your conscience. But make up your minds, and do so quickly. Don't delay to take your decision and, having taken it, to act upon it at once. Be honest with yourself. Be certain that your so-called reason is not a selfish excuse. Be sure that hereafter, when you look upon to-day and its call to duty, you do not have cause, perhaps bitter cause, to confess to your conscience that you shirked your duty to your country, and sheltered yourself under a mere excuse. It has been well said that in every man's life there is one supreme hour towards which all earlier experience moves, and from which all future results may be reckoned. For every individual Briton, as well as for our national existence, that solemn hour is now striking. Let us take heed to the great opportunity it offers, and which most assuredly we must grasp now and at once—or never. Let each man of us see that we spare nothing, shirk nothing, shrink from nothing, if only we may lend our full weight to the impetus which shall carry to victory the cause of our honour and of our freedom.

* * *

THERE is strong persuasion in these words, and they should do a great deal to dispel the spirit of sophistry and hesitation which still lurks in some quarters. We also welcome them as a timely reinforcement of public opinion, for the compelling power of public opinion must always be the strength of a voluntary system. There are some people who warn us that we are infringing personal liberty when we speak in this way. They still envisage the whole problem as one of lonely responsibility which concerns nobody else. But on these terms there could never be common action of any kind. The full force of the social conscience must be brought to bear upon the individual life. Its aim is to break down all resistance except that which is based upon the bed-rock of principle or superior duty. In doing this it may occasionally err in its censure or place some stigma of disapproval upon the wrong man. But it is only the weak and foolish who will complain. Those who are really satisfied that they are doing their duty and serving the national cause in the best way by staying at home, and have cast out of their hearts the love of safety and the lurking cowardice of the natural man, will not grumble if they are exposed to misunderstanding or have to suffer from occasional discomfort at the hands of zealous neighbours. This is only their share of "the slings and arrows," and it is small indeed compared with the dangers and hardships to which others are exposed.

THE French National Fête was celebrated on Wednesday, and this year we had the privilege of taking our share in keeping an anniversary which is notable in the annals of liberty. Most of our newspapers devoted some space to tributes to French valour or the more difficult task of describing the spirit with which France is facing the war, the affections and ideals which are moving in her heart. Writing on this theme in The Daily News M. Emile Boutroux lays special stress upon the constancy and patience in defence of the rights of men and nations which no difficulties, however great, will be able to crush.

We are not [he writes] now dealing with something akin to the generous, though rash and unsteady, outbursts of passion often attributed to the French of former days. Our determination now is that we will be resolute and immovable, just as right and truth are immovable and invincible. In this connection, may I mention the letters daily sent to me from the front by the young men, entrusted to my charge, in normal times? They show that the writers are brimming over with enthusiasm, determination, and good humour. With shells bursting all around, they tell me what they are doing and relate their impressions with the same lucidity and mental calm they showed when studying with me. One feels that it is real happiness for them to fight in a cause indisputably noble and just, and that they are sure this same feeling, dominant in all hearts, both in civil life and in the army, will give France the perseverance and energy needed to carry on the war to the end.

* * *

THE Rev. Hugh B. Chapman, who has just returned from France, where he talked with General Joffre and visited Rheims, writes in a similar strain about the women of France in the Westminster Gazette:—

The burning patriotism and the willingness to work in every home, from the highest to the lowest, is an inspiration, and the women over the water have sworn to take their part in expelling the Bosch from their country. For the exceptions among their men-kind who, on whatever pretext, refuse to offer their lives, they have, and are not ashamed to manifest, a withering contempt. . . . There is in France a wave of female enthusiasm and of consecrated passion which the State recognises as well-nigh its chief asset in the termination of the war. At a single word of pessimism or murmuring, women are ready not only to take umbrage, but to denounce the offender as a traitor to the public weal. Their sacrifice and their courage are beyond all praise, and they constitute a driving force which sends men to the trenches with a song on their lips and a smile on their faces pour la Patrie.

DEEDS NOT WORDS.

WHEN the war is over and we can view everything in its true perspective many people will be surprised at their own moods of depression. The amazing thing is the way we have risen to meet a great demand, not our failure to reach the limit of our desires. The task is much longer and much grimmer than we expected. The popular time-table, with its lightening campaign of resounding victories in the spring, has miscarried. But it never had any competent military authority behind it, and there is no need to accuse ourselves of all the sins of blundering and selfish indolence because the fortunes of war are not controlled by the newspapers. Above all, the morbid demand for victims, chosen from among the men who have been straining every nerve to cope with an unprecedented situation, is only the familiar trick of the hardened grumbler, and it deserves even less respect in public affairs than it usually receives in private life.

There are, fortunately, many signs that most people have lost neither their courage nor their commonsense. They understand the psychology of grumbling and they are not easily duped by it. The country has recovered from its temporary fit of nerves, and is prepared to take stern measures against those who play into the hands of the enemy either by sowing suspicion or sapping our cheerfulness. This was shown unmistakably in the House of Commons this week. With all our long-suffering patience with minorities we must limit discussion and impose the discipline of silence, when public safety demands not words but deeds.

There is no need for us, in this place, to say much about the campaign of suspicion and abuse which has been carried on by a section of the press against some of our leading public men. We believe that our readers will be unanimous in condemning its shameless methods, and quick to see its danger to national security. There is, however, another direction in which a word of warning seems necessary, and we venture to utter it, with all deference, but with all firmness. Many of us have a large, some people might describe it as a touching confidence in the value of discussion. We have been brought up to respect the virtues of the open mind and to accept disagreement without loss of temper. It seems natural to us that groups of people should meet to confer about any subject under the sun, consulting only their own fancy and convenience. And so it comes to pass that even after eleven months of the most fateful struggle for freedom and national existence, which we have ever known, some of us still go on discussing whether we ought to be in the war at all or encourage other people to devote time, energy, and thought—the vital forces which are needed for victory—to abstract arguments about non-resistance and the pacifist philosophy of life. Is it wise? Is it right? We have reached a position where neutrality is impossible. We must take our side in this gigantic struggle and have done with double-mindedness. There are very few people in this country who want Germany to win. There are still fewer who, realising what a German invasion would mean, can look upon that possibility without the utmost horror. Very well; if we do not want Germany to win or to expose our homes to the lustful cruelty with which she has treated Belgium, we must organise victory and dismiss from our hearts every thought or desire which can weaken the purpose of victory. To treat the war as though it were the business of somebody else or to spend our time in backward glances and pathetic “might-have-beens,” and in this way to withdraw one ounce of available energy from the fulfilment of our high purpose, is in itself an act of betrayal. If any word of ours plants the canker of doubt in a brave young heart or the clever combat of argument weakens the programme of action, the excellence of our intentions will not save us from the moral disaster of being aiders and abettors of public wrong. There is a time for speech and a time for silence, and the time for silence is now, when the greatest cause which God has ever committed to any nation must be served by deeds, not words.

And yet words there must be, for they are the vehicle by which spiritual passion and the energy of common aims are carried from heart to heart. The time for cloistered talk in the pleasant groves of Academe will return; but now words must be stern, and strong, and few, the winged words of warriors and heroes, burning with hidden fire, and passing swiftly into action. We have talked with men who have made up their minds, some of them rather unwillingly, that the cause of the Allies is just, and that we as a nation could not have acted otherwise without dishonour; but they are not cheerful in their conviction. They are bewildered and distract in their behaviour, beset with dark forebodings about the future, and careful not to separate themselves emotionally from those who still criticise and disagree. The miasma of abstract discussion and balanced argument clings about the mind, and the duties which the war imposes are the occasion of a deep sorrow of the soul. It is not in this mood that great deeds are done and the cause of liberty is vindicated before the world. Let them turn from these delicate balancings of mind to the words, which are themselves action, strong in reproof, fervent in conviction, rich in encouragement for all who seek for a straight path for their feet: “Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not.” “No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God.” We as a people have put our hands to the plough, and there must be no looking back, no dissipation of energy in aimless talk or vague surmise, no obstinate pursuit of our private preferences and desires, till we have paid the price of victory and accomplished the purpose which God has appointed for us.

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

SORROW.

COUNT each affliction, whether light or grave,
God's messenger sent down to thee;
do thou
With courtesy receive him; rise and bow;
And, ere his shadow pass thy threshold, crave
Permission first his heavenly feet to lave;
Then lay before him all thou hast;
allow
No cloud of passion to usurp thy brow,
Or mar thy hospitality; no wave

Of mortal tumult to obliterate
 The soul's marmoreal calmness ; Grief should be,
 Like joy, majestic, equable, sedate ;
 Confirming, cleansing, raising, making
 free ;
 Strong to consume small troubles ; to commend
 Great thoughts, grave thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end.

AUBREY DE VERE.

My sons, you have heard, in the words of the truth of the Gospel, that you must through many tribulations enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. And again, that in every City bonds and afflictions abide in you, and therefore you cannot expect that you should go long on your Pilgrimage without them, in some sort or other. You have found something of the truth of these testimonies upon you already, and more will immediately follow ; for now, as you see, you are almost out of this wilderness, and therefore you will soon come into a Town that you will by and by see before you, and in that Town you will be hardly beset with enemies, who will strain hard but they will kill you, and be ye sure that one or both of you must seal the testimony which you hold, with blood ; but be you faithful unto death, and the King will give you a Crown of life. He that shall die there, although his death will be unnatural, and his pain perhaps great, he will yet have the better of his fellow ; not only because he will be arrived at the Celestial City soonest, but because he will escape many miseries that the other will meet with in the rest of his journey. But when you are come to the town, and shall find fulfilled what I have here related, then remember your friend, and quit yourselves like men, and commit the keeping of your souls to your God in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

O GOD, who knowest us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright, grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers, and carry us through all temptations. AMEN.

A FORTNIGHT AMONG THE BELGIAN HOSPITALS.

A VISIT to the Belgian hospitals must necessarily begin at Calais—for there we began our work, and there has been our main interest since January. It is a different Calais from the Calais of our first visit. In the hospitals there are many changes—four hospitals have gone to other places nearer the front, some are enlarged, others have changed their character, and whereas they used to receive sick men only, now receive the wounded, for the sick are much fewer in number than they were ; but there was no change in their friendly welcome and pleasure at seeing us, nor in their need of our continued help. The change from sick to wounded patients, for instance, has, in some cases, meant considerable outlay in fitting up a room where small operations can be performed, and where wounds can be dressed under better conditions than on a bed, and has necessitated the provision of a selected stock of surgical instruments, steriliser, and various other accessories. Again, the summer has brought different conditions, and nearly every hospital asked me if I could send them cotton coverlets for their beds, and leather slippers or shoes for the men, as in most cases there is a court or garden where they can walk.

A system has also been inaugurated by which the ambulances go round every afternoon to all the hospitals in turn, and take down to the shore those who are able to be up, so that they may spend a couple of hours lying on the sand by the sea—a great refreshment from the rather stuffy streets in the town. It was very encouraging to note the changes for the better in the hospitals themselves. For instance, at the “mental” hospital everything looked so much more cheerful—good beds for every one, chairs and a table in each ward, and all doors and windows open into the courtyard, and, best of all, a small wooden hut where one man at a time could have a real hot bath ! One of the patients insisted on playing me a tune on his melodeon, and very well he played, and doctors, patients, and myself all applauded his performance vigorously. There was a man there in whom I was specially interested, not a young man, and in a condition of complete nervous breakdown. He had had a bootshop near Antwerp, and until the war broke out was doing well. His shop and house are now a heap of stones, and his wife and family refugees ; but he considers himself a lucky man, for he knows they are safe and happy in a Yorkshire village, and his great comfort is looking at the picture postcards they send him, and in praising the kindness of their hostess. He has received a decoration for conspicuous bravery, but the poor fellow will never be able to return to the strain of army life in the field.

Both the hospitals in communities of sisters are now filled entirely by officers, who are very comfortably installed there, and are beautifully tended by these good and kind women. At one of the houses the Mother Superior was most anxious I should see a Belgian chaplain who was a patient, but who was at that moment preaching in their church. It was only by promising I would return the next day that I restrained the sister from calling him out of the church ! He had had many thrilling experiences at the front. On one occasion he was sitting in his little room in a village when a shell fell on the house, reduced it to ruins, killed the woman of the house and her three children, and left him unscathed. “It was, of course, le bon Dieu who still had work for him here, who protected him,” commented the reverend mother.

There is a small hospital on the outskirts of the town, and here in a room opening on the garden was a small hero. He was barely 16, and had been in the army since August last. Two months ago he was terribly wounded with shrapnel, but not before he had distinguished himself and had been raised to the rank of corporal. His wounds had just been dressed when we went in, and he was lying white and exhausted, but directly he heard who we were he stretched out a thin and shaky hand to the table by his side. The orderly understood what he wanted and handed him his treasured packet of cigarettes, and he was not satisfied until both Mr. Kelland and the doctor had taken one and had begun to smoke it. He had heard nothing of his father since the war, but a friend had told him he had seen him, and the doctor assured him inquiries should be made at once. “I shall be able to go back soon, shall I not, doctor ?” he said, and the doctor smilingly reassured him—but I fear he will not.

At the hospital in the lace factory where we recently provided the little “operation theatre” they have taken the neighbouring house, and beds for about thirty more patients are put up to be ready for emergencies. There is not a thing in the house beside the beds, however ! “But we shall only put the slightly wounded here,” said Madame, “and though they have only straw palliasses, well, it is a great deal better than the trenches.” She added, “Of course, it would be nice if each had a towel,” and she was surprised and delighted when we called there the next afternoon with some bundles of things we considered necessary. This devoted French lady and her sister give their whole time to the hospital in her husband's factory, and as the men often arrive in the night, they have not much rest.

The hospital managed by the girls of the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry Corps was as busy as ever, with wards full of our sick and wounded. Here ingenuity is elevated into a fine art, the contrivances are wonderful, and there is always an air of abounding life and gaiety in spite of all the sad sights. Their post is always heavy with letters of thanks from past patients, and no soldier passing through Calais who has been nursed by them fails to pay them a call. They are always most helpful, and most of the cartage of our clothes to the various hospitals is done by the help of their ambulances, which they are always ready to lend if free.

We have now a little refugee home in Calais with twenty beds, where those among the civilians who come down from the front and who are frail, old, sick, or very young, are housed for the few days they wait in Calais before proceeding to the West. It is proving very useful, especially for mothers and young babies. They are generally able to be up in the day time, and take their meals with the others at the large refuge close by, so the kitchen has only to provide little extras for those who need them. I was greatly pleased with the arrangements, and believe it is filling a really useful part in the assistance of these distressed people.

I was also able to visit a group of hospitals nearer the front, but as these are mainly for slight cases who really only require a week or two of rest and feeding, and plenty of sleep, they are not in need of our help, except in the way of clothes, and especially leather slippers. The new group of hospitals, however, which do greatly need our help are the base and convalescent hospitals in Brittany, with Rennes as their centre. When the wounded leave Calais (and this is now after only two or three days' treatment, for it is absolutely necessary always to have a large number of free beds for emergencies) they are sent in hospital trains to the west of France. We had heard something of the conditions there from letters written by doctors who were formerly at Calais, and we were anxious to visit the district and see for ourselves. So we decided to go down to Rennes for two days and make preliminary inquiries at headquarters there. It is a long journey nowadays from Calais to Rennes, but it was varied by talk with our fellow travellers. We had in our carriage on the way to Paris two Belgian non-commissioned officers. They were going to Paris for a few days' holiday—the first since the beginning of the war. "But with no home and no family to join, what is the good of a holiday?" said one. He did not know where his family were—his fiancée had been shot by the Germans last August—he did not know exactly what had happened but could guess. The other man said "I had a wife and three children when I went to the war, I have never heard of them since. He," pointing to his friend, "is the lucky one, he knows the worst." "Yes, I am the better off," agreed the other. They wondered what they would do in Paris. "At least, we shall hear some music," they agreed with satisfaction.

When we arrived at Rennes we went at once to the general in charge of the medical work of the district. There was no need to give our names. "Soyez la bienvenue, Mme. Allen," he exclaimed, with both hands outstretched. He had been expecting us and had heard of the work of the Fund already, both when he was in Calais in February, and from doctors who had joined his staff from Calais more recently. He was anxious that we should see all we could during the short time we had, and most kindly put his own car at our disposal, with the chief surgeon to take us round to some of the hospitals. In Rennes the Belgian wounded are, in most cases, tended in special wards set aside for them in French hospitals with their own Belgian doctors to look after them. Such an arrangement has its difficulties as well as its advantages. There are thirty hospitals in twenty different localities where Belgians are received in this district, but we were only able to see a few of these as the distances are so great. One hospital for 200 convalescent soldiers (which is entirely devoted to Belgians), is situated in the country, about twenty kilometres outside the town; the men are housed in an eleventh century château, a most beautiful building to look at, but built with the eleventh century ideas of comfort, and apparently the succeeding centuries have added little but decay. The men had plank beds, frequently broken, with a thin and lumpy mattress, a brown sheet, and a coverlet, and nothing else. There were no chairs or tables; the men go into the village for meals as there is no kitchen at the château. There is a well in the courtyard, and here one man at a time may wash, but there is no soap or towel for him! These men have fought for us, have lost their country, lost their homes and families, and have shed their blood. They deserve something more than this in their time of weakness. I shall not readily forget the sad faces I saw that afternoon. I spoke to most of the men and heard a great many stories of bravery and distinctions gained in fighting, and they were all expecting to return to the trenches quite soon. Before we left Rennes we arranged with the General that a simple arrangement for baths and washing should be installed at once at our expense, and we promised to send 200 beds (with bedding complete) as soon as possible. This will be a heavy expense, but I believed I should have the support needed when once the facts were known.

On discussing general lines of help it was decided that certain expensive surgical appliances should be provided to be kept at headquarters and sent out as special cases occurred, and that each doctor should be invited to state the peculiar needs of his hospital. These lists of requirements will all be checked by the head of the medical staff for the district, who knows the kind of cases sent to each hospital and can check any extravagant or unnecessary demand. We shall thus ensure that only necessary articles are asked for, and there will be no overlapping. We have also been able to arrange what we believe will be a rapid, reliable, and economical means of transport. I have said there are thirty hospitals in this district. I have seen, so far, only six, there are twenty-four others. Judging by those I have seen they will require a great deal of help in the way of equipment. I do not think we can meet the demand without the expenditure of about £1,500. Thanks to the generosity of readers of THE INQUIRER we have some money in hand, but we still have to continue the supplies to the hospitals in Calais and neighbourhood, and also the maintenance of the civilian work for which we are responsible. We shall, therefore, need more funds for the new field of work which has opened to us, and it would be hard to find a better cause.

ROSE ALLEN.

EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY. 1831-1915.

THE papers have taken suitable notice of Prof. Beesly's death, and the Manchester Guardian has (characteristically) distinguished itself by its fine and discriminating analysis of his special qualities as a historian, referring its readers (as we should like to refer all ours) to his remarkable contributions to "The New Calendar of Great Men,"* and more especially to the pregnant vigour of the wonderful article on Julius Cæsar.

But to those of us who remember him in the fighting strength of his early manhood all that is now written of him must seem strangely pale. Like some other champions of "the people" he was reserved and somewhat distant and unapproachable in his manners, but his weight of brow and the vivid glance it overhung told of the strength of will and the keenness of vision that his unobtrusive vigilance in the administration of "University Hall" embodied. As long as there was nothing wrong he seemed to be a veritable King Log, and we supposed that his thoughts were all given to other and doubtless more important matters than our doings, but if any of us over-stepped the limit he came to know better! Or perhaps one of the residents unexpectedly disappeared, and we none of us knew why, until we came to know a little more of the world in after years, and put two and two together.

In his Historical Lectures, however, and still more in his reading of the historians with private pupils he revealed himself. I have a letter before me, written only last year, just before the war, in which Enfield Dowson speaks with unabated enthusiasm, after some fifty years, of the days when reading the Seventh Book of Thucydides (the story of the Sicilian Expedition) with Beesly was one of the great experiences of his life. And when, in 1865, Seeley's "Ecce Homo" gave currency to the phrase "Enthusiasm of Humanity," Mr. Dowson declared (and he has often repeated it since) that he knew no man whose life was more consistently and passionately inspired by that enthusiasm than Prof. Beesly's.

The year 1866 was the year of Governor Eyre and of Broadhead,

Names forgotten now,
Nor to be heard of more; yet, they were powers,
Like earthquakes, shocks repeated day by day,
And felt through every nook of town and field.

Beesly contrasted the attitude of the dominant classes towards the infamous expression given to the Imperial impulse by Governor Eyre with the prompt and emphatic repudiation of Broadhead's crimes by the Trade Unionists and working classes generally; and he hinted that about enough had been said on this latter subject and that it was undesirable for Trade Unionists to behave as if they could never again come before the public without an apology and a repudiation on their lips. The investigations of the Royal Commission amply vindicated his position subsequently; but meanwhile the storm had burst. Beesly was accused of palliating the vilest crimes that had been committed by Trade Unionists, and in particular of saying that Governor Eyre was a baser criminal than Broadhead. Dignified protests and explanations were in vain; the truth being that what Beesly really had said and meant, though not so telling an indictment as the things he was accused of, were substantially almost as offensive to his accusers. He was expelled from his club and open or covert attempts were made to eject him from the Principalship of University Hall. He met everything with unshaken firmness and unembittered spirit; but it taught him a valuable lesson, and in a subsequent pamphlet he reduced reviewers of a certain type to indignant paralysis by protesting in anticipation against the quotation of a certain sentence (upon which he knew they would fasten) unless they flanked it with one sentence of the context at least on each side.

* Macmillan, 1892.

On his marriage, in 1869, to Miss Emily Crompton, the daughter of Justice Crompton and the sister of Mrs. Croom Robertson and of Mrs. Llewellyn Davies (it was noted, by the way, as strange that none of the sisters had married "well!"), his old students gave him a piece of plate, and in thanking them he expressed the great value he attached to their expression of good will. He was willing to stand or fall, in his official capacity, by those who had been under his charge after they had escaped it.

From College days, when he had come under Dr. Congreve's influence, he was a consistent and zealous Positivist; but he considered himself precluded in honour from taking advantage of his position as Principal of the Hall, to do even so much as interest the residents in the writings of Comte, or defend Positivism from the grossest misrepresentations. To this line he adhered with scrupulous fidelity and sometimes under severe strain.

After his retirement he devoted himself chiefly to his Church. His translations of Comte are of rare excellence, and his profoundly informing contributions to the Calendar have already been referred to. In the matured and mellowed wisdom of his declining years he became the most genial and gracious of friends to those of his juniors who were privileged to visit him, and he was able to look with generous admiration and hope upon the work of some of the younger Positivists who had recognised the necessity of a stricter compliance with the demands of their Founder as to scientific acquirements than he himself had ever yielded. Just before the breaking out of the War he declared (I quote from memory) that it was a source of deep satisfaction to him, in his extreme old age, to see his country "under the best and wisest Government" she had ever had.

P. H. WICKSTEED.

QUESTIONS AT ISSUE.

HAS CHRISTIANITY FAILED?

By P. E. VIZARD.

THIS question is asked, of course, in relation to the war. The extraordinary fact has again and again been emphasised that here we are nearly 2,000 years from the birth of Christianity; its doctrines and principles having been preached and supposed to be practised through all this long period, and yet we see the greater part of the civilised world engaged in deadly strife in direct contravention of the elementary principles that Christianity was designed to propagate. "Peace on earth" was the message of Jesus to mankind, A.D. 1, and universal peace then prevailed; in A.D. 1915 the greatest war ever known is raging. This, on the face of it, would seem to show that Christianity had, in one main point, at least, broken down.

The answer usually and promptly given is that Christianity has not broken down, but that the practice of its professors is at fault. But is this a sufficient answer? If, under a system established 2,000 years ago to carry out a certain policy or practice, it is found that actions and practices of a directly opposite character extensively prevail, is there not a reasonable presumption raised that the system has failed of its object? I suggest that the truth will be found to lie here; that the main doctrines and principles of Christianity are sound, and that the failure is due to the methods under which Christianity has worked—to the procedure that has been adopted in carrying out principles and ideals which are, in themselves, sound and stable.

Now to come to close grips with the subject—to descend from the abstract to the concrete, let me suggest some directions where weakness in the methods of Christianity, as ordinarily practised, may be detected. I remark, first, the attitude of Christianity with regard to war. Instead of at once setting its face against it, Christianity has always justified it as a God-appointed agent. Nay, more, it has by its representative, "the Church," through all the centuries, used it as a potent engine in promoting its ends, extending its power, and propagating its principles. It is notorious that the longest and bitterest wars of the world have been religious wars.

I suggest that the main element in all this is the fact that Christianity has had as its chart and guide a sacred book—the Bible. All the great religions of the world—Islamism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Christianity—have their Sacred Books. Greece and Rome were palpable exceptions, and if Christianity had followed the line of Greece and Rome far better results would, in my belief, have followed. Unfortunately the Hebrew element overbore the Greek, with results the disastrous character of which it has been reserved for the present age to counteract. Greece had no Bible, and the cry to-day is, "Back to Greece." I make no wholesale condemnation of Sacred Books. They are powers of enormous value and importance, but the evil of them is that they are always supposed to be the authoritative expressions of the laws or doctrines or wisdom or knowledge of some Deity; they are, therefore, infallible, their doctrines are stamped with the imprint of finality. They are accepted for ages without doubt or discussion; any who venture to question their authority are reprobated; in short, the system blocks the path of growth and progress. It is absolutely opposed to the great modern doctrine of evolution.

Now apply this to the Bible, and while fully acknowledging its absolutely unique character in so many directions, the profound interest of its history, composition, and contents; admitting fully that there is to be found in it the deepest spirituality, the noblest poetry, and literature unsurpassed in our language, at the same time slavish adherence to its supposed infallible utterances during the past centuries has hindered progress and kept alive false views, crude and primitive ideas and practices which, if the mind of man had been left free and unfettered, it would long ago have cast off.

This brings us back to the question of war. Christianity and its representative, "the Church," adopted the Bible—both Old and New Testaments—as its sacred and infallible book. The Bible teaches that in God's plan for promoting the progress of the world, by the establishment of the Jews as the world's leaders, the main agent was war, and war of the worst possible kind—wars of aggression, entirely unprovoked, waged against inoffensive nations, and carried out by methods of the utmost cruelty and barbarity. Wars of extermination. "The Lord is a Man of war," we are told (Ex. xv. 3), and if so, surely we also should be men of war. These are the teachings of the book that Christianity has put before the world as its guide. Can the continuance and prevalence of war be wondered at when it is sanctioned by such high and "infallible" authority? True it is that the advocacy of Old Testament morality is found impossible to-day, but we must remember that this larger view is of very modern date.

And so we find that all through the centuries, the foremost nations of the world—which have been Christian nations—have universally imbibed the idea, and acted upon it, that war was necessary and justifiable. In quite modern times other ideas have sprung up, ideas tending to show that wars are not initiated, sanctioned, and deliberately used by God, and that by some plan of mutual agreement between nations war may be, if not absolutely abolished, at least greatly mitigated. But here again we ask what has been the attitude of Christianity and the Church towards these efforts? A most important beginning was made by the Hague Conferences, but how coldly has this been received by Christian nations in general, and, by the Church as a body, no direct support has been accorded to it.

And now it will be asked, what remedy do you propose for all this? My answer is very short and simple, and many will at once consider it trite and insufficient. I say we must go back to the simple elementary principles of Christianity. This will surprise those who have listened to the hard things I have said about Christianity. But let me repeat that I blame not the principles of Christianity but the methods Christianity has adopted. "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." These doctrines are absolutely sound and of perennial application. They have been very fairly and generally acted upon as between individuals of the various Christian nations; but, and this to my mind is the gist of the whole matter, while it has been held that these moral doctrines apply as between man and man in each State, it has been held that they do not apply as between one nation and another. "Every nation for itself and the devil take the others" is the maxim, not only of Germany, but, broadly speaking, it has been the doctrine which nations generally have acted upon in the past. It sounds very simple; but if the nations of Europe—better still, of the world—would act, among themselves, on the same principles that it has been found necessary to act upon as between the individuals of each separate State, namely, establish a system of international laws, and allow only sufficient armies, navies, and armaments to be kept up as would act as an international police force, if this could be done it would put a stop to the terrible state of things that now exists.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.:—Towards International Government: John A. Hobson. 2s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Evolution and Spiritual Life: S. A. McDowall. The Holiness of Pascal: H. F. Stewart. 4s. net.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL:—Morals in Evolution: L. T. Hobhouse. 10s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co.:—Lost in the Post: F. A. Lutyens. 1s. net. Will Warburton: George Gissing. 1s. net. Jewell: Clara Louise Barnham. 1s. net. Love Letters of a Worldly Woman: Mrs. W. K. Clifford. 1s. net.

THE EASTERN PRESS, LTD.:—The First and Last Fight for the Voluntary Principle in Education: Sir Roland K. Wilson. 6d. net.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN:—Russia and Democracy: C. de Wesselitsky. 1s. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.:—Belgian Democracy: Its Early History: H. Pirenne. 4s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS:—The History of Germany in the Nineteenth Century: Heinrich von Treitschke. 12s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—The Paradise of Dante: Trans. by C. L. Shadwell. 12s. 6d. net. The Book of France. 5s. net.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Last Pages from a Journal: Mark Rutherford. 4s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co.:—Life of John Viriamu Jones: Katharine Viriamu Jones.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Harvard Theological Review, Review of Theology and Philosophy.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

26TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4,865	7	9
X.	1	0	0
Belgian Hostel Fund, 70, Compayne Gardens, per Mrs. Jolowicz (4 weeks' subscription)	7	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Anonymous	0	5	0
Mrs. Thomas Atkins (second donation)	2	2	0
British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women, Todmorden Branch, per Miss A. Shaw	2	2	0
Mrs. Aspland (second donation)	5	5	0
M. and L. O., Clonmel	1	0	0
The Misses Gillespie (fifth donation)	0	5	0
Miss Lucy Colton (fifth donation)	0	2	6
Per Mrs. French—
Tennis Club Subscription, sent by two girls.	3	0	0
Two school teachers	0	5	0
Collected by doctors	0	7	0
Mr. W. Haslam (second donation)	2	0	0
Liverpool and District Branch of Women's League, per Miss Allison Hall (collection)	4	3	0
Staffs of Edinburgh Provincial Training Centre, per Mr. H. N. Dodds	3	0	0
Collection at All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering	1	11	0
Miss Kate B. Thomas	2	0	0
West Grove (Cardiff) Sunday School, Proceeds of Concert, per Miss Ellen Holloway	4	2	4
Mr. J. Arthur Kenrick (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss E. J. Spencer	1	0	0
Mrs. Evers (monthly donation for three months)	3	0	0
Miss A. Garrett (second donation)	5	5	0
Mrs. Enfield (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Fund, per the Rev. W. Short (second donation)	1	0	0
Miss A. J. Gregg (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Reid (third donation)	0	10	0
Mrs. Cooke Taylor (second donation)	2	0	0
Proceeds of private concert given by five Gorton girls, per Miss E. A. Simpkin	0	13	0
Mrs. Wm. Garnett	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Odgers, Madras	5	0	0
S. L. S.	0	5	0
Mr. Richard S. Osler (fourth donation)	0	10	0
Memorial Church and Red Cross Society, Liscard, per Mrs. Johnson	3	18	9
The Rev. J. Arthur and Mrs. Pearson	1	0	0
The Children of Stanhope Street L.C.C. School, per Mrs. Perrin	1	4	0
Mrs. W., The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham	7	10	0
	£4,955	13	4

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. Robinson; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Miss Mary Dendy; Ullet Road Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Odgers); Pupils of the High School, Shaftesbury (per M. A. P., Bournemouth); Miss Bruce; Elder Yard Chapel, Chesterfield, Ladies' Sewing Society (per Mrs. Smile); Mrs. Wm.

Tangye; Working party of the Unitarian Chapel, Crewkerne (per the Rev. S. Street); Mrs. Ellingham; Miss Leigh Browne; Mrs. Mottram and friends; Miss Spencer; Mrs. M. Varian; Mrs. Buckton; Miss K. F. Purdon; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Miss Reeve and Miss Taylor; Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Some Friends in Trinidad (per Mrs. W. Reeve); Muswell Hill Congregational Church Ladies' Sewing Society (per Mrs. Allbon, 94 shirts); Mrs. Collier (Trinidad); Mrs. E. Page; Swansea Unitarian Church Ladies' Sewing Guild (per Mrs. Reid); Mrs. French (about 500 tins of ointments, &c., from a druggist); Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee (per Mrs. Duke); Mrs. Titterton; Miss G. Corder; Mr. A. A. Worsley (radiographic plates).

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

Mrs. Allen would be very grateful if some one in London would offer the use of a motor-car to carry goods from her house into town for transport abroad. It would only be required about once a fortnight for about a couple of hours. The car of which she has hitherto had the use is no longer available.

CONFERENCE OF SOCIAL SERVICE UNIONS.

THERE were some 350 of us gathered together at the Fourth Inter-Denominational Conference of Social Service Unions from June 26 to July 5, of whom some 50 were from our own group of Churches. The following Social Service Unions were represented:—The Roman Catholic, the Church of England (C.S.U.), the Baptist, the Congregationalist, the Friends', the Presbyterian, the Primitive Methodist, the United Methodist, the Wesleyan Methodist, and our own National Conference Union. It was the Christian world in miniature. For where else would you find in mingled and natural concourse every variety of Christian from the full-robed Dominican Prior to the member of the latest mystic coterie? They were all there, and, though diverse, felt themselves for once strangely at one, scarcely understanding it all. And the thread which linked them was an eagerness for social reform shot through with the Christian spirit.

We were all, too, under orders to get to know one another, and were exhorted to sit next to a stranger at meal times, the result being strange and curious contacts which would tend to wider sympathies and deeper understandings. Bishops were unfrocked, and democracy was achieved without thinking of it. There was a happy camaraderie, and I never before saw so fully realised the spirit of Walt Whitman's lines:—

"Stranger, if you passing meet me and desire to speak to me, why should you not speak to me?"

And why should I not speak to you?" "The Hayes," where the School is held, is a stately country mansion near the little village of Swanwick, in Derbyshire, and is situated in charming undulating country. It is surrounded by a forty-acre estate laid out with gardens and lawns and shady walks and terraces and lake, well wooded, and with numerous bowers of ease and quietude, where one may wander at will. You can escape from the crowd at any moment; there are nooks for the solitary and recesses for those who love to congregate in groups. There is a large hostel for sleeping; a dining-hall to seat some 400; a lecture-hall, airy and light and cheery, to accommodate some 500; drawing-rooms, lounges, conservatory, writing-rooms, and every simple comfort the heart of man can long for. Such is the material setting which is yours for an ordinary tariff.

But the main thing is "the Swanwick spirit," by which is meant not merely the camaraderie of very diverse personalities, but, far more, the touching of all social reform to finer issues by the application to it of the Christian spirit. We meet and we part in a religious atmosphere, and we are interpenetrated by it throughout. For even if we cannot worship in common through set forms of speech, we do worship together in the silence, and, at times, music, "the pathos of the final word," accomplishes what nothing else can. We start with a Sunday (or an earlier Sabbath) and we end with one, and, each morning, we open the day with our several worships and close it with worship in a common silence broken only by the vesper hymn of the thrush. Each lecture, too, is preceded by a few minutes' silence the solemn hush of which softens and subdues us and fits us for the receiving of the spirit of words.

The first Sunday's addresses set the tone of the whole gathering. The Bishop of Oxford spoke on the need of translating the spirit of war service—all that it has of self-sacrifice and unhesitating devotion—into social service, and on the unique opportunity now before us of reviving the idea of a Catholic Church, the realisation of which can alone meet the needs of the world. Father Plater, S.J., affirmed that not Christianity had broken down, but that Hague Conventions and all merely secular agencies had broken down. The peace of Christianity was not that of The Hague, but is the inward peace of the soul reconciled to God, a peace which can abide no matter what the storms without; and that peace, the only true Christian peace, had not broken down. And Mr. Philip H. Wicksteed asserted that it would be better for us to be defeated by the German Army than to succumb to the Prussian spirit. We must sacrifice everything to the Cause except the Cause itself. Unless we preserved what nothing could crush, we had nothing which victory could make glorious or a blessing to the world. Only if we had that which we valued more than victory did we deserve victory. For what would be the value of victory, if, in gaining it, we had sacrificed all that was worth living for? By each of the speakers we were lifted high above the levels of our common platitudes; the secular was interfused with the religious, Christianity had introduced the vital values.

We could not well have met together at a more solemn time, or have discussed together a more solemn subject—"International Relationships in the Light of Christianity." All the time the War was before us in varied aspects, from the purely economic consideration of the cost of the War to the fundamental question as to whether Christianity permits War at all or condemns it utterly. At times the tension was very great, especially when the more fundamental questions were being envisaged, and the merely economic speakers and considerations came as a great relief. But even at this critical time, it was not by any means at Swanwick a case of all work and no play. We had our sports and pastimes, our prize givings and concerts, and, at times, even huge laughter. And none of this seemed to me out of place, even at this time, but was a real and effective aid toward the preservation of sanity and balance. I fancy we all of us felt at bottom very much as Lincoln must have felt during the crisis of the American Civil War when some one remonstrated with him for cracking jokes at such a time, "Man, if I couldn't joke, I should die!"

But we had to pay a high price for the "Swanwick spirit," especially on this occasion, when the War was our one topic, and when sternly-opposed convictions in regard to it were represented among us. There was room for a bear-garden had place been given to it. There was urgent need of restraint. The "Swanwick spirit" has never been so severely tested, and it withstood the test. But, as a consequence, we were never brought up against the sharp edges of reality; the "Swanwick spirit" was unequal to the buffetings of this stern world. We locked our bosoms and kept the peace. Not a Friend took up the extreme Tolstoyan position, and not a militant unsheathed his blade, with the exception of the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas. At times, indeed, there was an acute and painful sense on the part of at least a few of us that there was no grip on present actualities, and that nothing less than a bomb through the roof would rouse us to realities. At times it seemed, as one wit remarked, quoting "G. K. C.," as if instead of fighting the Dragon St. George would have been better employed in tying a blue ribbon round its neck and presenting it with a saucer of milk!

The Quaker and pacifist representation at Swanwick was exceptionally strong. I suppose quite three-fourths of the members could have been so designated. Some had a "sky-blue trust in human nature" which seemed never to have heard of thunder and the clash of elemental forces. The restraint certain militants imposed upon themselves under these circumstances was almost superhuman.

The feeling I myself came away from the School with, and I feel no longer capable of repressing it, for I am in the actual world again, was one of real thankfulness that the temper of the nation at large is at this moment very different from that at the Swanwick Summer School, otherwise, I fear, the fate of St. George would be settled for all time; and of deep regret that the soul of the nation cannot at this hour of crisis be nurtured by us all with that utterly-convinced faith in the righteousness of our cause and in the legitimacy of the weapons we must necessarily employ to prosecute it which made the Ironsides of Cromwell irresistible. For me, even the very horrors of war light up by contrast the inestimable preciousness of those things to preserve which no horror must be counted too great to suffer and to inflict provided the legitimate uses of war allow. And one who is profoundly convinced, as I am, that it is the soul of a nation which alone ultimately determines its fortunes cannot but lament the half-hearted support, if support at all, which the pacifist can conscientiously give his nation when it is at death grips with another. If we cannot feel that Christ is on our side in this war, and that we can put our whole faith and energies into its prosecution, we are already defeated in our hearts, and are a canker in the heart of the nation working its bane.

It would be a mistake, however, to think that we were always in this rare and tense atmosphere. We did have before us very practical proposals towards ensuring and securing a world-peace, notably Mr. Aneurin Williams's plea for a League of Peace, defensive and offensive, between certain of the powerful nations of the world, suggesting as a nucleus, to start with, Great Britain, France and the U.S.A. One or two, failing the creation of an International Court (with power to enforce its decisions) advocated a Pax Britannica; many were enthusiastic for the principles of the Union for Democratic Control, and for the "continuous mediation" of Neutral Powers. These proposals were received by some with enthusiasm, by others with a deep scepticism engendered by memories of the past. And, all through, the deep note was sounded of the need of a change in the hearts of men, and of Christianity's mission to effect this change if the evils of a disunited Christendom could be overcome, and something of the nature of a universal Catholic Church realised here on earth. Again and again a speaker rose and asserted that without this we toil in vain, and that our task is to transplant the "Swanwick spirit" into a world that will let it live.

The School closed with a meeting to consider practical proposals. Among them were proposals to provide bursaries for students unable to meet the expense of attending the School; an International Swanwick at some future date in Switzerland; the formation of Study Circles in local areas on International Relations; the formation of local Inter-Denominational groups, &c. It was resolved to hold a further School about the same time next year.

H. H. JOHNSON.

SWITZERLAND AND THE WAR.

RELIGIOUS WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND PRISONERS.

WE learn from a supplement to The Gazette de Lausanne that a movement has been set on foot in French Switzerland and generously supported by men of local influence to bring the Gospel of Jesus Christ to bear directly upon soldiers at the front and prisoners in camps. M. le Pasteur et Professeur Alexandre

Westphal authorised the committee to take from his book "Jésus de Nazareth" the integral text of the four Gospels harmonised into a single and consecutive narrative, and himself zealously assisted in bringing out the little pocket volume of 300 pages, attractively bound in cloth and with marginal notes. Two editions of several thousand copies each have already been distributed on application, and every post brings urgent applications to the committee from soldiers, prisoners, officers, Catholic and Protestant chaplains, for more copies, together with multitudinous letters of appreciation from recipients. Many of these are exceedingly touching, as is evident from a selection (anonymous) given in the Lausanne Gazette. Here is a characteristic one from a lieutenant of infantry at the front:—

"Jésus de Nazareth se fait l'ami de chacun ici. J'en ai remis un exemplaire à l'un de mes hommes qui se défaule, il est évacué, tuberculeux; à un autre, blessé à l'affaire de P....; un au Capitaine X., avec lequel j'avais eu une discussion religieuse assez tenace.... Je me suis rendu compte que la préface seule [à ceux qui luttent et qui espèrent,] attirait déjà le plus profane...."

THE REV. JAMES HOCART.

THE Rev. W. Copeland Bowie recently received a letter from the Rev. James Hocart, who is still in Brussels, stating that a letter from Essex Hall, dated September 14, 1914, reached him in Brussels on March 16, 1915! The Rev. Paul Teissonniere, the minister of the Free Christian Church, being a Frenchman, has not yet returned to Brussels. Mr. Hocart is keeping pretty well, but he did not feel physically able to take up the regular Sunday services, which have consequently been suspended since the outbreak of the war. He attends to weddings, funerals, and makes special visits. The congregation, Mr. Hocart adds, could not have paid the minister's salary if he had returned, as several of the members are no longer in Brussels, and all find their resources very much reduced. It may be added that a son of Mr. Hocart is serving in the R.A.M.C., 3rd Scottish General Hospital.

WE understand that arrangements have been made for Prof. R. C. F. Dolley, M.A., of King's College, London, and University College, Nottingham, to deliver a course of lectures at Essex Hall on the lines of those he gave at High Pavement, Nottingham, last autumn, on 'Before the War and After.' The lectures will be given on Thursday evenings, November 4th–December 9th.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Advisory Committee.—Mr. C. E. Mercer has received from the Lancashire and Cheshire Advisory Committee a certificate of fitness to occupy the position of a lay worker in the province of Lancashire and Cheshire.

Hull. The late Mr. Simon Harris.—We regret to have to record the death of Mr. Simon Harris, which took place on Saturday last at his residence in Hornsea. Mr. Harris was a life-long member and a generous supporter of the Unitarian Church at Hull, of which he was a Trustee. His high character, his cheerful optimism and his never-failing readiness to assist will be sorely missed by the congregation. He was a member of the firm of Hanger, Watson & Harris, paint and colour manufacturers, and was well known in the city. He was an ardent friend of education, a one time member of the Hull School Board, and later a co-opted member of the Hull Education Committee. He was an ex-president of the Hull Literary Club, and a member of the Hull and District Liberal Federation. He was an earnest peace advocate and he attended more than one International Peace Congress. He and Mrs. Harris were present at the opening of the great Hall of Peace at the Hague. Notwithstanding this, however, he felt that it was the nation's duty to take part in the struggle now being waged against the tyranny of militarism. He made two journeys round the world and gained many friends amongst the Unitarians of America and Australia. A large number of people, including members of the City Council, and other public bodies, of friends and his firm's staff, attended the funeral at the Crematorium, which was conducted by the Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Liverpool, Bootle.—Under the auspices of the Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, Mrs. Firth held a small English Fair on July 2, when £7 5s. was realised. This money has been sent to the Mayoress of Bootle in connection with her motor ambulance scheme.

London, Stepney.—Mr. W. M. Long writes from 43, Rectory Square, Stepney, E.:—"May I appeal through your columns for financial help for our Sunday School Excursion. Every one knows the joy and benefit derived from even a day's outing in the country, and our East End children need this greatly. The children contribute part towards the expenses, but as the Railway Company is not issuing cheap fares, the cost of the excursion will be greater."

Manchester, Longsight.—The Rev. B. C. Constable having accepted a unanimous invitation to the Unitarian Free Christian Church, South Shore, Blackpool, has resigned his ministry at Longsight, and expects to enter upon his new duties on the first Sunday in September.

Mottram.—In connection with the North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union, the annual picnic was held on Saturday, July 10. The President, the Rev. H. E. Perry, took the chair at an informal meeting, and among the ministers present were the Revs. E. G. Evans and John Ellis.

Rotherham. The late Mr. Andrew Thomson.—Liberal religion in the Sheffield district has lost one of its most loyal and earnest supporters in Mr. Andrew Thomson, of Rotherham, who died suddenly at his home in the early hours of Monday morning, July 12th. Mr. Thomson came to Rotherham from Scotland, his native country, forty years ago, and for practically the whole of that time he was a prominent figure in the business, political, and religious life of the town, being connected from the day of his arrival with the Unitarian Church and the liberal movement generally. He was a close friend of the Rev. William Blazeby during a great part of his long ministry in Rotherham. Mr. Thomson was a man of sterling honour, unflinching honesty, and unswerving fidelity to principle, a generous and humane employer, beloved by his workmen, a staunch friend and public-spirited citizen, one who, by his life and deeds, bore steady witness to the value of a simple religious faith. He will be greatly missed in the district of Rotherham and Sheffield.

Southampton.—The Rev. Victor Moody, minister of the Church of the Saviour, writes as follows from Rydal, Bourne Avenue, Shirley, Southampton:—

"May I ask that the friends or relatives of men from our churches now in or at any time passing through Southampton will be good enough to let me have their names and necessary particulars for identification, so that I may get in touch with them, and extend what hospitality is possible under the circumstances. I may add that I shall be very glad at any time to communicate with bond fide correspondents in regard to any cases that may thus come within the scope of our work here. Will church officers and brother ministers please note?"

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE HEALTH OF THE ARMY.

It is rather startling to learn that individuals who have had typhoid, and have apparently completely recovered, may continue for years to carry and disseminate germs and to infect others. It is, therefore, as "Eye-witness" points out in a recent article dealing with the measures taken by the Medical Service for the prevention of disease, of supreme importance to detect cases of typhoid at an early stage, before the disease has had time to spread, and in the present campaign mobile bacteriological laboratories have been installed expressly for this purpose. To the care which is taken in the work of hygiene and the investigations of specialists at the disposal of the army, as well as the enforcement of a high standard of personal cleanliness and instruction in the elementary principles of sanitation, is due the very low general sick rate among our soldiers, which compares so well with the figures in previous wars. In the Nile campaign of 1898, for instance, there were in eight months more cases of typhoid in two brigades than there have been up till now amongst the whole British army engaged in the present war, and in the Sudan the conditions were far more in the soldier's favour. In the South African War 76 per cent. of the sickness was due to typhoid, which, in fact, killed a far greater number of our men than did the enemy.

FABIANS AT KESWICK.

The Fabian Summer School will hold its ninth session at Barrow House, near Keswick, from July 31 to September 11. Guests are being received during the present month on special terms; but the organised programme does not begin until July 31. Several interesting courses of lectures have been arranged, the lecturers including Mr. Clutton Brock, Sir Sidney Olivier, K.C.M.G., Sir Edwin Pears, Dr. Letitia Fairfield, Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson, Mr. J. A. Hobson, and Mr. R. W. Seton Watson. Barrow House is delightfully situated, and it appears to be the aim of those responsible for the arrangements to provide every opportunity for rest and recreation, as well as to encourage social intercourse, and the discussion of modern problems of sociology and economics.

HOLIDAYS IN WAR-TIME.

There are many to whom the thought of holiday-making will not prove attractive this year, but where it is possible to get away from the strain of work it is well to do so, especially in view of the need for keeping body and mind braced up to meet the troublous days that lie ahead. For those who are in need of companionship, and do not care for holidays on conventional lines, the programme of the Holiday Fellowship (of which Mr. Arnold Rowntree, M.P., is the President) with its centres in the Lake Country, North Wales, the Yorkshire Moors, Dorset, and the hills and cliffs of Galloway should prove of interest. The object of the Fellowship is to organise holiday making, to provide for the healthy enjoyment of leisure, to encourage the love of the open air, and to promote social and international friendship. Full particulars may be had of the Corresponding Secretary, Mr. T. A. Leonard, Bryn Corach, Conway, North Wales.

SUGAR FOR INCREASING WORKING POWER.

Sugar is a concentrated food which lessens or delays fatigue, and increases working power, but it must be taken in moderation, especially by those who lead for the most part an indoor or sedentary life. It is interesting to learn, on the testimony of Sir Lauder Brunton, that it is an alcohol of high molecular weight, that it replaces alcohol, and signs of the craving for it are found in the increasing number of sweetstuff shops in this country. The English-speaking peoples are, indeed, the largest consumers of sugar. In 1910, we learn from that useful little book published by the National Food Reform Association, 'Facts for Patriots,' England consumed 86.3 pounds per head, and the United States 81.6 as against Denmark 77.7 pounds, Switzerland 64.3 pounds, Germany, France, and Holland each about 40 pounds, and Italy, Greece, and Serbia only about 7 pounds. When first brought to Europe from the East sugar was used exclusively in the preparation of medicines, hence the old saying, "like an apothecary without sugar."

MME. LOYSON'S WORK IN PARIS.

We have referred before to the work which is being done by Mme. Loyson, the American wife of M. Paul Hyacinthe Loyson, who has turned her home in Paris into a hospital for convalescent soldiers. The Christian Register published at the beginning of the month a long letter from her in which she gives a most interesting account of her labours, and appeals for help to her friends in the United States. This small hospital has now been running over four months, and the number of beds has been increased from seven to twelve. At the time of writing Mme. Loyson had received in all 106 soldiers on convalescent leave varying from eight days to three months, most of them being French, some Russian, Polish, and Italian volunteers (Gari-baldians), and one a Belgian. Nearly all belonged to the invaded departments or to the military zone where it is impossible for them to return. Every one of them is living through a tragedy, for they have had no news from home since the beginning of the war, and those whom they love are in the hands of the enemy. Men in this condition, as Mme. Loyson points out, need as much moral help as physical care.

WOMEN AND THE FOOD SUPPLY.

A number of women's societies, including the National Women's Council, the Women's Freedom League, the Women's Industrial Council, Tailoresses' Trade Union, Committee on Meals for School Children, and the Domestic Workers' Union, are represented on the Joint Food Supply Committee, which is working on very practical lines to meet the difficulties caused by the rise in prices and possible shortage of food of certain kinds. Women, it is urged, in a letter which has been sent to the press, should take their share in the responsibility of seeing that the national food supply is sufficient, that it is obtainable by all, and that it is distributed as far as possible without waste. The Committee has obtained the promise of the Board of Agriculture and the Board of Education to assist in the establishment of classes in agricultural work for working women. The teachers necessary for these classes can be supplied by the Women's Colleges, and a leaflet dealing with the subject has been issued throughout the country-side. The efforts of the Committee have also been expended in other directions, notably in the improvement of the meals for school children; steps have been taken to induce the Government to control the rise in food prices, and a Sub-committee is devoting its full attention to Cost Price Restaurants and to the supply of food where required. The Treasurer is Mrs. Cobden Sanderson, 319, St. James's Court, Buckingham Gate, S.W., to whom subscriptions may be sent.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss OECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

PARIS.—Beautifully - furnished APARTMENT, airy and sunny balcony, four bedrooms, toilets, bath-room, drawing-room, dining-room, library, cloak-room, electricity, lift, telephone. £20 a month. — Apply to Mrs. FAURE, 14Y, Bd. St. Germain, Paris.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author.

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

EXTRAORDINARY SALE BAR-GAINS! Ladies' fine Mull handkerchiefs, printed border, with any initial embroidered, 2s. 6d. per dozen. Postage 3d. Summer Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Send postcard.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, July 17, 1915.

*. Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3812.
NEW SERIES, No. 915.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN Ltd.

Poland and the Polish Question

By NINIAN HILL. With Illustrations and a Map. 10s. 6d. net. [Just out.
"Has set forth the chief problems of Polish History with rare judgment and unusual accuracy. A book which should be widely read."—Manchester Guardian.

The Diplomatic History of the War

By M. P. PRICE. Second Edition, Revised and largely Rewritten. Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Just out.
"May fairly claim to be the most complete historical account yet published of the events leading up to the war.... will be an inestimable treasure."—Standard.

The War and the Balkans

By NOEL BUXTON, M.P., and CHARLES R. BUXTON. [Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; paper, 1s. net.
"This extremely important book deserves the widest notice, for it broaches an urgent question of policy, upon which the authors have a unique claim to pronounce an opinion."—Land and Water.

Towards International Government

By JOHN A. HOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.
States and discusses the chief proposals for securing a durable peace on a basis of better International relations after this war has been brought to an end and terms of settlement arranged. Relations must be between Peoples, and not between "Powers," and publicity and representative control of Foreign Policy are essential.

The Healing of Nations [Second Edition.

By EDWARD CARPENTER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; paper, 2s. net.
"Will be studied eagerly by the very large number of people who prize the eloquent teaching of this humane and sincere thinker."—Manchester Guardian.

Perpetual Peace

By IMMANUEL KANT. Translated by M. CAMPBELL-SMITH. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. net.
 This is believed to be the only complete translation into English including Notes as well as Text.

Historical Materialism and the Economics of Karl Marx

By BENEDETTO CROCE. Translated by C. M. MEREDITH, with an Introduction by A. C. LINDSAY. Small demy 8vo, 5s. net. [New Edition
Benedetto Croce demonstrates the possibility of economic or utilitarian action which is neither moral nor immoral, but non-moral, and indicates this as the economic principle which forms the basis of the science of economics.

The Natural Theology of Evolution

By the Rev. J. N. SHEARMAN. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.
 Mr. Shearman shows that Natural Theology, so far from being thrust out of existence by the doctrine of Evolution, is really more full of life and vigour than ever; and he applies his argument to selected instances of Evolutionary advance.

The Secret of Human Power

By HAYDN BROWN, F.R.S.M., &c., Author of 'The Secret of Good Health,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.
Analyses power in the individual, and in the race; helps the scientist to understand more fully the power of thought; teaches how to analyse character, how to estimate quality, disposition and temperament, and explains some of the operations of the greatest powers in creation.

London: Ruskin House, 40, Museum Street, W.C.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

CULLOMPTON.

NEW ORGAN OPENING, Thursday July 29th,
at 3.30,
BY LADY HEPBURN.
Dedication by Rev. JEFFERY WORTHINGTON.
Service conducted by Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Preacher: Rev. Dr. ODGERS.
Tea at 5.30. Organ Recital at 7 by Mr. SHORT, of Taunton

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

July

Morning, at 11.15.

25. Rev. NEANDER ANDERTON, B.A. (of Monton).

After July 25 the services will be suspended until Sunday, September 19.

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

LETCHWORTH SCHOOL, HERTS.

Principal: J. H. N. STEPHENSON, M.A. (Oxon).

A thorough continuous education, building up Health, Intellect, and Character, and preparing for the work of life. Hobbies encouraged.

"The School is beautifully situated and well housed.....I was impressed above all by the intelligent interest pupils took in their work."
—Report of Professor of Education, Sheffield University.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

"I regard Letchworth School as being a perfect model of what a School should be for boys from 6 years upwards." — Lieut. - Col. Stephenson, Cawnpore, India.

Fees, —25 to 30 guineas a term.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A.; Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen. Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/- SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.
Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, July 25.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. J. A. PEARSON ; 7, Mr. R. W. PETTINGER.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. CLARK LEWIS.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN ; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT AYRES.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Mr. WALTER RUSSELL.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON ; 7, Rev. W. H. ROWE.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNDY.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11.15, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG ; 6.30, Mr. JESSE PIPKIN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. NEANDER ANDERTON, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
 ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VAN NESS of Boston, U.S.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKER.
 { DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, Litt.D.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. ROWE, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. WATKINS.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Mr. WM. STEPHENSON.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. L. P. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. ; 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11 ; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fiskard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

DEATH.

HERFORD.—On the 7th inst., aged 75, Emma Decima, youngest daughter of the late John Herford, of Manchester.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. A. N. Blatchford has removed to 7, South View Terrace, Bideford, North Devon.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, YOUNG LADY as HOUSE-PARLOUR-MAID during War; Cook being gardener's wife living in cottage. Convenient house. Two in family. Write, with full particulars, to MRS. PEARSALL, Glaed Hame, Letchworth.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 359
PRESIDENT ELIOT ON THE WAR 361
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES 362
THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT: JOHN
WESLEY AND FREE CATHOLICISM 362

CORRESPONDENCE :—
National Organisation 364
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
The Book of France 364
Prof. Bergson on the War 365
Last Pages from a Journal, with other Papers 365

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 365
Oxford Summer Meeting, 1915 366
Belgian Independence Day 366
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 366
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 367

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WEDNESDAY was Belgium's Day, the anniversary of the declaration of her independence. There was High Mass in Westminster Cathedral, which had a distinctly national character, though it was held for exiles in a strange land, and the Indépendance Belge published a commemorative article full of proud confidence in the cause of liberty, of gracious memory of the fallen, and of quenchless hope in the future. "Tous ces exemples, tous ses efforts, tous ces actes héroïques ne serout pas perdus. Avant peu nous verrons la Belgique revivre, fière du rôle accompli, active, de nouveau prospère et heureuse par le travail de ses enfants." If any country in this terrific struggle has cause for weariness and the longing for peace which weakens resolution, it is Belgium. But she is still unconquerable in spirit, an example to us all alike in martial valour and in faithfulness to a noble cause,

BUT we must turn the cry, "Vive la Belgique" into deeds. Every soldier we send into the field is not only defending his own country, he is also helping Belgium to fight for her freedom and to avenge her terrible wrongs. And we who remain in safety at home must not grow weary in well-doing, as she does not grow weary of fighting. She has a claim upon us for thought, and personal service, and money. What we have done so far is as nothing compared with what Belgium has done for the cause of the Allies. The need of help will go on, and it will not grow less till the war is over. It must be met with a generosity equal to the need.

OUR Belgian Hospital Fund is one way of helping and of keeping in close touch with the indomitable spirit of the Belgian people. Week by week the gifts of our contributors go to the hospitals, where her wounded soldiers are being nursed back to strength. There is nothing lavish in the equipment. It is extraordinary how medical skill can fight a winning battle in the most unpromising surroundings; but our gifts make all the difference. This week Mr. Kellard has gone out again with over 50 cases of clothing and equipment. We have also despatched the 200 beds to the hospital near Rennes which Mrs. Allen described in her article last week. From this new district we have received lists from 27 hospitals, and these are being attended to with all possible despatch. The lists have been supervised with great care by the General on the spot, and the demands reduced to a minimum. We study economy in every possible way, where it does not mean more suffering and disease, and our Belgian friends are anxious not to be exorbitant in their demands; but even so, it is a big undertaking, which we are confident will receive generous support.

THE Coal Strike has been happily ended, and the few days of anxiety and dismay will not have been in vain if they deepen our feeling of the imperative need of national unity. This unity can only be achieved and maintained by the abandonment of sectional interests and the subordination of our own preferences and desires to the common good. The action of the miners in South Wales was a menace to public safety on a gigantic scale, but every one who drives hard bargains or falls away into grumbling and discontent because he does not get what he wants is disloyal in the same way. To exploit the war in any way for our own profit is an act of treachery to the State, and weakens the moral forces which are the driving power of national resistance.

WE say this without condemning the demands of the men on their merits. It was the occasion of the demand, and the tactics which they adopted to press it home, which have been the subject of public blame. They ought to have gone on working even to their own disadvantage rather than put national interests in jeopardy. No doubt this is high doctrine, and our commercial habits make us slow to accept it. On the other hand the exasperation which had spread over the entire coal-field called undoubtedly for a more practical remedy than appeals to patriotism, and this remedy has been found in higher wages and better terms of employment. The award, which has been accepted by both sides, is not a concession to panic, which rescues us from momentary danger only to cripple industry in the future. The question is whether the profits on coal can justly bear these advances, and public opinion seems to be satisfied that they can. But we have a right to be indignant that there was no settlement on the lines arranged by Mr. Lloyd George without the bitterness of temper; the economic waste, and the terrible disturbance of the public mind produced by the strike.

* * *

Two important questions are left over from this short struggle for settlement, and one of them at least ought to be faced by the Government without further delay. There is no doubt that the Welsh miners are under the impression that the coal owners have been making exorbitant war profits, and all the available figures about contract and retail prices seem to tell in the same direction. Proposals have been made that these additional profits in all war industries should be heavily taxed, or that they should be cut off at their source by placing a legal limit upon prices. It is no doubt a counsel of perfection that no one should grow richer on account of the war, but the public interest requires that wealth of this sort should be severely discouraged. Otherwise we shall be exposed later on to the danger of a small class of war plutocrats, who will rise to political and social power by exploiting the economic weakness of their neighbours.

* * *

THE other question is one which we hope will not arise, though another serious industrial dispute would at once bring it to a head. South Wales was proclaimed under the Munitions Act. In the terms of settlement it was agreed that no one should be penalised for the part taken by him in the dispute. In other words it has been found desirable in the interests of industrial peace not to enforce the law. Clearly the proclamation was a mistake. No penalty could have been exacted unless the whole district had been placed under martial law. In the last resort some form of compulsion of this kind might have been necessary if all attempts at reasonable persuasion had broken down. But we cannot compel men to work as a public duty for private profit. We have then to face the question whether certain staple industries, which are essential to national safety, ought not to pass under Government control for the duration of the war. Those who carry them on are engaged on national service just as much as the men who enlist. We cannot have compulsion, which will be either just or effective, on any other terms.

* * *

WE do not resent in the least the homilies on national thrift and the need of retrenchment which are addressed to us by our public men, but they would help ordinary people more if they were a little more practical. It is a great deal easier to attend to definite suggestions than to vague advice. Perhaps the Retrenchment Committee which has been appointed this week will be able to come to close grips with the problem and to reach the mind of the average citizen. It must be remembered that our whole scale of public expenditure rests on a basis of abundant wealth. If all the larger salaries were cut down, as unsuitable for lean years, the country as a whole would begin to take the situation seriously. A great deal can also be done by example. If expensiveness in food and dress and other forms of needless luxury were dropped first of all by wealthy people, a new and wholesome fashion of simplicity would float down through all ranks of society. Many people still imagine that by the happy medium of extra profits and a war bonus on wages they are going to be as well off as ever in spite of the rise in the cost of living. They must begin to prepare their hearts for a world where everybody will be poorer. It will have its compensations. Perhaps the things which money cannot buy will be all the more precious.

* * *

THE Wesleyan Conference began its annual meetings in Birmingham last week. It is stated that 100,000 young men, including 24 ministers and about 50 ministerial students, have joined the forces, while 100 ministers are acting as chaplains. This is a fine record, and will in the end enrich Methodism as a whole with new experience and the strength of soul which is the fruit of duty well done. Meanwhile the situation is one of some difficulty. The supply of candidates for the ministry will be much smaller than usual. Instead of 250 students in the four colleges there will probably be only about 100 at the beginning of next session. But we do well to make light of difficulties of this kind wherever they occur. We can only avoid them by refusing to do our duty.

SOME interesting experiments in the control of public-houses and clubs have been started in various parts of the country. They ought to supply a mass of material for the study of restrictive legislation and the effect of shorter hours upon sobriety. In Newhaven the hours of sale have been severely curtailed, and are as follows:—On week-days, the hours between 12 noon and 2.30 p.m., and between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. On Sundays the hours between 12.30 p.m. and 2.30 p.m., and between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. The sale of spirits is limited to the hours between 12 and 2.30 on five days of the week, no sale being permitted on Saturday and Sunday. Treating and credit are forbidden. Everybody must order his own drink and pay for it with his own money at the time. There are also provisions allowing licensed premises and refreshment houses to be kept open for the supply of food and non-intoxicating liquor at any time during which they may be kept open under the general provisions of the Licensing Acts.

* * *

THERE is an interesting letter in the current number of the Modern Churchman by the Rev. G. S. Sale, in which he points out, for the enlightenment of those who see in the saying of Christ, "Love your enemies" a final condemnation of all war, that the word used in the Greek means a private enemy, one with whom we ourselves have a personal quarrel, and has nothing to do with military hostility between one country and another.

"The unfortunate ambiguity of the English word 'enemy' is at the bottom of nearly all the misunderstanding that exists, and the misrepresentations that are made on this subject. In ordinary English the word enemy is used in two entirely distinct and mutually exclusive senses, namely, (1) a private and personal enemy ἐχθρός, inimicus, that is, a member of a community who has quarrelled with another member of the same community; (2) one whose country is at war with the country of another, πολέμιος, hostis; and such πολέμοι being members of different communities, cannot possibly have quarrelled with each other privately and personally, and cannot therefore ever be, or ever have been, ἐχθροί, enemies in the first sense."

Possibly this distinction does not carry us very far; but it helps to remind us that the ethics of war are not discussed in the New Testament, and it is valid against the literalist who solves complicated problems of national duty by the short and easy method of quoting texts.

PRESIDENT ELIOT ON THE WAR.

THE volume in which President Eliot has collected his Letters to The New York Times on the war, and several other essays on kindred topics, is a most welcome contribution to the cause of sound thinking. His pages are pervaded by a spirit of lofty idealism. He is a lover of peace, an unwearied advocate of goodwill, and the passion for righteousness of his Puritan ancestry still glows in his heart; but he never sacrifices his shrewd political instincts and his clear perception of things as they are to barren sentiment. He loves peace too ardently to wish for peace at any price. This happy combination of mental sanity with calm optimism is seen at its best in the series of letters which passed between him and Mr. Jacob H. Schiff of New York at the end of last year. The gentle pacifist, amiable, high-minded, and ineffective, is helpless in his grasp. In response to a proposal that American public opinion should call a truce in order to arrange terms of peace before either side has won a decisive success. Dr. Eliot replies as follows:—

In Germany all the forces of education, finance, commercial development, a pagan philosophy, and government, have been preparing this war since 1860. To stop it now before these forces have been overwhelmingly defeated, and before the whole German people is convinced that they are defeated, would be to leave humanity exposed to the certain recurrence of the fearful convulsion we are now witnessing. If anybody can show me any signs that the leaders of Germany are convinced that there is to be no world-empire for Germany or any other nation, and no despotic Government in Europe, I shall be ready to take part in any effectual advocacy of peace.

This doctrine of German responsibility is the governing principle of all he writes, and it may possibly win a hearing among some of the small groups in our own country who still cling to the belief that the war was due to the blundering of politicians or to false moves in diplomacy during the fatal days of last August. For Dr. Eliot has no prejudice against Germany. In the past he has paid many public tributes to her greatness and the immense debt which American scholars and men of science owe to her universities. There are many reasons why he should hold the balance even and refuse to judge. The German population in the United States has claims upon him which he would be the first to acknowledge, and ancestral ties with ourselves would not protect us from his criticism or make him indulgent to our faults. He has simply faced the facts, and it is no tenderness for England, but a passionate concern for spiritual freedom and the future of civilisation which dictates the severity of his words.

The present war [he says], is the inevitable result of lust of empire, autocratic government, sudden wealth, and the religion of valour. What German domination would mean to any that should resist it the experience of Belgium and Northern France during the past three months aptly demonstrates. The civilised world can now see where the new German morality—be efficient, be virile, be hard, be bloody, be rulers—would land it. To maintain that the power which has adopted in practice that new morality, and in accordance with its precepts promised Austria its support against Serbia, and invaded Belgium and France in hot haste, is not the responsible author of the European war, is to throw away memory, reason, and common sense in judging the human agencies in current events.

This is a position which we have tried to enforce from the beginning of the war. We have stood up stoutly against all weakening counsels, and tried to prepare men's hearts for a long struggle in which there can be no respite from toil and suffering till the end is reached. No other course was open to us without a betrayal of duty, the duty which we owe not merely to our domestic interests, but to the cause of freedom and justice in the world. If any one accuses us of being swayed by patriotic feelings we do not deny it. No man can withhold his affection and succour from his country when terrible burdens are laid upon her without shamefulness. But love is not always blind. Dr. Eliot sees the situation in exactly the same moral perspective as the noblest minds of our own race. Here is a case where lofty patriotism so far from confusing judgment has helped it to see the truth with clearer eyes.

If the prospect before us were one of unrelieved gloom, of loss without hope of gain, we should still have to go on with fixed and sad determination. We can never honour the chivalry of the soul by faithfulness on our own terms. "The justifiable and, indeed, necessary, war is the war against the ravager and destroyer, the enemy of liberty, the claimant of world-empire. More and more the thinkers of the world see, and the common people more and more believe instinctively, that the cause of righteous liberty is the cause of civilisation." That position we accept, and it fixes our duty. But we ask of every great enterprise, which demands an unstinted sacrifice of blood and treasure, that it shall do something more than avert a menace. In the very act of defeating our enemy we want to feel that some positive good has been achieved for the progress and gladness of the world. We cannot be satisfied with the programme "Écrasez l'Infame," unless we can see, dimly it may be, but none the less with strong confidence, that our hardly won security will help to extend the Empire of liberty and truth. Of all people, perhaps, the facile optimist is most alien to our present mood. We have no use for his glib phrases about a war to end war, and his schemes for rebuilding the world with most of the elementary facts of human nature left out. But the cautious and chastened optimism of Dr. Eliot is of a different order and lends spiritual splendour to the thought of victory. Deeply sensitive as he is to the cruelty and wastefulness of war, he does not spend his energies in cultivating a mood of depression or vain regret. What has happened has happened, and we must accept it. But he sees that in political affairs no less than in religion, men learn by what they suffer, and the defeat of evil is itself the liberation of good. In his last essay, in which he tries to state some of the lessons learned from the first seven months of the war, he writes:—

"Deutschland über alles" can survive as a shout of patriotic enthusiasm, or as an expression of an ardent desire for German unity; but as a maxim of international policy it is dead already and should be buried out of the sight and memory of men. It has, moreover, become plain that the progress in civilisation of the white race is to depend not on the power of any one nation, forcing its peculiar civilisation on other nations, but on the peaceful development of many different nationalities, each making contributions of its own to the progress of the whole, and each developing a social, industrial, and governmental order of its own, suited to its own territory, traditions, resources, and natural capacities.

"The Road towards Peace." By Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard. London: Constable & Co., 4s. net.

This is a vision which has been seen before. It recalls many a saying of Mazzini, the most inspired prophet of nationality which the modern world has known. "The Europe of the nations will be one," so he told us, "avoiding alike the anarchy of absolute independence and the centralisation of conquest." A war which has revealed in unparalleled ways our need of one another for purposes of safety, may, when it is ended, make this dream of democratic federation a question of practical policy.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

CHURCHES.

THOSE stately Structures which on earth
I view
To God erected, whether Old or New ;
His Sacred Temples which the World
adorn,
Much more than mines of ore or fields of corn
My Soul delight : how they do please mine eye
When they are filled with His Great Family !
Upon the face of all the peopl'd Earth
There's no such sacred Joy or solemn Mirth,
To pleas and satisfy my Heart's Desire,
As that wherewith my Lord is in a Quire,
In holy Hymns by warbling voices
prais'd,
With eyes lift up, and joint affections
rais'd.

The Arches built (like Heaven) wide and high
Shew his Magnificence and Majesty Whose House it is : with so much art and cost
The Pile is fram'd, the curious Knobs embost,
Set off with gold, that me it more doth pleas
Than Princes Courts or Royal Palaces ;

Great Stones pil'd up by costly labors
there
Like Mountains carv'd by human Skill appear ;
Where towers, pillars, pinnacles, and spires
Do all concur to match my great Desires,
Whose joy it is to see such Structures
rais'd
To th' end my God and Father should be prais'd.

THOMAS TRAHERNE (1636 ?-74).

RIGHT glad am I, said Evangelist, not that you have met with trials, but that you have been victors ; and for that you have (notwithstanding many weaknesses) continued in the way to this very day. I say, right glad am I of this thing, and that for mine own sake and yours : I have sowed and you have reaped, and the day is coming, when both he that sowed and they that reaped shall rejoice together ; that is, if you hold out ; for in due time ye shall reap, if ye faint not. The Crown is before you,
and it is an incorruptible one ; so run that you may obtain it. Some there be that set out for this Crown, and after they have gone far for it, another comes in, and takes it from them ; hold fast ;
therefore, that you have, let no man take your Crown. You are not yet out of the gun-shot of the Devil ; you have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin ; let the Kingdom be always before you, and believe steadfastly concerning things that are invisible. Let nothing that is on this side the other world get within you ; and above all, look well to your own hearts, and to the lusts thereof, for they are deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked ; set your faces like a flint ; you have all power in Heaven and Earth on your side.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

A PRAYER FOR THE EVENING.

MOST gracious, Almighty God ! full of loving kindnesse, and long-suffering, whose mercy is above all thy works, and they glory above the heavens ; whose truth reacheth unto the Clouds, and whose words shall never passe away, forgive me, I beseech thee, my transgressions this day, my vain thoughts, idle words, and loose conversation ; my exceeding neglect and forgetfulness of thee, my headlong inclinations and lusting after the world, preferring this land of Cabul before the snow of Lebanon, and a broken Cistern before the Well of life.

Justly, O Lord, might'st thou have shewed me thy back this day, and cut me off from amongst thy people, but thou has had mercy, and not sacrifice ; thou hast shed upon me the light of thy countenance, and removed my sins farre out of thy sight. I know, O my God, it is not in man to establish his own ways, it is thy Almighty arme must do it ; it is thou alone that hast led me through this day, and kept me both from doing and from suffering evill. And now, O thou preserver of men ! What shall I do unto thee ? What shall I render unto my Lord for all the mercies and loving kindnesses shewed unto thy servant this day, and all the dayes of my life hitherto ?
I will offer unto thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will ever love thee, fear thee, praise thee, and trust in thee ; my song shall be of thee in the night season, and in the day time I will be speaking of thy wondrous works, thy most merciful and liberal arme ; I will make thee my delight in the house of my pilgrimage, and I shall alwayes with all my strength, with all my heart, and with all my soul ascribe unto thee all glory, wisdom, majesty, dominion, and honour this day and for evermore. AMEN.

HENRY VAUGHAN (1622-95).

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT.

JOHN WESLEY AND FREE CATHOLICISM.

BY THE REV. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.*

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed ?"—Acts xix. 2.

HERE is the supreme test of every creed.
A belief may be true, and we may give it the assent of our mind, and yet it will remain dead to us unless the vital essence enshrined in it is dissolved as a dogma to glow and burn as a life. A creed, though it be as broad and comprehensive and

* Preached in the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, on Sunday, July 18, 1915, on the occasion of the meeting of the Wesleyan Conference in the City.

catholic as the word Christianity, is but a wisdom of this world and a form of words unless we have so vitally embraced and assimilated it that it has become a demonstration of the spirit with power. On the other hand, a creed, though it be as hard and narrow as the most forbidding Calvinism, becomes a gospel of redemption when the soul of man has seized upon its vital witness and kindled with the core of fire that resides in it.

Man can say, with meaning, few things more tremendous than the simple words, "I believe." All the passion of love, all the intensity of prayer, all the heroism of action, all the uttermost self-committal of the entire personality thrill in the driest dogma that ever man framed. There is not one clause in all the creeds of Christendom, however obsolete, that is not, at least, the grey ash of what once was a blazing fire of conviction. Even to-day every one of the great doctrines of the Church is not a cold deposit, but a high explosive, which, if we but touch it aright, will be seen to be the receptacle of immeasurable power. In it are concentrated unimagined energies of human trust and conviction. Innumerable forces of faith are there packed away waiting to be released. Thought brought them together, thought can loosen them again. In the form of sound words are stored motives, judgments, values, experience; that once enlightened the minds and inspired the hearts of living saints. A mere theological phrase has been the battle-cry of crusading thousands, the last words on the dying lips of martyrs, the victorious protest outliving the flame of the stake and the roaring of the arena. "Credo" is not a mere intellectual assent, it is the affirmation and enthusiasm of our complete manhood.

When Paul came to Ephesus and found a group of people already instructed in Christianity, he asked them the question, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?"

Apollos, who had taught them, was a man of eloquence and culture. He was even fervent in spirit. He had carefully taught the things concerning Jesus, yet when Priscilla and Aquila heard him they were conscious that he lacked something, some secret of power. They had come under the influence of Paul, and they felt something wanting in the message of Apollos. It was correct, but it was not enthusiastic. It enlightened, but it did not convert. His disciples obtained a new insight into the Scriptures, but no vital power, no fresh experience, no outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Their theology may have been adequate, but their religion was too lifeless and loveless. Their baptism was of John, a repentance which was a repudiation of error and a negative abstinence from evil, but it was not the baptism of Christ, a joyous transfiguration of the soul, a repentance that was a redemption unto a new life, the assimilation of the grace of a sanctifying holiness, a new birth into the radiant sunlit atmosphere of eternal life.

And when Paul came he at once felt as by instinct that something was amiss. He pierced to the secret of their poverty in that one question, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" And they answered quite simply and innocently, "Nay, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost" or "whether the Holy Ghost was given." Thereupon they are baptised into the name of the Lord Jesus, and as Paul laid his hands upon them a new current of life streams into them; they are swept up by a wave of uncontrollable enthusiasm, and, like the men at Pentecost, they speak with tongues and prophesy. I am not concerned now to consider the mere psychology of such a revivalist experience. The fact of it—and the fact of it as a resultant and effect of real belief—is what I wish to bring before you. There are, of course, degrees of intensity in belief, and there are degrees in the consequent experience; but it is as true to-day as it was in apostolic age, as true as it has been in every great age of faith ever since, that living, whole-hearted belief is accompanied by a felt, inward, spiritual experience that is an accession of power. It is not a mere clarification of the intellect, it is an endowment, a gift of the more abundant life of Christ—a faith that renews, revives, and brings forth the fruit of the spirit.

That was what John Wesley did for England. He rekindled the religious consciousness of his time; and we remember it here to-day in the context of the Wesleyan Conference, with reverence for his memory and with gratitude to God. John Wesley was no vulgar revivalist of the type too common in our day. He was a fellow of Lincoln College, a scholar of Christ Church, a gentleman, and a Christian. He distrusted mere rhetoric and emotionalism. No one warned his hearers more seriously than he against the perils of mere enthusiasm. His language was chaste, and refined, simple, but extraordinarily powerful. His sermons are still full of refreshment and inspiration. He was a man of broad charity and liberal toleration—broader and more liberal, I think, than many, if not, indeed most—of those who call themselves after his name. He came upon a time when religion was frost-bound in respectability and formalism—an age which Mark Pattison described as "destitute of depth or earnestness; an age whose poetry was without romance, whose philosophy was without insight, and whose public men were without character" ('Essays and Reviews,' p. 252, 2nd edit.). By his gloriously evangelical ministry Wesley made this desert blossom as the rose. His field-preaching through the world, which he claimed to be his parish as St. Francis claimed it to be his cell, was repugnant to the dignitaries of the establishment. Once he came face to face with Bishop Butler, and the good bishop with grave episcopal rebuke, said, "Sir, this pretending to extraordinary revelation and gifts of the Holy Ghost is a horrid thing—a very horrid thing." And Wesley himself would, to a large extent, have agreed; for certainly there was no pretence about him, and he profoundly distrusted the baser sort of excitement. In a sermon on this subject Wesley says, "Beware you are not a fiery, persecuting enthusiast. Do not imagine that God has called you...to destroy men's lives and not to save them. Never dream of forcing men into the ways of God. Think yourself and let others think....Beware you do not run with the common herd of enthusiasts, fancying you are a Christian when you are not. Presume not to assume that venerable name...unless you have the mind which was in Christ and walk as He also walked. Beware you do not fall into the second sort of enthusiasm, fancying you have those gifts from God which you have not. Trust not in visions or dreams, in sudden impressions or strong impulses....Do not lightly take the name of God in your mouth: do not talk of the will of God on every trifling occasion. But let your words as well as your actions be all tempered with reverence and godly fear. Beware, lastly, of imagining you shall obtain the end without using the means....Use every mean which either reason or Scripture recommends....Thus expect a daily growth in that pure and holy religion which the world always did and always will call enthusiasm, but which...is...righteousness and peace; a fountain of living water springing up into everlasting life."

That is John Wesley in the beautiful reticence and power of his own diction. But the effect of it was none the less electrifying. Men fell down on the ground convulsed with contrition and self-abasement. Yes, the Holy Ghost came upon them. He had this power because his belief was not a mere mental assent, but the inward, evangelical experience of God in his heart. And ours must be, in its quality and essence, such a belief if our religion is to be of any worth. No rationalism, whether it be orthodox or heterodox, can save us. No Unitarianism or Trinitarianism can touch us into life. No Christology, however correct, can redeem us. Only Christ Himself—"the burning cataracts of Christ"—cleansing and purging our evil, and making pure the heart that sees God and glorifies Him and enjoys Him for ever—God in Christ reconciling the world to Himself. That belief is not a mere perception by the restless intelligence of man which leaves him coldly convinced but emotionally unaffected and spiritually unchanged; it is the glad self-abandonment and offering of our souls in love to Christ for life, for death, for eternity. It is a great inward liberation from the tyrannous egotism of the self. It is our emancipation and redemption in Him—neither circumcision or uncircumcision, neither orthodoxy nor heterodoxy, but a new creation.

That is what real Christian belief means could we, by God's grace, attain unto it. It means the loosening of the floods of life in our inward man, fertilising its sterile aridity. It means access, not merely of new thought, but of new power to will and to do. It means a glorifying joy of sudden harmony like a burst of angels' song. It is the glowing of the whole personality—thought, will, and feeling—in the sunlight of a new world. It is something strange and incredibly splendid received from on high, an enrichment, an increment, a transfiguration of being. We pass not merely from darkness into light, but from coldness into warmth, from death into life. Springs bubble in our desert places, and the barren land becomes bright with blossom, green with foliage, and golden with fruit.

This life is a life baptised and dedicated into the name of the Lord Jesus. It is not an influence, a moral refinement, or mere "spirituality." It is sovereignty and lordship; it is in and through a personality who is the head of a fellowship and communion of personalities through whom the Holy Spirit still operates. The work of Apollos, the learned man, eloquent and instructed, is but preparatory. The work of Christ and His Holy Catholic Church is complete salvation—the making of sane, healthy, holy souls in love with Christ, and bound through that love to God Who lives in Him, and henceforth lives and moves and has His being in us.

That Church may, through our prayers and labours, come to full expression and power here in the Old Meeting. Here, as elsewhere, we may realise the ideal of "one flock, one shepherd." Here we may realise it under the exacting conditions of true liberty, for where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty. Let us cry: "Thou Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by Thy name, leave us not." All the truth that was ever enshrined in ancient dogma may become life and power in us.

It was not any modern Free Catholic but Wesley himself who said what we may surely repeat for ourselves without arrogance or presumption. "There is no other religious society under heaven which requires nothing of men in order to their admission into it but a desire to save their souls. Look all around you; you cannot be admitted into the Church, or Society of the Presbyterians, Anabaptists, Quakers, or any others, unless you hold the same opinion, and adhere to same mode of worship. The Methodists [I would say the Free Catholics] alone do not insist on your holding this or that opinion, but they think and let think. Neither do they impose any particular mode of worship; but you may continue to worship in your former manner, be it what it may. Now I do not know any other religious society, either ancient or modern, wherein such liberty of conscience is now allowed, or has been allowed since the days of the Apostles. Here is our glorying and a glorying peculiar to us. What Society shares it with us?" (Overton's 'John Wesley,' p. 211). Such was Wesley's boast. May it be worthily and humbly ours. That Church appeals to us today. It challenges our idealism, our sacrifice. In the midst of the gloom and the horror of a world gone mad its Cross burns as a beacon. Will you offer yourself to it, cleave to it, live for it, die for it? Will you give the wealth of your substance to adorn it as the Bride of Love? Will you consecrate the youth and glory of your passion to it? Nothing else in earth or heaven can ever, ever appeal to you or claim you like this. It rings its cry of a celestial chivalry through all the shouts of war. It alone can justify our martial earthly ardour, sanctify our patriotism, and turn saints into soldiers, and soldiers into saints again. It alone can make us confess, even in defeat and depression, as well as in the hour of ultimate victory—The best of all is, God is with us! The Best of all is, God is with us.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

NATIONAL ORGANISATION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you allow me to thank the Rev. H. H. Johnson for his report of the Swanwick meetings, and to express my sympathy with his feeling of thankfulness that the temper of the nation at large is very different from that of the Swanwick Summer School. One thing seems absolutely certain, and that is, that, if we are to escape having to adopt Prussian ways, we must win the present war and secure the terms announced by Mr. Asquith in his Guildhall speech. We shall never again allow ourselves to be caught in the same condition as we were last August, bound to fight on the Continent and without an adequate army. If we do not win now, we shall in future train every man for military service. It will be the same in our colonies, and those who do not like the prospect had better go and live in the United States, where I wish them joy of their environment. On the other hand, if we do win now, we shall certainly not be Prussianised because, in order to win, we have resorted to temporary conscription or some other form of universal national service. The United States were not Prussianised by resorting to conscription in order to finish their Civil War. When it was over the industrial system reasserted its full power, and that same system, with all its good and all its evil, would soon be re-established here if allowed the chance. Pacifists, of all people, ought to be anxious that we should win this war and strain every energy towards organising the full force of the nation for the purpose of bringing the war to a successful close. Then, and then only, can we hope for disarmament and lasting peace.

There are many advantages attaching to the voluntary system on which we have hitherto relied, and we have probably reaped them to the full. It is time also to consider the disadvantages. What of the feeling of the men who have made great sacrifices to enlist towards the men who are now at home profiting by the absence of rivals? Are we not witnessing the formation of one of the deepest gulfs that ever divided a nation? Nor does this apply only to military service. The South Wales colliers want the Government to nationalise the coal mines. Then they would work as well in the mines as their brothers are fighting in the trenches. Why is this not done? An old proverb tells us it is lawful to learn from an enemy, and I think we need only feel admiration for the way in which Germany has organised her full strength and acts as one body. We can imitate her in what is good without stooping to copy her crimes. Surely, we need not be afraid of sacrificing our high ideals of freedom and national character by adopting the best means to bring us through this awful struggle! If we are afraid of this we can have little confidence in the permanent worth of such ideals. May it not, indeed, be one great hope for the future that, out of efficient national organisation for war now, we may win something better for future peace than the unrestricted industrial system which in its essence is and always must be a form of civil strife.—Yours, &c.

H. SHAEN SOLLY.

Parkstone, July 20, 1915.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE BOOK OF FRANCE.

The Book of France. Edited by Winifred Stephens. London: Macmillan & Co., 5s. net.

MANY people will buy this book as an act of friendship and charity, for the proceeds of its sale will go to the French Parliamentary Committees Fund for the Relief of the Invaded Departments. It is, however, something much better than a pleasant device for extracting money from our pockets. The purchaser will be anxious to give it a place on his shelves instead of consigning it to the handsome neglect of the drawing-room table. We cannot remember any other literary adventure quite like it, in which the great writers of one nation act as the servants and translators of the other. Here we have Anatole France translated by H. G. Wells, Remy de Gourmont translated by Thomas Hardy, Pierre Loti translated by Sir Sidney Colvin, Maurice Barrès translated by Henry James, and André Gide translated by Edmond Gosse, to mention only a few of the best-known among the authors. Madame Mary Duclaux, English by birth and French by adoption, who has already built many a golden bridge of sympathy between the two nations, is the only member of this noble band who speaks to us in both languages. The prologue is by Henry James, curiously involved as usual, and the Envoi by Rudyard Kipling. All the essays hover about the subject of the war. They are thumb-nail sketches of scenes of sorrow or desolation which can never be forgotten, or portraits of men and women whose courage and nobility seem to rob even the hideous blasphemy of war of its horror. Among them we may choose for special praise 'La Basilique-Fantôme—The Ghost of a Cathedral,' by Pierre Loti. The desecration of Rheims is the theme above all others for the subtle genius of the author of 'Le livre de la pitié et de la mort.' But it is as an experiment in literary co-partnership that the book is most significant, for it comes to us as the harbinger of a new fertility in thought and imagination when the alliance in arms has blossomed into a firm friendship of the spirit. Of the form of the book we need only say that the publisher has made it worthy of its contents. French artists have also co-operated in a series of striking illustrations. It is sent forth, in the words of the editor's preface, in the hope "that in those times of peace to which we all look forward this book may live as the memorial of an episode in the greatest combat fought for light and liberty against darkness and oppression."

PROF. BERGSON ON THE WAR.

The Meaning of the War. By Henri Bergson. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1s. net.

THE admirable translation of Prof. Bergson's discourse as President of the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, which appeared in The Hibbert Journal for April, has been re-issued in a more permanent form, though we regret to say, without any indication to the unwary purchaser of new books that it has ever seen the light before. In its precision of statement and its clear insight into the radical difference between the cause of Germany and that of the Allies, it is one of the most suggestive contributions to thought which the war has produced. Anyone who takes the trouble to make himself master of Prof. Bergson's contrast between the mechanisation of spirit and the spiritualisation of matter will find himself in possession of a key which unlocks many knotty problems of history and politics. He will also be saved from the snare of much profitless rhetoric which is content to discourse about the diplomatic reasons for the war without facing the crude elemental facts. Prof. Bergson sees, for instance, that Germany is not simply the victim of a false philosophy or a theory about the superman. "Many persons," he writes, "have explained the aberrations of German policy as due to that theory. For my part I see in it nothing more than a philosophy doomed to translate into ideas what was, in its essence, insatiable ambition and will perverted by pride. The doctrine is an effect rather than a cause, and should the day come when Germany, conscious of her moral humiliation shall say to excuse herself, that she had trusted herself too much to certain theories, that an error of judgment is not a crime, it will then be necessary to remind her that her philosophy was simply a translation into intellectual terms of her brutality, her appetites, and her vices." A little later on Prof. Bergson makes it clear that the present conflict is not a dispute between two nations which can be localised and regulated. It sprang out of the unbridled lust of dominion, and for this reason Germany has thrown over every form of restraint, all consideration for the innocent and the weak. She has simply annexed the vast mechanism of industry, every discovery of science, all the inventions of human skill in order to increase her military power. "What would happen," he asks, "if the mechanical forces, which science had brought to a state of readiness for the service of man, should themselves take possession of man in order to make his nature material as their own? What kind of a world would it be if this mechanism should seize the human race entire, and if the peoples, instead of raising themselves to a richer and more harmonious diversity, as persons may do, were to fall into the uniformity of things?" These are questions which every wise man must put to himself. We have been plunged into this terrible conflict because we have not asked them seriously enough in the past, but have allowed ourselves to be dazzled by the increase of wealth and the mechanical contrivances which minister to our pleasure. When Germany, in a mood of repentance and bitter disillusion, comes to see that she has been sacrificing life itself and all that makes life good to a dream of material dominion, she too may save her soul alive.

LAST PAGES FROM A JOURNAL, WITH OTHER PAPERS. By Mark Rutherford. Oxford University Press, 4s. 6d. net.

THIS volume owes its publication to the pious care which gathers up the fragments from the note-books and unpublished manuscripts of a dead author. Perhaps there is little here which Mark Rutherford would have collected himself, but there is much which admirers of his books will find good and profitable, especially for the revealing light thrown upon his own temper and convictions. First and last it is the element of spiritual autobiography in Mark Rutherford which interests us most. The contents consist of a group of literary essays, a few short stories, and a number of jottings from his note-books. If it be said here is a book which the world is too busy to notice, it can, at least, plead in its own justification that it has upon it the marks of a master-hand. One of the most interesting of the essays contains a sketch of George Eliot in the days when Mark Rutherford read proofs to her in a dark room at the end of a long passage at John Chapman's house, 142, Strand. It is written in a vein of gracious reminiscence, and he gently waves aside the temptation to criticise or pass final literary judgments. "There is too much belittlement of genius—often with profane levity. It is an easy trick, the meanest soul can do it.... We need to be taught to admire to surrender ourselves to admiration.... There is more good in the 'Mill on the Floss' than can be exhausted in half-a-dozen readings, and most of us will be better occupied in appreciating it with all our hearts and souls than in balancing against it imaginary blemishes discovered by imperfect study." Spenser, Dr. Johnson, Shelley's Birthplace, and The Scottish Journal of Dorothy Wordsworth are among the subjects of the other complete essays. But many readers will be attracted even more by the short sayings, what the French call Pensées, many of them singularly provocative of thought, and we cannot do better than whet the appetite by setting down a few of them at random:—"The reason why people so often disagree in discussion is that they say what they do not think. The things we think are not those which cause differences." "Is there anything in the predestination of Calvinism more awful than that of the oracle in 'Oedipus Rex'? Why should Calvinism be the subject of vulgar cursing by the cultured, who have nothing to say against Sophocles?" "The practice of self-denial is good; it may be learnt. More difficult than self-denial is enjoyment, rejoicing in that which ought to delight us. This, perhaps, may be partly learnt, but not without severest discipline." "Thank God! The Verstand has had its day, and a long day, and it has not brought us very far." "What does real love do for us? It teaches the discernment and adoration of human worth, despite its obscurity by the petty trifles of common life."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

27TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	4955	13	4
Mr. J. M. Kelley (second donation)	1	0	0
Miss H. Beard (monthly subscription for July and August)	0	10	0
Miss Lamb (third donation)	1	0	0
Collected by Miss Lawford	0	17	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (seventh donation)	20	0	0
Mr. Walter J. Clennell (Newchwang)	1	0	0
"Liverpooldian" (third donation)	50	0	0
Mr. R. D. Holt	10	0	0
Miss Rathbone (second donation)	4	0	0
Mrs. Roscoe (fourth donation)	10	0	0
E. M. B. and D. J.	2	2	0
Mrs. E. Wilkinson (second donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Barzillai Hingley (second donation)	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. Dendy (fourth donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Grundy, Sen. (third donation)	0	10	0
Nurse Copeman (third donation)	0	10	0
Mrs. Bourne	0	5	0
Mrs. Palmer (second donation)	0	10	0
Mrs. Cogan Conway	1	1	0
Miss F. M. Minns (third donation)	0	2	6
Miss Frances Marsh	0	5	0
Mrs. J. A. Gotch (second donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Kenrick (third donation)	15	0	0
"A Friend, Oxford" (third donation)	10	10	0
H. M. W.	0	5	0
Hyde Chapel Belgian Fund	5	0	0
The Misses Howard Clark, Adelaide, per Hyde Chapel	1	0	0
Miss F. Booth Scott (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Miss E. Higginson (second donation)	1	0	0
In Memoriam James N. Wilson	1	0	0
Mrs. J. Worsley Austin (third donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Harris (fourth donation)	2	2	0
Miss Harris (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Ladies' Society at Dunham Road, Altrincham	10	0	0
	£5,105	16	10

Parcels have been received from:— Mr. J. Argyle; Acton Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. D. B. Sceats); Miss Spencer; Miss Margaret Ashton; Mrs. Wallis and Miss Mengens; Mrs. Marnham; The Princess Club, Bermondsey; Miss F. A. Short; Old Meeting Working Party, Edgbaston (per Mrs. Lloyd-Thomas); Mrs. Carter; Mrs. J. H. Green; Mr. J. M. Kelley; the Misses E. B. and M. G. Drewry; New Meeting Sewing Society, Kidderminster (per Miss Jane Badland); Octagon Helpers' League (per Miss Finch); Dr. Krohn; Miss Dorothy Jones; Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, Women's League (per Mrs. J. Worsley Austin); Mrs. Barton Worthington; A Member of Portland Street, Southport, Unitarian Church (per Mrs. Harris); W. B.; South Kensington Branch Women's Suffrage Society (per Mrs. Felkin); Anon.; Mrs. Geo. Webb; The Misses Wetherman; Miss Jane E. Brown; Mrs. Entwistle and the Messrs. Entwistle.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

OXFORD SUMMER MEETING, 1915.

WE desire to draw the attention of our readers to the programme issued by the Oxford University Extension Delegacy for their Summer Meeting to be held next month in Oxford.

It was not, we learn, without anxious consideration that the delegates decided to adhere to an arrangement announced before the outbreak of war, but in view of the earnest appeal made to educationists by the late President of the Board of Education, and of representations from other quarters they decided to "carry on."

They decided, moreover, to adhere to the subject already announced, namely, the 'Genius of Ancient Greece and its Influence upon the Modern World.' We believe that they have decided wisely. To many the study of the past will come as a welcome relief from the anxieties of the present, and we believe that it will bring "a renewed power of realising, in and below the present storm and havoc, the abiding issues of life that underlie and survive them."

The Inaugural Lecture will be delivered on Friday, July 30, by the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, and he will be followed by a very distinguished staff of lecturers, including the Master of University College (Dr. R. W. Macan), the Rector of Exeter College (Mr. L. R. Farnell), the Regius Professor of Greek (Prof. Gilbert Murray), the Regius Professor of Medicine (Sir W. Osler), Prof. Baldwin Brown, Prof. P. Gardner, Mr. J. A. R. Marriott, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, the Rev. G. S. Richards, the Rev. W. Temple, Dr. Buchanan Gray, Principal Selbie, the Rev. C. C. Simpson, the Rev. H. Gow, Dr. J. Vernon Bartlet, the Dean of St. Paul's, Prof. John Cox, and many others.

The needs of the immediate present and future have not, however, been neglected, and a very important feature is a Summer School for Social Workers within the general programme. A careful scheme of study has been drawn up under the general title, 'Social Work in War-Time and After.' The course will consist of lectures, organised discussions, and a study-class, under the experienced direction of the Warden of Toynbee Hall (Mr. J. St. G. Heath).

The introductory lecture of this section will be given by the Right Hon. Herbert Samuel, Postmaster-General and late President of the Local Government Board. The Provost of Oriel College (the Rev. L. R. Phelps), will deal with 'Lessons of Emergency Relief,' Mr. A. L. Smith with 'War and National Education,' Sir George Newman with 'The Town and the Child,' Miss Violet Markham with 'Unemployed Women,' Mr. J. C. Pringle (Secretary to the C.O.S.), with 'The Place of Charity during the War,' and Mr. F. G. D'Aeth with 'The Organisation of Social Work after the War.' Mrs. Atlee will lecture on 'Discharged Soldiers and Sailors,' and Mr. Heath on 'After Care Committees and the Problem of Adolescence.'

Among special preachers at the University Church appear the names of the Bishops of Oxford, Winchester, and Lincoln, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Rev. W. Temple, and the Rev. D. H. S. Cranage. At the chapel of Manchester College the preachers will be Dr. Jacks, Prof. G. Dawes Hicks, Dr. Hargrove, and the Rev. H. Gow. All the lectures, with the exception of those arranged by Manchester and Mansfield Colleges, will take place at Christ Church, which has been kindly lent for the occasion by the authorities. It will form a beautiful setting for the course of study. There will, of course, be a notable absence of foreigners, who have formed so large a feature of these gatherings of late years, but under the circumstances the authorities consider that the application for tickets is being well maintained.

BELGIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY.

ON July 21st the Belgians, exiled in London, celebrated the eighty-fifth anniversary of their independence. I was fortunate in being present at the Pontifical High Mass held at Westminster Cathedral, when 6,000 Belgians met together in a common act of faith. It was an impressive sight. As I walked up the aisle to my seat every inch of ground seemed occupied, every gallery packed with men and women, crowded together. There were a few rows of seats still empty, and soon a dolorous procession of nurses and maimed and halting men slowly made their way to these seats—they were the men whose bodies have been broken in the war and who will never again be able to live as other men. Then came the Princesses of Belgium—Princess Napoleon and the Duchess of Vendôme—followed by the Belgian Minister and representatives of the Diplomatic Corps, and soon after they had taken their places came the clerical processions. First the Auxiliary Bishop to Cardinal Mercier, with the Dean of Dixmude, and, after an interval, the gorgeous scarlets and purples of Cardinal Bourne's following.

Then began the music of the Mass, exquisitely sung by the boys, with just a hint of the organ from time to time. The sermon was in French, and was preached by a Belgian Military Chaplain from the Front. He told us that in the churches of La Panne, Ypres, Poperinghe, throngs of soldiers were gathered under roofs broken by shell fire, yet all with the same spirit that animated us also, the love of liberty. That liberty, he said, was for the moment hidden like a seed in the ground, only to arise later on as a fair and strong plant. The new liberty will be of the soul, and Belgium will return to her own with full freedom to stand alone, side by side with her warm friends and loyal allies, England and France.

The music was mostly by Belgian composers, and very beautiful. At the end the strains of the 'Brabançonne' pealed through the Cathedral, and was an appropriate finish to a wonderful service.

R. A.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Dover.—The Late Mr. G. W. Chitty.—We regret to record the death of Mr. George W. Chitty, the eldest partner of the well-known Dover firm of millers, Messrs. G. W. Chitty & Co., and for many years a generous supporter of Adrian St. Chapel, Dover. Mr. Chitty was born at Deal on Dec. 1, 1842, and was educated at Deal College and later in France and Germany. He was one of the party of British millers who, in August, 1877, paid a visit to the Vienna International Corn and Machinery Exhibition. The party travelled by river from Vienna to Budapest, whose mill owners very generously allowed the party to inspect a number of their mills. The result of this visit was the installation at the Dover mills of the first set of rollers introduced into that part of England, the roller system, which has since become universal, being then scarcely known outside Hungary, whose flours were the only high-grade ones known to the world. Mr. Chitty was deeply interested in all schemes for social betterment, and numerous hospitals, orphanages and other philanthropic institutions owed much to his kind help. He was ever solicitous for the welfare of his employees and many years ago inaugurated a profit-sharing system which is still in force at the mills. In 1873 he married Miss Ellen Briggs, of Capel, having four sons, one of whom, Mr. Wilfred Chitty, is engaged in the milling business, while Mr. Cyril Chitty is an artist, who this year has three pictures in the Royal Academy, and the third son, Hubert, is a surgeon in the R.A.M.C. on H. M. Hospital ship "Rewa." It may be recalled that Mr. Chitty was a former president of the Provincial Assembly, and rendered valuable services in that capacity, and in numerous other ways to the Unitarian cause. The funeral took place at the Golder's Green Crematorium, the service being conducted by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.

Dowlais.—The Rev. D. Cellan Evans conducted the evening service on Sunday July 18. This being the first service since Mr. Evans has undertaken the joint Pastorate of Merthyr and Dowlais, the Merthyr Chapel was closed for the evening service, and the majority of the congregation attended at Dowlais Chapel. The service, which was conducted partly in English and partly in Welsh, was entered into heartily by the whole congregation.

Hinckley.—The congregation of the Great Meeting mourns the loss of a faithful friend in the death of Mr. James Norton at the age of 52. He had been Chapel Warden and Caretaker for 28 years, and was very popular with the members of the congregation and the children of the Sunday School. The interment took place on the 20th inst., after a memorial service in the Chapel conducted by the Rev. H. H. C. Jones which was largely attended.

Lampeter.—Mr. Oswald Williams, the minister-elect of the Lampeter and Caeronen Unitarian Churches, has just obtained his B.A. degree (Welsh University), with First Class Honours in Welsh. Mr. Williams will commence his duties on the second Sunday in August.

London: Dingley Place Mission.—The thirty-sixth Annual Flower Show was held on Tuesday, July 13, at 4 p.m. 199 plants were sent in by 66 competitors. Mr. R. Asquith Wooding took the chair at the evening meeting, when Miss Mildred Martineau distributed the prizes. An address was given by Dr. J. Lionel Tayler. Music was supplied by Miss V. G. Withall and Mr. A. T. Young. Recitations by Miss E. Stroulger. A fine selection of plants was presented by Mr. T. B. Taylor of Highgate for those gaining honourable mention.

Plymouth.—At the Annual Meeting of the Postal Service Committee interesting letters were read from recipients of Unitarian literature, expressing thanks for the pamphlets sent out month by month. The list of names is now being revised. We should be glad to send a monthly pamphlet to any isolated Unitarian or other friend in the West of England for the ensuing year. Address, Mrs. A. Dufton, 1, Earls-acre, Plymouth. The Sunday School Anniversary Services were held on July 11.

Sheffield. The late Mr. Joseph Shaw Beckett.—The death took place, on the 9th inst., at his residence in Bournemouth, of Mr. Joseph S. Beckett, formerly senior partner in the old-established Sheffield firm of Alfred Beckett & Sons, Ltd., steel manufacturers and toolmakers. Mr. Beckett retired from business life in 1906, and with his sister, Miss Alice Beckett, removed to Bournemouth. He himself was unmarried. He was the head of an old and greatly respected Sheffield family, who for generations have been connected with the Upper Chapel there, and have ever been staunch and valued supporters of the Unitarian cause. His health failed in recent years, but his death came unexpectedly and without warning. He was in his 75th year. Although he never took any part in public affairs, Mr. Beckett was one of the best known and respected men in the city of Sheffield, and was a distinct personality in trading and social circles. He was for many years a member of the Royal Infirmary Board, and also of the Cutlers' Company. He was a traveller and linguist, a sportsman, and a great lover of dogs.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel.—The first breach in the ranks of the young men who have gone to the front from families belonging to the Chapel occurred last week, when the sad news came of the death in Flanders, from wounds received, of 2nd Lieut. Leslie F. Hobson, younger son of Alderman A. J. Hobson, J.P. At morning service last Sunday special reference was made to the fact by Rev. C. J. Street, who preached an appropriate sermon on 'Life's Larger Outlook.' He said that, when the nation's call to service came, Leslie Hobson, only 19 years of age, was one of the first to respond. In his short career in the New Army, he had won the warm respect of the men under his charge and the high esteem of his superior officers. "O, rest in the Lord" was sung by Miss L. Lynes, and Chopin's Funeral March was played by the deputy organist, Mr. B. Jaques, while the congregation reverently stood.

Stockton-on-Tees.—A remarkable series of week-evening Open Air Meetings has been held this spring and summer in the High Street. Rev. Arthur Scruton has delivered each week a stirring address upon rational religion and its connection with everyday life and with the war. His vigorous and original methods of dealing with questions of vital interest at the present time have drawn an increasingly large crowd each week—a crowd composed principally of the thinking workers of the town. These men have not been afraid to question the speaker at the close of each meeting. Some have even ventured inside the church on Sundays where they have met with a warm welcome and found such a congenial atmosphere that later visits have usually confirmed the doubter into a warm supporter, and enabled him to find in it his spiritual home.

Wellington, New Zealand.—The Rev. C. Ernest Hale has just completed the first year of his ministry at the Unitarian Free Church. In the calendar for June he publishes the following letter to the members of the congregation:—"On Sunday, June 27, I shall have completed twelve months' ministry amongst you. Since I have been in Wellington I have made many experiments, experiments that, I suppose, are made by most men when they first step 'out into the open.' The experience I have gained has produced in me a deep, and I trust, an abiding conviction. I am convinced more than ever to-day that my true work is to build up the spiritual life. It has been most encouraging to see the response that there is for such a ministry. No one knows as does a Free Church minister the temptation that there is to forget what a pulpit exists for. I believe that our sacred duty as ministers is to preach to the tempted, the distressed, and those that thirst after higher things. And who is there who is not reached by such preaching? I have come to the definite conclusion that there are problems that must be solved by prophets other than ministers of religion. No one man can deal with everything, and we preachers will serve our day and generation best by being specialists in the things of the Spirit. With all my heart I return thanks for every kindness and inspiration I have received, and trust that in the days before us we may greatly extend the Kingdom of God."

this side of the Atlantic." A more appropriate memorial to those for whom the maple leaf was the symbol of nationality it would be difficult to devise, and the Over-Seas Club has decided to adopt the suggestion. A consignment of seeds has been sent for, and these will be planted on all Canadian tombs in Flanders and France where practicable. It is also proposed that an avenue of maple trees shall be planted at Langemaarke after the war.

BIRD LIFE IN THE TRENCHES.

In the summer number of Bird Notes and News a selection is published from the numerous notes on bird life sent home by soldiers at the front. In many of these the men speak with a pleasure we can readily understand of the delight with which they hear the larks, thrushes, and even nightingales singing with extraordinary unconcern in places where the sound of bursting shells and the rattle of the rifle is heard both day and night. It is, apparently, very difficult to frighten the birds away in spite of what some writers have told us about the deserted woodlands, and even during the terrific bombardment of Neuve Chapelle the heavenly notes of a lark could be heard at intervals pouring down from the summer sky. One soldier describes a blackbird's nest which was built in the body of a field-gun. "There are five eggs in the nest," he writes, "and the bird should start sitting soon, but I don't know how it can. An artilleryman told us that they did not fire for about four days, during which time the nest was built and three eggs laid. They have fired each of the three days since then and two more eggs have been laid." He said that last night when the bird came back to her nest they were standing to and getting the gun ready for action. The bird sat on a bough above and waited till they had finished. It hardly seems credible but the nest is there right enough."

THE NEXT WAR.

It is not a pleasant thought that when the wars between nations are ended, the war between man and the creeping things of the earth, mainly the insect, will still have to be fought out "to the finish." There is a rivalry going on between us and the Arthropod, as Sir Harry Johnston tells us in The Nineteenth Century, for the mastery of the planet, which may conceivably end in our extermination if we do not mobilise our resources with the utmost care, and revolutionise our system of education. The present alarming spread of germ-diseases is, indeed, largely the penalty which we have to pay for our incredible stupidity in the past in wantonly destroying those beautiful and faithful allies, the birds, and putting out of existence many a useful and harmless reptile that only lived to devour insects and ticks. Incidentally he refers to a valuable book entitled 'Insects and Man,' by Mr. C. A. Ealand, which gives a valuable summary and an accurate account of the causes and effects of insect-conveyed diseases, of the almost immeasurable damage done by insects, and of the supreme necessity for the whole human

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

CANADIAN GRAVES IN FRANCE.

Mr. Evelyn Wrench, secretary of the Over-Seas Club, recently received from the corresponding secretary of the Toronto Branch a letter containing an interesting suggestion in regard to the graves of Canadians who have fallen in France. "A few days ago, after a heavy wind," says the writer, whose letter is dated June 10, "I noticed a great fall of maple seeds lying on my lawn, and it occurred to me that if I picked them up, packed them in a small parcel, and sent them to you, with a request that through the Over-Seas Club Headquarters you might send them over to France and in due course have them planted round the graves, cemeteries, or roads leading to the cemeteries where so many of our Canadian soldiers lie buried, it would be a suitable tribute to their memory. If, as I hope, some seeds bear fruit and thrive, they will remain a lasting monument to those who have fallen from race to be enlisted in the "next war" against these disagreeable pests. All farmers, educationists, military authorities, officials in the Foreign and Colonial Offices, men and women seeking for employment in the tropics, members of Boards of Guardians and County Councils should all familiarise themselves with the facts set forth by Mr. Ealand if we are to save ourselves alive.

* * *

Few people probably know what an important part the ladybird plays in this battle between man and the insects. "There does not seem to be a 'bad' ladybird from man's point of view," says Sir Harry Johnston, "for the Coccinellidae have apparently come into existence for the purpose of attacking and exterminating the multiform caterpillars, scale-insects, aphids, beetlegrubs, and frog-hoppers which devour our food-crops, our fruit and foliage trees, our tobacco and our melons. Each precious plant or tree in this category seems to have its tutelary saint among the Coccinellidae, and one can imagine in the coming age of knowledge (the millenium which shall follow the present war) grateful cultivators erecting shrines and tablets in honour of this or that ladybird protector of their crops—St. Novius, St. Chilocercus, the blessed Cryptognatha, and the meritorious Hippodamia and Megilla... The genus Calosoma, which happens to be beautiful as well as right minded, is worthy of international recognition as the inveterate enemy of the Gipsy moth—that ghastly plague of the Eastern United States—destroyer of noble trees and apple orchards."

THE RELIGIOUS FUTURE OF INDIA.

We have received the first number of the Forerunner, a new monthly paper of unpretentious appearance, published in India, which has for its aim the development of religious feeling in that country, irrespective of creeds or sects, until it becomes the driving force in the national life. The necessity for carrying on a strenuous fight against the materialistic influences of modern times is being realised by many serious thinkers in the East, just as it is here, and the dangers of a too-rapid assimilation of Western industrial and political methods, together with the increasing scepticism in regard to the ancient faiths of the younger men, numbers of whom have received a European education, are not to be regarded lightly. The Forerunner seeks to aid in the building up of a new national ideal for India based upon the consciousness of God, and to this end it will seek to direct the discussion of religious and moral ideals with sympathy and discernment, giving prominence to such movements in the West as will be likely to help onwards this end. The first number contains an article on "The Hindu Ideal Home," which lays full emphasis upon the need for love expressing itself in service, and an interesting account of the religious practices at Shantiniketan, the delightful school for boys under the leadership of Sir Rabin-dranath Tagore, by Ajitkumar Chakrabarti. The paper can be obtained from the Warden, Kingsmead, Selly Oak, Birmingham.

THE INFLUENCE OF SERBIA ON ITALIAN ART.

The exhibition in London of the works of Ivan Meshtrovitch, the Southern Slav sculptor, who is being acclaimed the heroic interpreter of a persecuted race, has revealed to many people an aspect of the Serbian national genius which they had not previously taken into account. Yet the Serbians have always been jealous of their culture, and anxious to show that they were capable of contributing something to the general progress of the civilised world. They are great lovers of music, of the dance, of beauty in every shape and form; indeed, M. Miyatovitch, late Serbian Minister in London, speaking at a recent meeting on behalf of the Scottish Women's hospital work in his country, called them "the Irish of south-eastern Europe, with all the virtues and some of the weaknesses of the Irish people." One of the greatest architects in Europe, he pointed out, was Bramante, the builder of St. Peter's Church in Rome, but he learned his art from Julius Lorrane (Giulio Lorano), a Serbian born in Sivenico, in Dalmatia. The famous Venetian painter Schiavone, the intimate friend of Titian, was a Serbian, by name Andrea Medulic, born in Dalmatia. In Florence some of the finest statues and sculptures were the work of the great sculptor Giovanni Dalmata, whose real name was Ivan Drinkovic, again a Serbian from Dalmatia, and a long list could be given of the Serbians of the 17th and 18th centuries who obtained great fame as painters and sculptors in Italy and France.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, | MISS CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD. — "HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE." — COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position: Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET August. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author.

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

GREENGAGES for Preserving.—24 lbs. 8s., 12 lbs. 4s. 6d. Pershore Egg Plums, 24 lbs. 4s. 6d., 12 lbs. 2s. 9d. Carriage paid in England and Wales.—FRANK ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston, Herts.

GENUINE IRISH LINEN SALE! Checked Dusters, 24 in. square, ready hemmed, strong, durable, 4s. 6d. per dozen. Postage 4d. Sale Catalogue Free. Hundreds of bargains. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) WANTED, any kind.—Up to 6s. each pinned tooth on vulcanite; 10s. 6d. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Cash or offers unequalled elsewhere by return of post. Goods returned post free if necessary.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester (opposite Lewis's). Telephone 5030 City. Mention INQUIRER.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN ILEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, July 24, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3813.
NEW SERIES, No. 916.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

Now Ready for August.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JONAH:—

The Prophecy of Jonah.
The Purpose of the Story.
The Call and the Refusal.
The Story of the Storm and the Fish.
The Angry Prophet.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Douglas W. Robson, B.D.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—THE BARREN FIG TREE.—THE GREAT SUPPER.—THE TOWER, AND THE WARRING KING.—THE LOST COIN.

Junior Department—Alice L. Colfox.

By THE WAY. Von Bernhardt on Popular Education.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAW-
RENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,
F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive
4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free
of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on
short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp., 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God.

New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp., 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges,
2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.

Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage,
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp., 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each, 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, August 1.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Dr. F. W. G. FOAT, M.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH. No Evening Service.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP; 7, Rev. W. R. CLARKE LEWIS.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W.—No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road.—Closed. Services resumed on September 5th.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNO-WETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road. Closed during August.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. J. W. GALE.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Mr. F. W. TURNER. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbeldon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, Litt.D.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30 Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45 and STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.)
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street.—No Services.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace.—Closed during August.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. HARMAN TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30.—Closed.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Prof. G. DAVES HICKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. J. W. LEE; 6.30, Rev. T. ANDERSON.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHELD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

CURREY.—At Windermere, Vermilion, Alberta, the wife of James Elliot Currey, of a son. (By cable.)

MARRIAGES.

HOLT-COPLAND.—On July 24th, at Edinburgh, by the Rev. Peter Holt, assisted by the Rev. Felix Holt, B.A. (father and brother of the bridegroom), the Rev. Raymond V. Holt, B.A., B.Litt., to Isabella Clark, daughter of Alexander Copland, formerly schoolmaster of Tyrie, Aberdeenshire.

RATTRAY-BROOKS.—On the 28th inst., at the Congregational Church Banbury, by the Rev. Charles Craddock, Minister of the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, Liverpool, Robert Fleming, third son of Mr. and Mrs. William Rattray, Monifieth, N.B., to Mary Curral Heygate, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. F. Brooks, Banbury.

DEATH.

ROSCOE.—On July 24th, in London, William Malin Roscoe, of Bircham, Newland, Glos., in his 58th year.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	371	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Manchester College, Oxford.—The New Hall	378
AFTER TWELVE MONTHS.	373	Nonconformity in Kendal	376	A Message to Our Defenders	379
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	374	The Bengali Poet and Seer	377	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	379
THE LESSON OF SOUTH WALES	374	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	380
SIR JOHN BOWRING AND THE LITERATURE OF THE SLAVS	375	Belgian Hospital Fund	378

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

In these days of magnificent effort we all like to deal with large figures. It will be gratifying to our readers to hear that up to the end of June 30,000 articles of clothing, bed and household linen, and 8,500 bandages had been sent out by our Fund to the Belgian hospitals. Of the clothing 9,500 articles were bought, nearly all during the first three months of the year, when the need was greatest, and the supply of clothes sent in not so plentiful. All the rest were given by private donors and by Working Parties organised by branches of the The Women's League and other societies. These figures do not include surgical instruments, drugs, and hospital utensils and appliances of every description which have been sent out in large quantities. It has been necessary to buy most of these things, but we have also had many generous and valuable gifts in kind in this department.

* * *

We are very grateful to two ladies, Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor, who have organised work for the Fund among girls' schools, both elementary and secondary. Since April they have sent one large box, and very often two, every week, full of useful articles made by the girls themselves in schools all over England. During the summer this source of supply is likely to fall off a little. May we suggest that work can still go on at home or in country lodgings. Amid the relaxation and enjoyment of the holidays no day ought to pass without some service of helpful kindness for the sufferers by the war.

* * *

In his speech on Wednesday, in moving the adjournment of the House of Commons till September 14, the Prime Minister adopted the line of argument which most sensible people expected him to take. He pointed out that the foolish and noisy campaign for a shorter adjournment was not really in the interests of national efficiency and the enlightenment of the public mind. Ministers have something else to do besides answering questions, some of them pertinent, others irrelevant, many of them foolish, in the House of Commons. They have to supervise the vast and intricate machinery of administration, and they have to devote themselves to careful study of proposals for new legislation. When the programme of one session is complete no public interest can be served by making a pretence of work. The best men would not attend when there is nothing useful to be done.

* * *

UNFORTUNATELY the rules of the House of Commons give ample opportunities to the captious critic or the man bent on self-advertisement. Questions are often asked because it is the only way in which certain people of small ability and great pretensions can call attention to themselves. But every question has to be answered, and there is in consequence an expenditure of time and energy in Parliament, and a strain of work in the great Departments of State, which must be held in check if the whole machinery of government by discussion is not to break down. It is clear that Mr. Asquith, with his unrivalled Parliamentary experience, feels that the demands which are made in this way are becoming unreasonable. The distinction is not sufficiently observed between mere inquisitiveness and a desire for information which is demanded in the public interest.

I think it may be interesting to the House [he said], to take by way of illustration the total number of questions since the commencement of the Session in November last up to and including Monday last, July 26, which have been addressed to my right hon. friend the Under-Secretary for War and myself, mainly, if not exclusively, in regard to matters relating to the war. My right hon. friend has in that time given oral answers to 1,522 questions, and I have given oral answers to 468 questions. My right hon. friend has given written answers to 249 questions, and I have given written answers to 51 questions. As the House knows that is a very inadequate presentation of what has actually taken place, because I suppose for every oral question which has been put, and for every oral answer which has been given—I do not want to exaggerate—there has been on an average one, two, and sometimes three supplementary questions inspired by the curiosity of the moment.

* * *

In the course of the same speech Mr. Asquith paid a tribute to the Press for the "assiduity, patriotism, self-restraint, and public spirit" with which it has discharged its duty since the outbreak of the war, "with one or two melancholy and notorious exceptions." It was clearly a sense of the injury done by the campaign of sinister criticism and belittlement carried on by these "notorious exceptions," which dictated his closing words; and they are intended to reach far beyond the walls of Parliament, to the conscience of the nation and the expectant hearts of our Allies.

Upon a review of the position to-day as compared with the position exactly a year ago, can there be a greater calumny of our own people both here and over the seas than to say that they have not risen to the height of a great occasion? I have said that there is no greater calumny; there is one greater still, and that is to suggest—it is a calumny not on ourselves, but upon our gallant Allies one and all—that they do not realise and appreciate to the full the contribution which we are making to the ultimate triumph of our common cause. It is in that spirit, I believe, that the House of Commons and the country at large is entering upon the second year of the war. Do not let us give any encouragement to the faint-hearted, still less to the backbiters who do what they can—I make no inquiry as to their motives or intentions—to dishearten our Allies and to encourage our enemies. Let us here in this House and in the country at large in the same spirit of unity and determination which for twelve months has inspired our combined efforts persist and persevere to the inevitable triumphant decision.

* * *

THERE is one question to which the public ought to give serious thought during the Parliamentary recess. We refer to the incidence of taxation. It has been announced already that there will be proposals for fresh taxation of a heavy and far-reaching kind in the next Budget. No man who attempts to understand the grave problems of national finance can wish it to be otherwise. But the question remains, who is to pay? Here we are on ground which is felt to be acutely controversial. It has been suggested already that there may be some lowering of the income-tax limit, and it is clear that this could not be done without making some demand upon wages. It is this suggestion which needs to be thoroughly explored. It cannot be waived aside as unreasonable or unjust with conventional phrases about taxing poverty. It has long been an anomaly that the clerk earning £200 per annum is subject to income tax, while the mechanic with £4 to £5 a week in wages escapes. As more and more of the wealth of the country passes into the hands of labour it must carry with it on any sound system of finance its liability to direct taxation; and the difficulty of collection ought no longer to stand in the way.

* * *

THE withdrawal of the Welsh Church (Postponement) Bill and the conciliatory temper in which it has been accepted has revealed the influence of the Coalition Government at its best. Larger considerations have prevailed over the instincts of party. It is acknowledged in the words of Lord Robert Cecil, who has shown himself a stout partisan for Establishment in the past, "that internal dissension at this time is a thing every patriotic man ought to avoid if he possibly can." Is it too much to hope that some of the effects of this desire to be fair and to avoid needless irritation will survive the war? Men who have looked into one another's minds and learned to respect one another's motives, are less likely to cultivate antagonism with the old bitterness. One of the indirect benefits of the Coalition may be to re-establish the reputation of Parliament as a school of good manners without blunting the edge of honourable disagreements or robbing us of the joy of combat.

* * *

WE cannot pretend to be indifferent to the attitude of the neutral countries. For many adequate reasons they may remain neutral in a military sense, bearing only indirectly their share of the world's sufferings. But on the moral issues involved the time has come to abandon a policy of silence and balanced judgments. It is, therefore, with great pleasure that we have read a manifesto signed by many of the most prominent men in cultivated circles in Spain: professors, composers, painters, sculptors, and authors.

We have no title to speak [they say], except that given by quiet lives devoted to the pure activities of the mind, but we feel that in order to serve our country by being honest and useful citizens to her we must be honest and useful citizens of the world, and so we are confident that we are doing our duty as Spaniards and as men, by declaring that we share with all our heart and soul in the conflict which is shaking the world to its foundations. We stand firm on the side of the Allies, inasmuch as they represent the ideals of liberty and justice, and therefore, their cause coincides with the highest political interests of the nation. Our conscience reproaches all actions which detract from the dignity of mankind and the respect which men owe to one another even in the fiercest moment of the struggle.

Most ardently do we hope that when peace comes the lesson may be turned to the honour and profit of all nations, and we trust that the triumph of the cause that we hold to be just will lead to the recognition of the essential part which the life of each nation, great or small, weak or strong, has played in the progress of mankind, will destroy the riot of egoism, domination, and devilish brutality which led to the catastrophe, and will lay the foundation of a new international fraternity in which force will be directed towards its true object—namely, the preservation of reason and justice.

A LETTER addressed to the Italian nation has been issued this week as an expression of comradeship on the part of a few among her British friends. It bears more than 150 signatures of eminent men and women who represent the large company of people diffused through the British Empire to whom Italy must always be a word which glows with sacred fire. The letter pays a tribute to the courage with which she made her decision "at a moment when the prospects of early victory seemed remote, and only the arduous and imperative necessity of the task were apparent," and concludes with a fine summary of the reasons which prompted her to throw herself into the struggle.

The Italian people is at war to liberate its own brethren from an old oppression, and to avert from the whole of Europe the threat of a new military domination. Italy has staked all that she has for the same principles of nationality, humanity, and public right that inspire our own endeavours in this war. We hope with all the earnestness in our hearts that her national aspirations will now be consummated, and we wish the heroic Italy of 1915 to know from our own lips that we feel towards her as our fathers felt towards the heroic Italy of the Risorgimento.

* * *

No literary man of our day has performed a nobler task for his country than Sir James Murray, of the Dictionary, who died at Oxford on Monday. It is a matter of deep regret that he did not live to see the end of his great undertaking. Johnson's Dictionary is still treasured by a few people for its personal qualities, its odd definitions, and its quaint terms of humour; but Sir James Murray had the unique distinction of compiling a dictionary that is really interesting. It is nothing less than a history of the English language, in its origin, its growth, its modification by great writers or popular custom, and its present use as a noble instrument of human intercourse. No visitor to the "Scriptorium" at Oxford could fail to be impressed by Sir James Murray's untiring industry, his gift for directing the work of others, and his affection for words. He was little known outside the circle of his friends and fellow-workers; but he has left his mark upon the life of his time. It would be hard to mention any man who has done more than he to organise the vast resources of modern scholarship for popular use. He set a standard of accuracy, and inculcated a spirit of reverence in all our dealings with language, at a time when our native tongue has suffered many things through careless handling or vulgar abuse.

AFTER TWELVE MONTHS.

THE present issue of the Inquirer completes a year of anxious toil during which we have tried to uphold the national cause without flinching, and to interpret its deeper issues in the light of our religious convictions. At the beginning of last August, in common with other organs of public opinion, we were faced with a critical decision. Amid the shining days of peace the curse of war fell suddenly upon us. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we found ourselves in the vast welter of a European struggle. Every other sound was lost in the boom of the guns and the tramp of armed men. What could it mean? How were those who had preached the message of brotherhood and good-will to act? There was no time for quiet investigation. Balanced judgments could win no victories, and the very thought of neutrality was an offence to the deepest instincts of duty. In the midst of this confusion one thing was plain. We must resist the German violation of Belgium. Here was a crime which we could neither allow nor condone without dishonour. For us, as for many others, this supplied the moral key to the whole situation. It was an instinct of rightness, which perhaps, at the moment, hardly grasped the larger meaning of the struggle, but we felt the strong prompting of conscience and we were content to follow it, however terrible the consequences might be.

For some weeks many of us had no clear vision beyond this fulfilment of a public obligation which good men must always esteem more highly than their own security. But having once taken this first step, which was right beyond all question, and bound our lives to the stern duties it involved, everything else has followed, and there have been no moods of hesitation or vain regret to weaken high resolve. As the issues of the war have widened to our view and the German conspiracy against the freedom and peace of other countries has been disclosed, the judgment which began with Belgium has been extended to other fields. The war in all its aspects has assumed the character of a moral crusade, and the Allies who are fighting side by side are conscious that in offering a stout resistance to insolent aggression, they are also defending the priceless heritage of a common civilisation. It has seemed to us that it is the special task of religion to help men to walk in this path of duty without waywardness or backsliding, with reverent trust in God and generous loyalty to one another and the common cause. And so we have tried to keep this flame of moral idealism burning brightly, leaving to others to pursue intricate problems of diplomacy, or to fulfil tasks of criticism for which we have little taste. If we have been obstinate in our avoidance of plaintive moralisings and refused to have any dealings with patriotism in a minor key, it is because we believe that strong and healthy affections are the best safeguard of virtue and heavenward vision is always better than dismal rebuke.

But any success we may have achieved in this mission of courage—apart from the deeper sources of guidance and help of which it is hardly fitting that we should speak—has been due to two causes. We have had the support of the life of the nation. Never before have we been so conscious of pride in our country and of our immeasurable debt to her bounty and her goodness. It has been a spectacle of awe and delight as we have watched her awaking to a new consciousness of her unity, laying aside the spirit of faction and dissent, and gathering into her ample reservoirs of power all that is strongest in intellect, keenest in vision, most tender and gracious in Christian sympathy and faith, for this supreme struggle of her fate. In every word which we have written during these twelve months of war we have felt that we must deserve the approval of this glorious Mistress. But we have also had encouragement of a more intimate and personal kind from our own readers. It is fitting that the messages which many of them have sent to us, so warm in their appreciation, so touching in their gratitude, should receive this public acknowledgement. It has been our constant desire to help men and women to face their duties with cheerfulness, to see the guiding hand of God in all private troubles and public anxieties, and to catch even now some far-off gleam of the victory which must be won by sacrifice. The knowledge that for some of them life has been a gladder and a braver thing because they are numbered among our readers, is the best of all incentives to go on in the path which national duty and Christian conviction have marked out so clearly for us.

For several months we have tried to combine the teaching and arguments of the editorial pen with a programme of action and a call to worship. The Inquirer never did a better thing than when it started the Belgian Hospital Fund. Week by week and month by month it has grown in the extent and the beneficence of its operations, till it has established its claims upon public confidence and the undying gratitude of the people whom it helps. By its means our readers are able to touch one of the sorest spots of the war and to turn their work and their money into the means of doing good just where it is most needed. The war has revealed in an unexpected way the immense resources of the womanhood of England. For us and for our readers the most remarkable woman whom it has discovered is Mrs. Bernard Allen. The Belgian Hospital Fund was the child of her imagination. She fanned it into life with her womanly sympathy. She has been the main-spring of all its activities, pleading for it with her voice and her pen, conducting the vast net-work of its business, making hosts of friends among the doctors and patients in the hospitals in France, writing charming letters to donors which make them feel that it is a privilege to give, hard at work contriving and organising from morning till night, and doing it all with a practical sympathy and a gaiety of heart, which are an unfailing source of admiration to her friends. In times of deep mental distress there is no remedy like that of doing good. In this gracious human service Mrs. Allen has been a leader and inspirer among us. While she has been curing wounds in the Belgian hospitals she has also been binding up stricken hearts at home and breathing into them fresh confidence in the goodness of life and the victories of love.

And this brings us to refer in a closing word to the quiet ministry of consolation, which has been carried on since the early days of the war in our column of "Good Thoughts for Evil Times." Here the great and good of all ages have spoken to us and called us away from transitory things to the worship of God and the vision of peace. Week by week they admit us into their fellowship, and open for us avenues of escape from our own infirmity into the hiding-places of power. We remember that many of these words, which haunt us in their spiritual beauty and ennoble us with their soaring faith, so deep in their knowledge of life, so quick with the sense of God, were written in days of tumult, when the fate of nations hung in the balance; and remembering this, we watch and pray for the same fruit of discipline in ourselves.

This backward glance over the effort of twelve months to impart to our national duty the full sanction of religion has given us no desire either to alter our policy or to revise our judgment. We must face the struggle which lies in front of us, however long it may last, with the same tenacity of purpose, with an equal devotion to works of help and loving-kindness, and with the faith and patience of hearts continually renewed by their communion with God. The time is one of danger. The future is dark with trouble. No human ingenuity can pierce the clouds which hang upon the horizon. But doubt and fear have no place in a conflict for freedom and right. "Set your faces like a flint," says Evangelist in the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' "you have all power in Heaven and Earth on your side."

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

CHURCHES. II.

WERE there but one alone
Wherein we might approach his Throne,
One only where we should accepted be,
As in the days of old
It was, when Solomon of gold
His Temple made; we then should see
A numerous Host approaching it,
Rejoicing in the Benefit:
The Queen of Sheba come
With all her glorious train,
The Pope from Rome,
The Kings beyond the main;

The wise men of the East from far,
As guided by a Star,
With Rev'rence would approach that Holy Ground,
At that sole Altar be adoring found.

* * *

But now we Churches have
In ev'ry Coast, which bounty gave Most freely to us; now they sprinkled stand

With so much Care and Love,
Tokens of Favor from above,
That men might come in ev'ry Land
To them with greater ease: lo, we Those blest Abodes neglected see:
As if our God were worse
Because his Love is more,
And doth disburse
Itself in greater store;
Nor can object with any face
The distance of the place;
Ungrateful we with slower haste do come
Unto his Temple, 'caus 'tis nearer home.

THOMAS TRAEHERNE (1636 ?-74).

As the heart worketh and willesh, such, and no other, is its prayer; all else is only form and fiction and empty beating of the air. If therefore the working desire of the heart is not habitually turned towards God, if this is not our spirit of prayer, we are necessarily in a state of prayer towards something else, that carries us from God. For this is the necessity of our nature; pray we must as sure as our heart is alive; and, therefore, when the state of our heart is not a spirit of prayer to God, we pray without ceasing to some or other part of the creation. The man whose heart habitually tends towards the riches, honours, powers, or pleasures of this life is in a continual state of prayer towards all these things. His spirit stands always bent towards them; they have his hope, his love, his faith, and are the many gods he worships: and though, when he is upon his knees, and uses forms of prayer, he directs them to the God of Heaven, yet these are in reality the God of his heart, and, in a sad sense of the words, he worships them in spirit and in truth. WILLIAM LAW.

A PRAYER WHEN THOU ART GOING INTO BED.

MOST gracious, and onely wise God!
to whom the light and the darkness are the same, whose dwellings are eternal, and in whose Kingdome there is no need of Candles, nor of the light of the Sunne;

look, I beseech thee, upon thy servant, who tarries in this place all night. And forasmuch as thou (out of thy tender love and compassion on thy Creatures) hast ordained this time for their repose and refreshing, that having past through the Cares and dangers of the day they might under the shadow of thy wings finde rest and security; keep me, I most humbly beseech thee, from the hours and the powers of darknesse; watch over me this night in thy Almighty providence, and scatter all the rebellions and devices of my Adversaries. Inlighten my soul, sanctifie my body, govern my affections, and guide my thoughts, that in the fastest closures of my eyelids my spirit may see thee, and in the depth of sleep be conversant with thee. Suffer me not, O my God, to forget thee in the dark, or to say, The Lord seeth me not, the Lord hath forsaken the earth, but so keep me in thy fear, and sanctifie me with thy grace, that all the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart may be always of thee. Make my soul to thirst for thee, and my flesh also to long after thee. And at what time soever thou shalt awake me from this bodily sleep, awake also my soul in me, make thy morning-star to arise in my heart, and let thy spirit blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. Quicken me, O Lord, according to thy wonted kindnesse, so shall I seek thee early, and make my prayer unto thee with joyful lips. And now, O my most loving and faithful Creatour, take me, I beseech thee, into thy Almighty protection, stretch over me the arme of thy mercy, let thine eye be towards the work of thine own hands, and the purchased possession of thy onely begotten, and my most merciful Redeemer Jesus Christ. AMEN.

HENRY VAUGHAN (1622-95).

THE LESSON OF SOUTH WALES.

TRULY our sins are finding us out, and we are reaping in time of trouble the bitter harvest of seeds recklessly sown in times of prosperity. If we content ourselves with thinking now of the great coal strike merely as a thing of the past, one more awkward corner turned, one more difficulty got out of the way, we shall make a grave mistake. The causes which produced it are deeply rooted in our national life, and may at any time find expression again to the great danger of our national existence. It has been a grave warning. Can we profit by it?

Undoubtedly the action of the men was unpatriotic, as is the action of every one who now or, indeed, at any time, puts his own interest or those of his class, before the interests of his country. Moreover, it was thoroughly irrational. They said, in effect, to the employers, "You are making illegitimate profits, you are plundering the country in its time of need. Give us a bigger share of those profits and we will be quiet. If you do not, then regardless of the results to the country we stop the production which is vital to its safety." It was bad, perhaps not worse than has been done by others, but none the less, bad. Yet we cannot condemn these men as a class as unpatriotic. Thousands of them have gone to the front. Moreover, it is clear that many, probably most of those who ceased work, did so unwillingly and in obedience to claims which they felt to be higher than those of their country. We may blame them, we cannot help doing so, but we ought to try to understand how they have come to take up such a position. If we do this honestly, putting aside class prejudices, we shall see that their action has been the almost inevitable outcome of the false ideals and evil practices upon which our industrial and commercial system is based.

Those ideals and practices may be summed up as follows: Trade and industry exist primarily for the enrichment of individuals, only incidentally for the welfare and strengthening of the nation. They are a process of struggle rather than of co-operation. Therefore, it is the duty of every man to do the best he can for himself, to think of his own interests first, to sell what he has to sell in the dearest market, and buy what he has to buy in the cheapest market, regardless of the fact that this may mean that some one else has to sell in the cheapest and buy in the dearest market. In the struggle which ensues the strong inevitably come to the top, the weak go to the wall, and the nation, which is compounded of strong and weak, suffers from discord and disease. It becomes a house divided against itself, and when trouble comes has difficulty in standing.

It is not to be expected that when war comes all men will suddenly forget the lessons and abjure the practices which have disfigured the times of peace. We have all been sinners together in these matters, content, if successful, to profit by this system, hopeful, if unsuccessful, to profit by it some day. The ideals of all classes have been pretty much the same, only some have been able to realise them and others have not. Moreover, the realisation of these ideals has been preached not merely as a right, but as a duty, and in this way have arisen sectional and class loyalties which have gained a strong hold upon us, often obscuring the greater loyalty which all alike owe to the State. Then comes the war and lets in a flood of light upon the whole system. It is found to be inadequate to meet so grave a crisis in the national life. Who can avoid the suspicion that ideals and practices which will not bear the strain of a national crisis, cannot be really sound at any time?

Some can see that at any rate at such times as the present they will not do, and that the lesser loyalties must at any rate, for the time, give place to the greater. Can we be surprised that some do not at once see this and do not rise to the height of the occasion. We excuse their failure by their ignorance and lack of imagination; but just in so far as that excuse holds good we accuse ourselves as a nation. What have we been doing with our so-called education all these years that men should be so dull and blind to-day? Have we not been largely misconceiving it or sacrificing it in the interests of parties and of persons? And shall we not reap the fruits of our default?

What then is the lesson of it all? Not that the Welsh collier is a degenerate, unpatriotic being. He is neither better nor worse than many others. He is as we have made him, loyal to ideals and practices very like those we ourselves follow in ordinary times; a little less ready to change them in an emergency than some others because of the defective education we have given him. The true lesson is that if we get through this present trouble, we shall all have to mend our ways in these matters of industry and trade, and to bring our ideals and practices in that sphere into some closer agreement with those other ideals and practices which we profess and inculcate under the name of Christianity. If we do not do this we shall assuredly move on to fresh and even worse troubles.

IGNOTUS.

SIR JOHN BOWRING AND THE LITERATURE OF THE SLAVS.

Ye who hate the chains of slavery!
Ye who love the songs of bravery!
In your happiest moments come.
Come, and crowd the Muses' home.

Translated from the Russian by Sir John Bowring.

In the lecture room, behind our dear and beautiful George's Meeting in Exeter, there is a marble bust. Statuary made in England is a delicate subject to discuss. So I will refrain. I am not a judge, but I believe this is a piece of good work. It is a bust of Sir John Bowring. Among good Unitarians Bowring is held in much veneration, his hymns are sung in our chapels, and also in the chapels of the orthodox. But just now his name ought to be revived with fresh honour, for he is deserving of quite special recognition. Everywhere in our country an intense interest is awakening in the Slav and his literature. We are all pro-Russian to-day. But in the bibliography to his 'Russian Literature' Waliszewski has this laconic sentence: "England is behindhand." Now if we had followed the example of Sir John Bowring we should not have been behindhand, for he veritably opened up for us the treasures of Russian literature at the very moment when masterpieces were being created. He was the contemporary of Pooshkin, and Krilov, "the first Russian national poet," gave him with his own hands one of his best fables in manuscript.

I have among my books two disreputable old volumes. One is 'Specimens of the Russian Poets,' translated by John Bowring, second edition, 1821. The other is a volume of 'Servian Popular Poetry,' translated by John Bowring. This bears the date 1827, and I think must be the first edition. They came from second-hand book-barrows in the glorious East End of London, and they bear the marks—but the Slav has ever been a nomad, and tough in resistance.

In the preface to the Russian Poems Sir John writes generous words on Russia, briefly discusses the language, and notes with enthusiasm its peculiar capacity for poetry. "The father of Russian poetry," he writes, "is Lomonossov," and that verdict has been emphasised lately. "This astounding moujik." "To this mere moujik Pooshkin owed the very language of which he made so magnificent a use." For though Russia is immensely rich in epic—epic extending from a far past to the Napoleonic era—though her folk-lore and fairy tales are "realms of gold"; and though she has exquisite songs from the heart of the whole people; yet that noble instrument which Tourgeniev praised so passionately, the Russian language, was forged late, and her literature is of yesterday. Bowring saw it coming, and foretold its future. This is the hard thing to do. To recognise it when it has come is easy enough. And looking back Bowring rightly named Lomonossov its father. The adventures in search of light of "this mere moujik" vie in romance with those of the scholars of the Renaissance. A fisherman's son, from the bitter shores of the Northern Ocean he trudged to Moscow, and the first night shivered half-frozen in an empty sledge. But like another intellectual giant he managed "to avoid dying," and grew in wisdom and stature.

In rendering the rhetoric of that "Parnassian giant," Dierjavin, Sir John is undoubtedly brilliant, but to-day Dierjavin's glitter is a little cold. Later Russian criticism has sadly damaged this figure of the golden age of Catherine—but then the maladies incidental to golden ages are peculiarly dangerous to poetic innocence; the only golden age not so seems to have been the one before the first one. Russian literature has been heavily weighted with foreign influences—French, German, English. Krilov, the fabulist, was the first to push his grim Russian personality right through such externals. He drew from the regular international supply of fables, but he is Russian to the core. But there were real giants on the earth in those days when Bowring was at work. Pooshkin and Lermontov were living stormy lives, both soon to end in duels. He may have written of these two elsewhere. I do not know. There are no selections here. With Pooshkin and Lermontov Russian literature found its own more excellent way, rhythmic loveliness, and that simple vivid actuality, which is never mere realism because it trembles with a thousand emotions. Pooshkin seems to me to be the spiritual father of all modern Russian writers. He first showed the witchery, the changing grace, the delicate variety in woman, afterwards to be found everywhere in the Russian novel, and he was the first to draw that other ever-recurring type, the superfluous man, brilliant, pathetic, fascinating, ever alternating from the interrogative to the explanatory. Tolstoi and Tourgeniev were not only the exponents of this type in art—they were this very person in life also. Lermontov has more passion than Pooshkin—lurid light and pent-up heat. In him the national genius for landscape finds expression. But he had for scenery the magnificent Caucasus—and the feet of others have been beautiful upon the mountains—our own Byron, for example. The true glory of Russian literature in this respect lies in what her children have made of the endless forest and steppe. Gogol, who came from the steppes of Little Russia, where Cossack legends blow like strong wind. The aching melancholy of the great plain, the depth of the Ukraine night, the rhythmic sound of the rolling Dnieper—they haunt us after reading him. And Tourgeniev's landscapes, silver to the eye and ear, his fragile trees, the secret and precious favours of his birds, and his rare gift for mingling natural colours and sounds with human emotions and thoughts—the ultima Thule of the poet's art, and so seldom attained.

Coming back to Sir John Bowring, I must admit that as poetry I prefer his renderings of Servian ballads and songs. In the ballads he keeps the exquisite trochaic movement of the originals. Surely the trochaic is the oldest rhythmic form—is it not a dance measure? Lovers of Browning's 'One Word More' know its seduction. Of course, in these ballads we have the famous Marko. One opens with these beautifully simple trochaic lines—a charming rhythmic picture of a hero on horseback:—

At the dawn of day the noble Marko
Rode in sunlight on the sabbath morning,
By the sea, along the Urvinian mountain.

Among the shorter poems in the book there is a little gem, a 'Harvest Song.' A footnote is given in explanation: "This song is sung at the close of the harvest, when all the reapers are gathered together. Half as many reeds as the number present are so bound that no one can distinguish the two ends of the same reed. Each man takes one end of the reeds on one side, each woman takes one end at the other. The withes that binds the reeds are severed, and the couples that hold the same reed kiss one another." And this is the song:—

Take hold of your reeds, youths and maidens, and see
Who the kissers and kiss'd of the reapers shall be.
Take hold of your reeds till the secret is told,
If the old shall kiss young, and the young shall kiss old.
Take hold of your reeds, youths and maidens, and see
What fortune and chance to the drawers decree;

And if any refuse, may God smite them—may they
Be cursed by Paraskev, the saint of to-day!
Now loosen your hands—now loosen and see
Who the kissers and kiss'd of the reapers shall be.

R. H. U. B.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

NONCONFORMITY IN KENDAL.

The Older Nonconformity in Kendal. A History of the Unitarian Chapel in the Market Place, with Transcripts of the Registers and Notices of the Nonconformist Academies of Richard Frankland, M.A., and Caleb Rotheram, D.D. By Francis Nicholson and Ernest Axon. Kendal: Titus Wilson, 1915.

MR FRANCIS NICHOLSON, whose interest in Nonconformist history is a family inheritance, and Mr. Ernest Axon, son of the late Mr. W. E. A. Axon, the well-known antiquary of Manchester, have co-operated in the production of a substantial work, which is a congregational history and a great deal more. It offers a store of illustrative matter from which any general outline of Nonconformist history may be filled in, or any special and local history be enlarged by interesting parallels and contrasts. These lines of brief review may perhaps be best employed in indicating a few of such points of interest.

The difficulty of carrying out the Presbyterian Settlement of the country according to the scheme of 1645 is particularly exemplified in the case of Westmoreland. In a district sparsely populated, difficult of transit, and with a very isolated clergy, there was little unity of feeling, whether political or religious, and the general policy was non-committal. Apparently neither of the two classes proposed for the county was ever formed. But within a few years the need of co-operation and mutual understanding began to be felt, especially with regard to Ordination and the enforcement of parochial discipline. "A brotherly association of ministers" was desired, and the Worcestershire agreement, inaugurated by Baxter, was in the main adopted, and under the influence of Richard Gilpin the "Associated Ministers and Churches of the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland" put forth their agreement in 1656. It seemed likely to lead to unity and peace, being subscribed by both Presbyterians and Congregationalists. But by this prospect the arch-fiend was enraged, "and surely that must needs be good which Satan so furiously opposeth," and he "disgorged from his hateful stomach a swarm of Quakers." The presence of a very combative and argumentative Quakerism, stimulated in its early stages by the frequent visits of George Fox, constitutes what appears to our authors to be "the essential factor in the early history of Westmoreland Nonconformity." It is certainly a constantly recurring element; the controversy with Quakerism bursts out again in a furious pamphlet warfare in the eighteenth century.

The vicarage of Kendal was, and is, in the gift of Trinity College, Cambridge; there was also, it is interesting to note, a Corporation Lectureship, value £15 a year, sometimes held with the vicarage and sometimes separately. The rights of the patron were not suspended under the Commonwealth, but the nominee was soon required to submit himself for approbation to the Triers. The Kendal Vicars were of several sorts; one is a Presbyterian, and endeavours to enforce the Directory, much against the will of his people, who still stick to the Prayer Book: "They desire their old mumpsimus of a service book which I hope is happily exploded;" another is a strong Independent, and another, William Brownsword, who weathered through the period of ejection, adhered to the policy of the notorious Vicar of Bray. Indeed, the ejected of 1662 had few representatives in Westmoreland; the people were much more restless than the ministers. Under the indulgence of 1672 only seven houses in the county were licensed for meetings; of these six are noted as Presbyterian, and six are in the parish of Kendal. George Benson, an ejected minister, took out a licence for his own house in Kendal, of which place he was a native, and he is reckoned as the first resident Nonconformist minister of the place. He had been Vicar of Bridekirk, and was episcopally ordained. He was ordained again at Cocker-mouth in 1652 by three Presbyters, or rather, "they did receive and admit him" without imposition of hands, "because he had been before ordained by the bishops, and the church was fearful of iterating his ordination, lest they should have offended, though they, in their judgment, were satisfied they might." Under the Toleration Act Benson was licensed as a Presbyterian teacher; but at that time he was not resident in Kendal, and for some few years the history of the Nonconformist cause in the town is obscure. There was probably a meeting-house, but we know not where, before the erection of the Market Place Chapel in 1720 under the ministry of Caleb Rotheram the elder, though the names of his immediate predecessors are known. In an interesting chapter our authors discuss the question, Was Kendal Chapel "originally orthodox?" That it was so was assumed in the work called "The Manchester Socinian Controversy" published in 1825, which was a call to the Congregational body to claim possession, by process of law, of numerous chapels (of which a list was given) then occupied by Unitarians, on the ground that they were originally orthodox. This pretension led directly to the Dissenters' Chapels of 1844. It is pointed out by our authors that it would be very rash to assume that a chapel built for a Protestant dissenting congregation of Presbyterians in such a time of theological unrest was necessarily orthodox. (Query here, the above being the proper designation, why do our authors say Unitarian Chapel on their title-page? It was certainly called the Protestant Dissenting Chapel in 1868). In the first half of the eighteenth century the Calvinism of the Nonconformists was undergoing much modification. In 1711 Samuel Bourn refused to subscribe the Assembly's Catechism on his settlement at Crook, near Kendal, and many neighbouring ministers refused to concur in his ordination. Samuel Clarke's "Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity" (1712) was read far and wide among Dissenters, and led to the Exeter Arian Controversy. A heated controversy in the North was raised by a sermon preached to the Associated Ministers of Cumberland and Westmoreland by Joseph Dodson, M.A., of Penruddock, entitled "Moderation and Charity recommended." The date is 1719, and the writer states that the sermon was composed some time before he had any notice of the unhappy differences among the ministers at London; referring, of course, to the Salter's Hall rupture, on the matter of subscription, in that year. The sermon itself, of which considerable extracts are given, is a remarkable plea for liberty and catholicity.

Let not any of us who admire the Learning and Judgement of Mr. Calvin, join with him in reproaching those who are of a different persuasion from him in Matters of Religion..... We must discover a modest and gentle Disposition, by forbearing to rack the Consciences of one another with Subscriptions to human Creeds..... Let us not be fond of a party as such. 'Tis being zealous Arminians, earnest Calvinists, rigid Lutherians, instead of contenting ourselves with being plain and honest Christians, which is one principle cause of Contentions and Animositities.

Dodson was at once charged with speaking disrespectfully of Calvin, and even treating his memory with indecency and reproach; also with indulging in Arian cant; this latter probably meaning his protest against subscription. Our authors conclude, after a moderate and well-argued contention, that the Kendal congregation during the long pastorate of Dr. Rotheram (1716 to 1752) belonged to the non-subscribing party, and "willingly and knowingly left it open to their successors to exercise the right of private judgment which they claimed and exercised for themselves."

Here we must take leave of the congregational history, and say a word as to a most important part of the book containing remarkably full accounts of Frankland and Rotheram, the men themselves, their academies, and their students. Richard Frankland left Rathmell for Natland, a village within the old parish of Kendal, in the early part of 1674; he remained there till 1682, and during the intervening period he seems to have had no less than 77 students with him. The list of Frankland's pupils, 308 in all, with biographical notes, is singularly complete and interesting. Dr. Rotheram's academy in Kendal, 1733 to 1752, was of much repute, and a similarly annotated list of his pupils is here given. Rotheram had a great name as a teacher of experimental philosophy and the higher mathematics, studies which were particularly characteristic of the Dissenting Academies of this line. In this connection we have one of the many little illustrative jottings which Mr. Nicholson is able to furnish from his own family papers. The following extract from a letter of Dr. Rotheram is of interest to those of us who wonder how the tutors of those days made a living; but it does not allay our curiosity. The date is 1735.

You may please to acquaint Mr. Nicholson that I have good convenience for lodging his son in my house, that the terms on which I take young men are 8 guineas a year for lodging and boarding, and 4 guineas a year for Learning, they find their own Fire and Candle in their Rooms, and wash their own wearing Linnen, that if they go through a whole course of Mathematicks, as that obliges me to a particular attendance when their other Lectures are over, I have a distinct consideration for that Branch of Instruction.

Another son of the Mr. Nicholson here mentioned was Robert, also a student with Rotheram, and great-grandfather of our author. He was one of the first of Liverpool merchants to withdraw, on conscientious grounds, from the slave trade; perhaps the earliest instance of such protest.

There is excellent digging to be had in the small print of this book. The authors are to be heartily congratulated on the production of a work which combines wide interest with laborious investigation. It is further enriched by a considerable number of pictures and portraits.

J. E. O.

THE BENGALI POET AND SEER.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE: A BIOGRAPHICAL STUDY. By Ernest Rhys. London: Macmillan & Co. 5s. net.

To those who read, about two years ago, with the surprise of a new joy, Gitanjali, and, later, with continued though subdued joy, The Gardener and Sādhana, some account of the life and spiritual heritage of the author of these remarkable works should be exceptionally welcome. If Mr. Ernest Rhys disappoints them in some measure, in that they turn to his book expecting more than he has to give, this should not be urged too strongly against him. Matters of great interest concerning a personality so elect and impressive would doubtless be out of reach to an English biographer, and others, though known to him, may be justly withheld from the publicity of print. Yet it is impossible not to close the book with a slightly murmuring protest: "Here is too little about the man and too much comment on his writings, too meagre a story and a superfluity of exposition." For those who really care for such unique poetry and prose as Tagore's love best to discover for themselves the truth he has to give, the loveliness and the charm with which he offers it in words. What they would like is a more connected and plain record of the poet-seer's life in this our everyday world; whereas, for those who do not greatly care for his writings, this study would have, in any case, but small significance. Yet some things are told us here of quite vital interest, for which we should be thankful to Mr. Rhys; and his discussion of the sources of inspiration in earlier Indian poets, and the light he throws on the opening years of Mr. Tagore's life, are a valuable contribution to our knowledge and to our chances of appreciation.

The chapter entitled "Shanti Niketan," with its excellent account of the school at Bolpur founded by the poet, and kept, by his influence and personality, on so high a level of educational equipment, is all that could be wished. The story of that wonderful achievement is an illustration of what all readers of Gitanjali and Sādhana must have discovered—that this Eastern seer, this poet of the contemplative religious life, is also a man of action, a reformer, a lover of deeds that make for human progress in this imperfect world. It reminds us of that remarkable chapter in Sādhana on "Realisation in Action." We seem to discover the mystic of the East and the energetic worker of the West combined in this bringer of visionary ideals into the practical activities of the modern world. "O Worker of the Universe," he exclaims at the close of that chapter, "We would pray to thee to let the irresistible current of thy universal energy come like the impetuous south wind of spring. . . . Let our newly awakened powers cry out for unlimited fulfilment in leaf and flower and fruit."

Some literary blemishes in Mr. Rhys's work suggest haste in writing or carelessness in correcting printers' errors. The reader stumbles on such phrases as "A poet who was living in the time of Burns and wrote love-songs that something offer his passionate sincerity" (p. 31); "Emotion tied to congenial rhythms and concrete forms" (p. 47); "a savour of childish mystery about the girl who is the signal figure" (p. 59). "He (Tagore's father) provided the congenial atmosphere in which that son's nature could grow to its full flourish" (p. 121). The words we have italicised, even where they make sense, are surely unworthy of such a critic and so loyal a promoter of good literature as the author of this Study.

But against all that, let the following passage stand for illustration of the many true and luminous statements and appreciations with which these pages abound. Speaking of the "Song-offerings," as the poems of Gitanjali are called, the author says, we found in them "an accent that was new to us, yet natural as our own hopes and fears. They took up our half-formed wishes and gave them a voice; they rose inevitably from the life, the imagination, and the desires of him who wrote. They were the vehicle of a great emotion that surprised its imagery not only in the light that was like music, the rhythm that was in the waves and sound itself and the light-waves of the sun; but in the rain, the wet road, the lonely house, the great wall that shuts in the creature-self, the shroud of dust, the night black as the black-stone. It was an emotion so sure of itself that it made no effort after originality, but took the things that occur to us all, and dwelt upon them, and made them alive and musical and significant."

Mr. Rhys tells us that, in the original, "Tagore," is spelt "Thakur." How grievous that a name so much more pleasing to sight and hearing should have been changed in English to the harsh prosaic Tagore! Is it too late to adopt the Bengali name, both in spelling and pronunciation? "Rabindranath Thakur" would read and sound so well.

W. J. J.

WE have received 'AN ELEMENTARY COURSE OF LESSONS ON THE WAR: BEING AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS,' by Miss M. Catherine Gittins, reprinted from The Sunday School Monthly. Copies may be had from the secretary of the National Conference Union for Social Service, the Rev. H. H. Johnson, The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham, 2d., post free; 1s. 8d. a dozen post free. The lessons, which are grouped under the headings, 'Geography,' 'History,' 'International Relations,' and 'Physical, Moral, and Spiritual Force,' will be found useful even by those who feel that some of the statements of the author need considerable modification before they can be made to fit the facts. A short list of books for the use of the teacher is given at the end of each section.

'WOMEN AND WAR' is a recent sermon preached by the Rev. Charles Craddock in the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, Liverpool, and published by the Liverpool Booksellers' Co., Ltd. It is one of the penetrating utterances, full at once of practical wisdom and the unaging spirit of religion, which have given to Mr. Craddock's ministry a characteristic note of quiet spiritual distinction. His friends will prize it all the more highly because he is one of the wise teachers who shrink from loud advertisement and the publicity of print.

Le Figaro states that all copies of the book 'J'ACCUSE!' have been seized at the kiosks and railways stations in Switzerland by order of the military authorities. A protest has been lodged against this action. In Holland the first edition of 10,000 copies has been at once exhausted and the sales of the French edition are very great. The English edition will be issued immediately both here and in America by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

28TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,105	16	10
Mrs. C. E. Maurice, from a fund left in her hands by Miss Octavia Hill	10	0	0
Mrs. J. Taylor Jones (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss A. Gillespie (sixth donation)	5	0	0
Miss N. Currall	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Freeman	5	0	0
Collection in Toronto by Miss Mary Barber:—
Mrs. R. Henderson	2
Miss V. Larratt-Smith	2
Mrs. Christopher Robinson	150
Mrs. John Cawthra	5

	$	£	s.	d.
Mrs. Tilley	25
Mr. Wade Gardner	5
Mrs. Alexander Paterson	5
Miss M. T. Allan	200
Mrs. Y. T. Smith	25
Mrs. T. Annesley	5
Mrs. Hiam	10
The Rev. Lennox Larratt-Smith	5
Mrs. C. Y. Le Poer Trench	5

	$444	93	4	5
Miss H. M. Davis	10	6
Mrs. McAndrew	5	0	0
Miss R. A. Reid	1	0	0
Miss Emma Thompson	5	0	0
P. J. W. (second donation)	50	0	0
Mrs. Peyton (third donation)	25	0	0
Mr. Arthur Taylor (second donation)	10	0	0
Aberystwyth Meeting House (third collection)	2	10	0
Mrs. Edward Bond (second donation)	2	2	0
The Misses E. and G. Coe (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Miss Katherine H. Greg	3	0	0
Mrs. Chris. James (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Florence M. Thorn	5	0	0
"D."	5	0	0
Mrs. Arnold Lupton (second donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. A. M. Tonge	10	0	0
Mrs. Russell Martineau (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss Gertrude Martineau (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Susan Bruce (second donation)	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Nanson (second donation)	5	0	0
R. L. (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss A. Smith	5	0	0
Mrs. H. Enfield Dowson (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Hartley Wicksteed	10	0	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast (third collection)	1	6	6
M. R. H. C. (second donation)	2	0	0
Miss Winifred Holiday	2	6
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry	1	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Tangye	5	0	0
Mr. E. Wadley	2	10	0
Wimbledon Unitarian Church (fifth monthly contribution, per Mr. W. N. Martin)	1	4	0
Miss White (second donation)	1	1	0
Miss H. Partridge	1	1	0
Mr. E. B. Squire (second donation)	3	3	0
Children of Eldon Street Girls' School, Barnsley, per Miss M. Frith	0	10	6
Mrs. Geo. Webb (fourth donation)	20	0	0
D. C. S.	1	0	0
"From a Friend" (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. H. W. Guernsey, New York	10	18	5
	£5,435	17	8

Parcels have been received from:—
The Women's League, Padiham (per Mrs. Hargreaves); Mrs. George Webb; Mrs. Nottcutt; Mrs. J. Taylor Jones; Muswell Hill Congregational Church Ladies' Working Party (per Mrs. Allbon); Mrs. Titterton; Miss E. C. Harvey; Mrs. C. W. Cornish; Miss E. Case; Miss

E. A. Eveleigh; Mrs. A. M. Chesshire; Mr. Lomas; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Mrs. Johnson; Mrs. W. Copeland Bowie; Miss Currall; Mrs. Garnett; the Camden School for Girls (per Miss Drummond); Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Mrs. Haslam; Miss Mary T. Worsley; Mrs. Woodhouse; Mrs. Marnham; Miss Bruce; Mrs. Francis Bishop and Mrs. W. H. Travers; Mrs. French; Cedar Lawn Military Hospital (per the Quartermaster, Miss Wurtzburg); Mrs. Wallis and Miss Meugens; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry; Miss Waterall; Mrs. Wm. Healey; Maid's Working Party (per Mrs. Priestley Smith); Miss Whitfield; Mrs. Arnold Lupton; Miss Mary Dendy; Miss M. S. Beard; Mrs. Hans Renold; Mrs. Frank Taylor; Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor; Bury Branch Women's League (per Miss Johnstone, two large bales); Working Men's Club and Institute (per Mr. J. Argyle, fifty games); Mrs. Maitland; Mr. A. D. Tyssen; Mrs. Varian; Mrs. Wetherbee.

About fifty pairs of boots have been sent out for the refugees in Calais. More are required, but should be sent to Belgian Hospital Fund, 'c/o Messrs. Mulholland, 53-55, Seven Sisters Road, N., where they are repaired and packed for shipment free of charge to this Fund.

List of garments, &c., wanted:—shirts, socks, vests and pants (woven or of natural coloured flannel), towels, handkerchiefs, also bags in strong cotton material, two feet by three feet, with a string run in the neck (for the men's clothes).

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD. THE NEW HALL.

THE following architectural description of the new Arlosh Hall appeared in a recent issue of The Oxford Journal Illustrated. It is written by Mr. Harry Paintin.

"Among the important buildings erected in Oxford in recent years, the Hall of Manchester College will assuredly occupy a prominent place. Imposing in elevation and generous as regards scale, the new work harmonises with the section built some years ago, though the altitude of the Chapel roof and also that of the new Hall entirely dwarfs the proportions of the gateway tower that forms a prominent and pleasing feature of the work just completed. The tower consists of four stages, and here, as is indeed the case with the Hall itself, decorative features have been sparingly introduced, but where they are employed their type is of a high order. Angle buttresses, which die into the main wall at the second stage, agreeably break the rigid contour of the tower, the southern face of which carries a small oriel of beautiful design, though the shingle weathering is somewhat unusual. Above are the arms of Warrington, York and London....on the north occur those of Manchester and Oxford....The tower contains two lecture-rooms of modest dimensions, but beautifully and simply fitted, the fire-places being especially charming. On the first stage a small apartment communicates with the Hall, and here the dividing parapet is marked by severity of treatment. The Hall consists of five bays, four of which are lighted by transomless-windows with tracery placed somewhat high. Between the windows are buttresses of considerable projection, which die into the main building at the wall-plate. Had they been carried through the parapet and terminated with pinnacles, the paralleled horizontal lines formed by the ridge and parapet would have been broken and consequently destroyed the rigidity of outline, which is possibly the least satisfactory feature of the work. The parapet might also have been crenellated, as is almost the universal custom in Oxford. Above the windows and repeated throughout the building are the initials "J. A.," sometimes separately and in other instances monogrammed, placed in sunk foliated panels. They refer to James Arlosh, the munificent benefactor who presented the building to the college. The fifth bay carries the principal doorway, which is of imposing proportions and deeply recessed, the latter feature made possible—as is the case at Pusey House Chapel—by weathering. The door-mouldings are simple and bold, and the principal bears the following in relief: "E Munificentia Jacobi Arlosh, A.D. MCMXIV." Above the door the wall is relieved by a small tenantless niche. The roof is extremely fine, and the slates, from the Eyeford quarries, tone well with the stonework below. The great southern gable is destitute of decorative features, and the apex is also quite plain. In addition to windows corresponding with those on the east, the western front is broken by an imposing chimney-stack, and a finely proportioned oriel, the latter abutting on the high table. Externally Doulton stone with Clipsam dressing has been employed. Internally the finely grained and richly toned Guiting stone has been used. Reference has already been made to the fine proportions of the Hall.... A screen and gallery, the latter approached by a fine newel, guards the southern end. The screen consists of unpierced panelling with a well-cut cornice, enriched with vine and trail, not unlike the well-known example on St. Frideswide's watching-chamber. The dais or high table screen is more elaborate, and the carving, though somewhat restricted, is excellent in quality. The mouldings are extremely good, and the coving cut from the solid. The transomless oriel, to which allusion has already been made, bears the arms of Warrington, York, London and Manchester in rich glass, the beautifully rich tones imparting an agreeable and welcome colour to this sector of the Hall. The oriel ceiling afforded an ideal opportunity for the display of a fan-vaulting, for which the existing plaster-work is not an altogether satisfactory substitute. The floor is composed of oak herring-bone parquet laid on reinforced concrete. Possibly one of the most satisfactory features is the roof, barrel-shaped, formed of fibrous plaster and large curved oak ribs, and supported by English oak tie-beams of great scantling. The soffits of these are carved on the solid and well-executed, as is the case with the wall-plate cresting and cornice, the latter being utilised for ventilating purposes. The principals between tie-beams and inner-roof are enriched with cusped-tracery, and in consequence of the strike last autumn, this and other woodwork was exposed for a considerable period, and the weathering thus obtained has imparted an agreeable toning of colour which is altogether lacking in new work. Reference should also be made to the modelled lead spouting and the beautiful spout-heads, which, together with other details, attest the ability and care of the architect, Mr. Percy Scott Worthington, M.A., F.R.I.B.A., of Manchester, and late of Corpus Christi College, whose father designed the existing buildings at Manchester College. Messrs. Benfield Loxley have executed the work with their usual thoroughness, and Mr. T. T. Ward has proved a capable and vigilant clerk of the works."

A MESSAGE TO OUR DEFENDERS.

Mr. Hugh R. Rathbone, the President of the National Conference, is anxious to send a message of greeting to the members of the churches on the Roll of the Conference, who are so bravely defending their country by sea and land. In order to do this it is necessary to obtain their names and naval or regimental addresses. Ministers and secretaries of congregations are requested to supply this information as soon as possible to the Secretary of the Conference, the Rev. James Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

THE Rev. W. G. Tarrant writes:—"One or two rogues in khaki are known to have imposed upon our ministers lately. The story is told of a sudden emergency, money lost, applicant due at Aldershot, Dover, or elsewhere; the fare is "borrowed"—and that is the last heard of the case. The latest recorded is a man purporting to be a Canadian, and showing a letter written by a well-known Unitarian minister in Canada; this man has already victimised more than one London minister."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Blackpool.—On Sunday last, July 25th, at the Lytham Road Unitarian Church, South Shore, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith concluded his ministry by preaching farewell sermons to good congregations. After evening service a congregational meeting was held to express good wishes to Mr. Smith and his family and to make a farewell presentation. Mr. J. J. Bowles, the chairman, said how deeply they all regretted that Mr. Smith was departing from them, and bore warm testimony to his services as preacher and worker, and to the effective help rendered by Mrs. and Miss Smith in various church activities. Mr. John Cuncliffe, church treasurer, voiced the feelings of the church, saying that their minister had established the church on more enduring foundations and made a settled ministry more secure amongst them, and was leaving the church and Sunday School in a much better condition than he found them. They all wished Mr. Smith, Mrs. and Miss Smith every happiness and prosperity in their new sphere of life at Nelson, and on behalf of the congregation he was requested to ask Mr. Smith to accept a cheque. In accepting the presentation the Rev. H. Bodell Smith thanked them for their kindness and for the words of appreciation expressed towards him and his wife and daughter. For over three years they had spent a very pleasant time amongst them. There had been the happiest kind of friendship all round, and complete unity of spirit. He was sure that with their devoted support of his successor the church would continue to increase in strength, prosperity and usefulness. Mr. A. Fielding and Mr. Ford spoke on behalf of the Adult School movement which had received some active assistance from Mr. Smith, and they expressed hearty acknowledgment of his help and public spirit. Mr. Smith begins his ministry at Nelson on August 1st, and he is to be succeeded at South Shore in September by the Rev. B. C. Constable of Longsight, Manchester.

Liverpool.—In place of the Annual Excursion of the Sunday School Society, a service was held on Thursday evening, July 22nd, conducted by the Rev. Charles Craddock, at the Ancient Chapel, Toxteth Park. The minister gave a profoundly thoughtful and valuable address on the text: "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions."

Macclesfield.—A Garden Party and Sale of work was held last Saturday in the grounds of Mr. and Mrs. Winder. The sale which was opened by Mrs. H. P. Greg of Styal, was in aid of the School Building Fund in connection with the King Edward Street Chapel. The Sunday School work is badly handicapped by lack of proper accommodation for Sunday and institutional work. The congregation is making strenuous efforts to increase the sum already in hand, and to secure a site near to the chapel. The weather conditions were all that could be desired, and a large company met to purchase the articles produced by many month's industry on the part of the Ladies' Sewing Committee. Mrs. Tootal Broadhurst sent a generous donation of £20, and the total for the day's effort was £84. This sum was highly gratifying to all concerned. The Rev. J. Hipperson expressed the thanks of the congregation to Mrs. Greg for performing the opening ceremony, and to Mr. and Mrs. Winder for their generous hospitality. Last Sunday morning Mr. Hipperson exchanged pulpits with the Rev. W. E. Ireland, M.A., minister of Park Green Congregational Church. The exchange was much appreciated by both congregations. As Mr. Hipperson was recently elected Secretary of the Macclesfield Ministers' Fraternal, this is additional evidence of the increasing goodwill between the ministers and congregations of different denominations in the town.

Manchester Domestic Mission.—A most successful Garden Entertainment was held on July 14 on behalf of the funds of the Mission in the grounds of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Victoria Park, by kind permission of the Committee of the College. Miss E. B. Manning's play, 'Paris of Troy,' was performed under her direction by a company from the Renshaw Street Mission. Folk dances were given by children from the Willert Street Mission who had been trained by Mr. W. T. Pritchard. The play and the dances were very much admired by a large audience and a good financial result will accrue to the Mission funds.

Rochdale.—The Unitarian Church mourns the loss of Mr. Joseph Standing, who died on July 14th. He had just entered upon his 80th year, and during his long life-time he had been devotedly loyal to both the church and the school. Besides being a Trustee of the church, he had from time to time held various other offices, amongst them being membership of the choir, membership of the church Committee, Co-Superintendency of the Sunday School, and Presidency of the Sick and Burial Society. He was also the oldest member of the local Spinners' Association, and for over thirty years the highly-respected Treasurer of that Society, holding the office to within a very short time of his death. To mark their appreciation of his long and faithful services the Executive Committee of the Association had decided to grant him a weekly pension, and that decision would have been ratified by the general meeting of the Spinners, on the evening of the day on which he died. It is pleasant to think that he knew of this further evidence of the warm regard in which he was held by his fellow members. A large body of the Spinners, with their Secretary—the Mayor of Rochdale—at their head, attended the funeral service at the church, and walked in procession before the hearse to the Cemetery. Representatives of the Trustees and of the Church Committee were also in attendance at the church and at the Cemetery, as well as a very large number of his friends.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTE OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

The Annual Report, which has just been issued, calls special attention to the important part which its Hon. Secretary, Mr. Percy Alden, has taken in the work of Belgian Relief. Quite early in the war he was placed on the British Commission for the Relief of Belgians in Holland, and has paid four visits to that country in connection with the work of inspecting the camps in which the Belgian refugees are housed, selecting refugees to be brought to England, arranging for the work of transport, and assisting so far as possible in the proper placing of refugees on this side. He has been in close touch with the Committee that was appointed to deal with employment for the refugees and also with Sir Duncombe Mann, the permanent Chief of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, which has had charge of the Government Clearing Houses for the accommodation of the Belgians. The Hon. Secretary's work in Holland since the Government work closed has made good progress. The scheme which he inaugurated for building wooden houses with Belgian labour has been up to the present a complete success. These houses are built so that they can be taken to pieces after the war and rebuilt in Belgium, being placed by the side of the ruined towns or villages. The President of the Official Dutch Committee, Baron de Tuyl, has expressed his warm approval of the scheme and is giving all the assistance in his power, while it has met with the approval of the British, Dutch and Belgian Prime Ministers. Quite recently a contribution of £29,000 was made by the Danish people to this scheme.

PROTEST FROM THE MOTHERS OF CANADA.

A remarkable petition has been extensively signed and sent to the Prime Minister of Canada against the supply of alcoholic liquor to the Canadian soldiers in training in England and in service at the front. The petition calls for the abolition of the wet canteen, which it describes as a double danger, robbing the King of success in arms, and robbing Canada's women of the manhood they gave into the Empire's keeping. Major-General Sam Hughes had promised that alcoholic beverages would not be supplied to the Canadian soldiers, and that they should "return home as clean and as manly as when they went." It was on this condition that many mothers consented to the enlistment of their sons.

PARIS LIQUOR-DEALERS AND THE GOVERNMENT.

General Gallieni, Military Governor of Paris, has just ordered the inclusion of the whole department of the Seine and Oise in the decree prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages, with the exception of wine and beer, to officers and soldiers. Evidently the progress of the Temperance movement is causing grave anxiety in interested quarters. The National Association of Liquor-Dealers and Restaurant and Hotel Proprietors of France has (says Reuter's Paris Correspondent) called a general convention to consider the following questions: (1) The measure adopted by the Government and military authorities for the suppression of alcoholic drinks; (2) the ways and means for putting an end to the campaign aimed at destroying the liquor trade conducted by cafés, restaurants, and hotels; and, (3) the uniform application of measures adopted in all districts under the jurisdiction of the National Association.

GIFT BY MR. CUTHBERT C. GRUNDY.

At the monthly meeting of the Council of the Union of Lancashire and Cheshire Institutes, held last week, a letter was received from Mr. Cuthbert C. Grundy, offering to hand over to the Union an inscribed War Loan scrip certificate for £200, productive of £9 per annum, and to supplement it with a cash gift of £24, so as to make the total for twenty-four years £10 per annum for an exhibition to be devoted to any subject of instruction which the Council might think most useful. A resolution was passed conveying the thanks of the Council for this response to the appeal of the Union for help to increase its means of aiding the higher education of evening students employed in industry or commerce.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Henry Ward Beecher once wrote:—"It is probable that music, since the world began, has been employed to express religious feeling. It has great power to excite that feeling. It may be questioned whether hymns and music do not divide power with preaching. If the sources of popular religious knowledge could be examined, perhaps the hymn and the psalm would be found to be the real sermon, and singing the most effectual preaching. Congregational singing must either spring from a common religious life in the church, or it must lead to it; or else it will not live long at all."

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms: Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET August. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

GREENGAGES for Preserving.—24 lbs. 8s., 12 lbs. 4s. 6d. Pershore Egg Plums, 24 lbs. 4s. 6d., 12 lbs. 2s. 9d. Carriage paid in England and Wales.—FRANK ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston, Herts.

GREAT BARGAIN SALE! Fine quality hemstitched and embroidered Tray Cloths, beautifully worked, 11½d. each. Postage 1d. extra. Summer Irish Linen Sale Catalogue Free. Send postcard to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, July 31, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3814.
NEW SERIES, No. 917.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Magazine.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS OF THE AUGUST NUMBER.

How the Meadow Saved Itself.
The World-Song. (Poetry.)
The Youngest Knight.
God's Bird.
A Dutch Picture. (Full-Page Picture and Verse.)
Robinson Crusoe. (Part II., Chap. III.-IV.)
Mother Nature's Helpers. (Illustrated.)
'Young Days' Guild Work.
There is always Time. (Poetry.)
The Garden of Gillyflowers.
Grandmother's Quilt. (Poetry.)
Why Bees Make Honey.
Such a Hero! (Poetry.)
How the Vodka Came.
Puzzles and Puzzlers.
Temperance Ideas.
Editor's Chat, &c.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.

Annual Subscription, by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

A specimen copy will be sent post free to any address on receipt of a post card.

London:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—
Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

Now Ready for August.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JONAH:—

The Prophecy of Jonah.
The Purpose of the Story.
The Call and the Refusal.
The Story of the Storm and the Fish.
The Angry Prophet.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Senior Department—Douglas W. Robson, B.D.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—THE BARREN FIG TREE.—THE GREAT SUPPER.—THE TOWER, AND THE WARRING KING.—THE LOST COIN.

Junior Department—Alice L. Colfox.

BY THE WAY. Von Bernhardt on Popular Education.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Bible Literature in the Light of Modern Knowledge.

By E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

Cloth, 2s. net. Postage, 3d.

Belief in God.

By SYDNEY HERBERT MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.
Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College,
Manchester.

Sewed, 2d. net. Postage, 1d.

Moral and Religious Lessons for Infants.

By M. C. MARTINEAU.

Sewed, 6d. net. Postage, 1d.

Favourite Stories.

Selected and Edited by E. PRITCHARD and J. J. WRIGHT.
Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 3d.

Stories for the Little Ones.

Forty-One Stories Selected and Retold by GRACE SPEARS
and DOROTHY TARRANT, M.A.
Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 3d.

The Story of Isaac Hopper

A Hero of the Anti-Slavery Movement.
By HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A.

Cloth, with Portrait, 6d. net. Postage, 1d.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 15 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILLIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000
Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors,
G. SHRUBSALL, }

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, August 8.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.
 Brompton, Port Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Mr. BASIL VINEY.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. ALBERT LAZENBY.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Mr. E. R. FYSON. No Evening Service.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. T. M. SALMON.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W.—No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road.—Closed. Services resumed on September 5th.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNO-WETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. G. W. PETERKEN.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN TOYE.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road. Closed during August.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Mr. HOWARD YOUNG. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, and 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worples Hall, 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHEARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. O. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45. Rev. O. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30. Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 (STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street. Closed morning. Evening, Rev. W. G. TOPPING.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace.—Closed during August.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. T. LUCAN-DAVIES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30.—Closed.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11, Mr. C. HELPTON; 6.30, Mr. L. GORDON RYLANDS, B.A. B.Sc.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church. High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Prof. G. DAWES HICKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHBEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

DUNKERLEY.—On July 30th, at 8, Windsor Quadrant, Kelvinside, Glasgow, to Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Dunkerley—a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

BROWN—SAUNDERS.—On July 29th, at St. Paul's Church, Cambridge, by the Rev. C. J. N. Child, George Leonard, son of Mr. G. W. Brown, of 78, Belsize Park Gardens, Hampstead, to Cecilia Lucie, daughter of the late Mr. J. E. Saunders, of Clayhithe, and of Mrs. Saunders, of 102, Hill's Road, Cambridge.

DEATHS.

ROLLASON.—On the 30th ult., in Field Hospital, Northern France, Arthur Gilbert Rollason, aged 23, Captain, 7th Worcestershire Regiment, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Rollason, Dixon's Green, Dudley.

WILD.—On the 2nd inst., at Netherton, Heywood, Betty, the beloved wife of William Wild, aged 80 years. (No flowers by request).

YATES.—On July 28th. at Rumney, Cardiff, Graham, second son of Thomas and Eva Yates, formerly of Salford, aged 29 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

MISS SIMON, L.L.A., Inter. Arts (Lond), Teachers' Diploma (Camb.). Care and Education of Girls (under twelve) at Zulla Road, Nottingham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	383	CORRESPONDENCE:—	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
LOSS AND GAIN	385	Women's Wages	387	Belgian Hospital Fund	389
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	386	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—	The Oxford Summer Meeting	389
THE NONCONFORMIST PIONEERS	386	A New Liturgy	387	Ladybarn House School	390
		The Healing of Nations	388	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	390
				NOTES AND JOTTINGS	391

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

ONCE again we would send a word of thanks to all the donors to our Belgian Hospital Fund. Naturally the steady growth of the Fund is a source of pleasure to ourselves, but that is simply because it proves that we are doing something useful. Our readers have responded most generously to our appeals and show no sign of growing tired or impatient because we strike the same note so often. It is most gratifying that the holiday season seems to be making very little difference in the steady flow of gifts. This week has brought us a most charming letter from the General in charge of the hospital work in the Rennes district. He is most grateful for what is being done and seems to be specially struck by the promptness and practical character of the help. The men housed in a mediæval castle—our readers will remember Mrs. Allen's picturesque account of her recent visit to them—are now in comparative comfort. The 200 beds which our Fund has provided were to arrive several days ago, and proper bathroom accommodation has been installed. It was the quick eye of a woman which detected this crying need, and steps were taken to obtain estimates and put the work in hand without a moment's delay.

* * *

OUR friendship with these exiled Belgians in France enables us to be of service to them in some pleasant ways, which are not connected directly with the work of the Fund. Mme. L—, who superintends the work of our Hospital for Refugees in Calais, has taken a deep interest in the children of Belgians resident there. There are many poor families, bargees, fisher-folk, and labourers, who are unsuitable for service in the army. For many months their children have been entirely neglected. They do not go to school and have drifted away from all the elevating influences of religion. Their casual life in the streets leads to begging and other evils. It has been decided to open a school for them which will be placed in charge of two qualified Belgian teachers. One pressing difficulty was to find suitable accommodation, but now through the kind offices of Mr. Kelland a building has been obtained free of charge, and we understand that the school for these refugee children will be opened at once.

* * *

THE anniversary of the outbreak of war was observed on Wednesday in a manner entirely suitable to the occasion. There was no bluster or gaudy pageantry, but a solemn dedication of the people to their perilous task and a pledge that with God's help they will be faithful to it to the end. The King went to the national service in St. Paul's almost like a private citizen. He was simply a humble worshipper in the presence of the Lord of All. The address by the Archbishop of Canterbury had in it the ringing note of courage: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith; quit you like men; be strong";

but it was also a call to penitence for everything that has been unworthy in our service of the highest.

A year has gone by [he said] since we set our hands to this fearful task. We have learned much, we have given our very best and bravest, and, before God, we believe it is worth while. And now, as the second year of our high emprise begins, we realise, far better than we did last August, our country's claim upon us all. Please God, no man or woman here is going to leave it unanswered, unfulfilled. That offering can be a very sacred thing if it be given in the name of Him in whom we citizens of a Christian land believe. He surely calls us as a people, His people, to penitence and prayer—penitence for forgetfulness and waywardness, for lust and sloth, for selfishness and lack of discipline. And to-day, as we gird ourselves anew, we think upon what we His children might have been, and are not. But He is here, and we can speak to Him to-day. We do. Lord, we believe; help Thou our unbelief.

* * *

IT is remarkable how naturally words like these come to us in the midst of the vastest military preparations which we have ever known. No great war was ever carried on with so little noise. The sense of its deep moral seriousness has dimmed its blazonry. We do not want to see our King appear "in shining armour," or to shout our defiance in arrogant military display. We are still citizens before we are soldiers, and children of God trying to honour His law in our hearts before we are Englishmen. When some mournful friend feels it to be his duty to warn us that the whole country is being captured by the evil spirit of militarism, we can only wonder in what dark cave he spends his days. No military caste is riding rough-shod over us. We have ceased to care who belong to the profession and who are soldiers for the duration of the war. Our citizen-officers have carried their own spirit everywhere, and no set of men devoted to the grim tasks of war were ever so free from military ambition for its own sake. They are keen, industrious and reckless in courage, because they are anxious to return to the ordered ways of peace. A military state on the Prussian model is the last thing they wish to create.

* * *

WE need not follow the daily press and attempt any summary of the lessons of the past twelve months. Perhaps all that need be said is that we have lived more intensely than we have ever done before and we have gained experience through living. Many of the things which we did twelve months ago we should not do now, but it does not follow that we were very foolish and incompetent to do them then and that somebody ought to be blamed. Personally we never had much affection for the motto "Business as usual." But, none the less, it may have served a useful purpose during the weeks when it was displayed by every shop as a patriotic badge. It helped to keep people hopeful and busy during a difficult period of transition and saved them from panic. We have had to lay it aside and to put "Nothing as usual" in its place, and we have done it on the whole with extraordinary cheerfulness, for we see now, as even men of keen imagination did not see then, that this is not a struggle in which the army and navy and the Government can manage things for us. We are all engaged in it, and no man must stand aside, or put his own interests before those of the country, or refuse his full share of the common burden.

* * *

BUT perhaps the most striking lesson which experience has brought is the strength of the ties which bind us to our Allies. Sympathy, mutual understanding and unswerving loyalty to one another are not only unimpaired, they have grown in depth and volume in spite of the strain of bitter disappointments and terrible sufferings. It is an axiom of Prussian statecraft that alliances are mercenary and can be broken up by astute bargaining or intrigue. It must be a cause of bitter chagrin to Germany that her cunning reliance upon the baseness of human nature has been completely baffled. She has had to face stupendous moral facts, which have never entered into her calculations. In trying to sow suspicion she has only become more deeply suspected herself. Even Russia has failed her, and has turned to England and France for the deliverance of her soul from the crushing weight of Prussianised methods of government and treacherous plots to suborn the loyalty of her subjects. We are all wide awake now, and none of us is likely to become the victim of newspaper campaigns or sinister rumours made in Germany. Once again the Allies have made it quite clear that they stand or fall together and there will be no separate peace.

* * *

THE appeal of the Pope for peace, which he has addressed to the belligerent nations, will be received with the respect due to his position, but it will be with a cold respect. For it is merely a document of pious sentiment and exhortation, from which every word which could give offence has been excluded. Underlying it is the tacit assumption that no moral principle is involved in the war and that all the combatants are equally to blame. He addresses them as wayward children who are fighting simply to gratify the lust of their own hearts. "Let the mutual will to destroy be laid aside," he says; but this is to misconceive the whole situation. At the close of a year it is clearer even than it was at the beginning that the war has long been planned by Germany to gratify her dream of domination, and she has carried it on with calculated cruelty and entire disregard of the obligations of justice and honour. About all this the Papacy is discreetly silent. It thus abdicates its claim to be the moral instructor of the nations. For the rebuke of wrong and the inflexible demands of righteousness it substitutes an eloquent description of the miseries of war and a sentimental appeal for peace. We do not believe that such an appeal can possibly succeed, or that its success would do anything to fortify us against similar aggression in the future. Deeper than our reverence for peace must be our reverence for justice. We must approach the problem of international peace by cultivating first of all respect for international law.

* * *

WE are glad to find that the official organ of the International Arbitration League is in close agreement with the attitude which we have consistently maintained on this subject against some of our pacifist friends. The following passage is taken from a leading article on 'Peace Proposals' in The Arbitrator :—

In the last resort justice comes before peace. Mankind, we believe, can be persuaded to accept the process of law instead of the anarchy of brute force as the means of adjusting differences between nations, but it will never willingly choose peace for its own sake apart from justice.... Pacifists must get out of their heads the notion that peace is promoted by merely making appeals or demands for it, regardless of time and circumstances. To cry aloud for an end to be put to the terrible carnage now going on does not necessarily serve a useful purpose. No such feeling animates the overwhelming majority of the nation. We have to face the stern realities of the situation as it is. The militarism which has outraged Belgium and almost every international sanction is unbroken. Whilst it is, there can be no peace, and there will be none. Unless the progressive forces in Germany can rid themselves of their worst enemy, it must be left to the armies and navies of the Allies to render it impotent. The psychological moment will come when the peace movement can speak with effect; but for the present it must occupy itself in thrashing out proposals for the reconstruction of international relations after the war is ended.

* * *

THE same issue of The Arbitrator contains a stirring message from the Editor of The Hibbert Journal, which it is a pleasure to transfer to our own columns.

I believe that there never was a time in the history of nations when the issue between Good and Evil was so transparently clear as it is at the present moment. It seems to me that every Briton may throw himself, heart and soul and body, into the cause of his country, with that absolute peace of conscience, and entire disregard of the consequences to himself, which come to a man when, and only when, he knows himself to be serving the right, the true, and the just. It is unlikely that such an opportunity of definitely placing ourselves, and all we possess, at the service of the Good will ever come to us again. Not to take the opportunity is to incur an everlasting reproach. To take it is to place oneself in a position where, whatever happens, no real evil can befall us. And if we all take it together, the nation will come out of the ordeal regenerated and purified and ready for achievements nobler than any of which the past bears record.

* * *

UNDER the dismal title 'Drunkenness and the War' The Manchester Guardian published a fairly cheerful article on Tuesday. The total convictions for drunkenness in 1914 show a decrease of 5,049 compared with 1913. This decrease, it is stated, was not spread over the whole year. In every month of the first half of the year except May—when they were down by three—the figures were higher than in the previous year; and in every month of the second half of the year they were lower. The most rapid decrease occurred in the north of England during August and September. Greater London did not reveal such a striking improvement as other places, and the total figures in the Metropolitan area for 1914 were higher than for 1913. It must be remembered that a decrease in convictions may be due to various causes and does not necessarily indicate a decrease in excessive drinking.

LOSS AND GAIN.

MANY people hoped that the position would be much better than it is at the close of the first year of war, and that the end would be in sight. There is consequently a mood, we will not call it depression, but of mournfulness as we read the record of the past twelve months and remember all the things which we might have done differently. The first strong excitement has passed away, sorrow and suffering have claimed their victims through the length and breadth of the land and we have settled down to the routine of being at war with little leisure of mind to think of anything else. There are few hearts so recreant as to ask whether it has been worth while, but many of us begin to feel that loss and gain are too evenly matched or allow ourselves to drift into a deepening anxiety about the result. How will it be if at the end we have simply to cry quits and nothing is settled after all?

This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light,
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.
Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea
Fore'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea
Fore'd to retire by fury of the wind:
Sometimes the flood prevails, and then the wind;
Now one the better, then another best;
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast.
Yet neither conqueror nor conquered:
So is the equal poise of this fell war.

The words sound prophetic. We are startled by the accuracy of the description. Only we must be on our guard against the regrets of the disenchanted king and his deep sorrow for himself—

Here on this mole hill will I sit me down.
To whom God will, there be the victory!

For it depends upon ourselves, upon the stoutness of our hearts and the patient tenacity of our wills, whether this menace shall be removed far from our homes, and public right shall be vindicated in the sight of men, and redress be won for the innocent victims of the war. These large interests of humanity are committed to us as a sacred duty, and we dare not relax our efforts till the "equal poise" is changed into decisive victory.

We do not wish to be blind to all that we have lost. There are many things to be placed to the debit side of the account. The conditions under which we are living are unnatural and may exact terrible penalties. It is not good for any nation to be at enmity with another, and a quarrel which raises barriers of suspicion and misunderstanding is a public disaster. This is what has happened in our relations with Germany. The loss of her friendship is a thing which all sensible men must deplore. We did not desire it, and to many of us it seemed an incredible thing even while she was engaged in plotting against us. But now that it has happened we must deal honestly with the situation. This is no passing disagreement which calls merely for the medicine of a little patience and good temper. It is the clash of opposing principles, and it goes down to the roots of life, to the foundations of equity and right thinking and reverence for what is good and holy. For those who know Germany best, and do not merely indulge in sentimental theories of friendship without any close acquaintance with her people or her national mind, the loss is grievous and past repair. It is our respect for her that is gone. There is no longer any ground for mutual trust. We do not wish to dwell upon it any more than we think it wise to hide it or to pretend that it is not there. She was our friend and friendship has ceased, until repentance and reparation make it possible again. This is one of the moral disasters of the war. It is terribly saddening, and it is terribly wrong.

But we mention it now in order that like wise men, we may pass away from it. We must never allow it to weaken our strength or to make us blind to the value of our manifold compensations. Already the war has brought us moral gains of more consequence than many victories in the field. If our rather one-sided friendship with Germany has been sacrificed to her military ambition, common danger and the need of common succour have bound us closely to our Allies. We know them, and we respect them as we never did before. And this friendship has upon it no taint of mercenary motives. We cannot remember any other Alliance in history which has been animated by such generous idealism, or shown itself capable of inspiring the same kind of popular enthusiasm for freedom and goodness. We all feel that we are fighting for something of larger public concern than our own safety. The soul of the armies is the soul of the countries to which they belong, in its bold defiance of barbarous strength and its quiet acceptance of suffering for the sake of a noble cause. We are nearer than we were, even a short time ago, to a true comity of nations. Never before has there been so rich a promise of enduring international friendship.

We have been a good deal chastened lately by our domestic critics. If they have saved us from the snares of complacency and made us more sensitive to our sins of omission, let us try to be grateful in spite of their unpleasant manners. But they are little better than enemies in disguise if they encourage low spirits and discontent at a time when our hearts ought to be lifted up in wonder, love, and praise. These large armies which we have raised, they have sprung into life through the noble dedication of our young men. This new sense of national unity which meets us everywhere, it has softened class distinctions and driven the grosser forms of selfishness into dark hiding places and filled us all with a passionate desire to help and to serve. Behind all the activity of our training camps and factories and in the homes of the people mighty forces of the Spirit are at work. We do not wish to boast in any way of the greatness of what we have achieved. We want simply to remember that it represents consecration, self-sacrifice, a stern sense of duty, the willing surrender of material comfort for unseen ends.

All this must be set against our losses. It is, indeed, what we have always believed, that our misfortunes may be turned to glorious gain and disaster itself be an open gateway of life. We knew this formerly by the hearing of the ear. Now we have seen it for ourselves. We have passed through the fire of discipline, and at last we understand.

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

Love is and was my Lord and King,
And in his presence I attend
To hear the tidings of my friend,
Which every hour his couriers bring.

Love is and was my King and Lord,
And will be, though as yet I keep Within his court on earth, and sleep
Encompassed by his faithful guard,

And hear at times a sentinel
Who moves about from place to place,
And whispers to the worlds of space,
In the deep night, that all is well.

In Memoriam.

MY heart shall indite a good matter :
I will bless the Lord who giveth me
light :

I will say to the sorrowful, be comforted :
and to them that wait for the morning,
be glad of heart :

For the glory of the Lord is risen upon the earth : the day breaketh and the shadows flee away.

Lo, the Master calleth his servants :
be ready to meet him, O my soul :

Who forgiveth all thy sins : who healeth all thine infirmities :

Who openeth thy way into the kingdom of heaven : who maketh thee heir of eternal life.

O Lord our God, lift up the light of thy countenance upon us : renew thy promise
as in the days of old.

In thy light we shall see light : and thou wilt lead us to thy holy hill :

And dwell with us and be our God :
and the days of our lamentation shall be ended :

And all tribes shall be gathered together :
and thy spirit poured out upon
all flesh :

The old men shall dream dreams : and the young men shall see visions.

Then shall the earth clothe her in beautiful raiment : she shall shine as the daughter of the Great King.

The houses of mourning shall be full of light : and the rod of the oppressor shall be broken for ever :

And man shall rejoice in the work of his hands : and the habitations of darkness shall be no more.

Be glad, O ye nations, and shout for joy :
be strong and of a good courage,
ye servants of the Lord :

For the living God is our helper : he that sitteth above the heavens shall bring it to pass.

Glory to him that hath his throne in the heavens : and his kingdom in the heart of his servants.

His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom :
of his dominion there shall be no end.

From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.

O GOD, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace ; give us grace seriously to lay to heart the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions. Take away all hatred and prejudice, and whatsoever else may hinder us from godly union and concord :
that as there is but one body and one spirit, and one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, so we may henceforth be all of one heart, and of one soul ;
and, united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity, may glorify thy blessed name for ever and ever. AMEN.

From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.

THE NONCONFORMIST PIONEERS.

THE unexpectedly wide interest shown at Whit-week in the formation of our Historical Society encourages the hope that even in these times some notes on a book of great importance in this connexion may be found useful. The book consists of three big volumes, two of which were published in 1911, and the third (which,
as the author says, is really an "Introduction" to the others) was issued last year. The title is, "Original Records of Early Nonconformity under Persecution and Indulgence," the publisher is Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, and as the price of the third volume is 25s. net,
the cost of the whole may be roughly inferred.
It is to Prof. G. Lyon Turner, of Cheshunt, that we are indebted for the book, and how great the debt is can only be measured by those who closely study his pages and discern the immense toil evidently given to them.*

The first two volumes consist of documents, hitherto only partly accessible in more or less ephemeral prints, and here first issued as a whole. They are
(a) "Episcopal Returns" made in 1665,
1669, and 1676, by order of Arch-

* All three volumes are available for reference at Essex Hall.

bishop Sheldon, respecting the Nonconformists known to the clerical authorities in the different dioceses, so far as these "Returns" are preserved in vol. 639 of the Codices Tenisoniani in Lambeth Palace Library, with certain omissions from the 1665 MSS., and (b) "Licence Documents," as contained in vols. 320 and 321 of the State Papers, Ch. II., and three "Entry Books" relating thereto, all these being at the Record Office.

The "Episcopal Returns" are for various reasons incomplete, the temper of the Bishops concerned being one of the reasons ; but they suffice for a fairly adequate estimate of the magnitude and condition of the Nonconformist movement in the years referred to. They give lists of the conventicles known to exist in the respective parishes, the sects and numbers of the attendants, the names of the "Teachers or Preachers," and in some cases those of their "Abettors." The fullest particulars are those given for 1669, seven years after the Ejectionment, five after the first Conventicle Act, four after the Five Mile Act. Those for 1676 represent the state of things six years after the second Conventicle Act, and four after the short year of Indulgence, 1672-73. Only a portion of the 1676 report is preserved at Lambeth, but Professor Lyon Turner refers students to the William Salt Library at Stafford for a complete MS. copy. His analysis of the material available is carefully and thoroughly carried out ; all that need be said on this point here is that the numbers reported are surprisingly large, considering the harshness of the laws set in motion against the early Nonconformists.

The "Licence Documents" are of greater bulk and of more directly personal interest. True, as Prof. Turner says, the Calendar of State Papers for 1672-73 has been so well drawn up that most investigators have been content to consult its précis of the originals, when seeking information as to the issue or refusal of licences to persons or places in which they were interested. But a sight of these originals, as transcribed into these volumes, especially with the transcriber's notes and comments, proves at once his statement that to be satisfied with the bare facts of the Calendarist is to lose an immense amount of vital interest. Prof. Turner avowedly writes as a warm admirer of the heroic men and women whose names crowd his pages, and the more closely we follow the story of one and another as elucidated by him the more infectious his enthusiasm becomes. Under his skilful touch the dry bones come to life ; what was but a name becomes a portrait, and what was but a bundle of withered papers takes on the fresh colours of the busy, actual world. And to make the impression the more vivid, he not only tells us what he has gathered as to the status and history of those who applied for licences under Charles II.'s Declaration of Indulgence ; he makes us intimately acquainted with the officials to whom they applied, and with the very clerks in the office. The finishing touch of the realist is given when he supplies us with an excellent plan of Whitehall palace, and traces out the paths by which the wistful applicants would journey thither from London and its vicinity, or from far distant places.

The author thus circumstantially shows the overt drama; he also takes us behind the scenes. In every political crisis there are persons of high importance to the action who are hidden from the public eye and may escape the notice of the historian. But to overlook such unseen forces is to miss a great part of the play. Prof. Turner lays his hand upon several of these reclusive actors and brings them to the lime-light. One of them, indeed, has not heretofore lurked altogether obscure, for he is no other than that celebrated Colonel Thomas Blood who once on a time almost succeeded in stealing the regalia from the Tower of London. By what surprising turns, and owing to what unsuspected qualities, this romantic person became a negotiator between the King and the poor painful preachers of the Word the reader may discover in these pages. Another go-between was a "Mr. Church," respecting whom even Prof. Turner can find very little to say. But Church was associated with a Dr. Nicholas Butler, who, in spite of the fact that he is not known to the "Dictionary of National Biography," turns out to have been very notable alike in his personal character and in the share he took in the matter of these Licences. Some sixty pages are given here, and not one too many, to the story of Butler's "strange and fascinating career"; they form one of many episodes that make this third volume itself a fascinating one. We see how the thing was devised, how it was "worked" and the routine prescribed, who first and who last took advantage of the royal (but unhappily illegal) offer of freedom to worship and preach, the romantic spelling of the applicants, and the occasional blunders made in the office; we are even made sure of the human fact that tips were expected by the clerks. Of course all history cannot be treated so, but once in a way, and in connexion with events pathetically important to us, we may be grateful to have it so. We shall know our history the better for being able to smell the sealing wax.

Among the most interesting personal descriptions given by Prof. Turner are those of the men who were busiest in getting licences for distant friends. One of these is John Hickes, the famous preacher who stands first in the ministers' list of our old chapel at Portsmouth, and who ended his adventurous career on the scaffold for joining in Monmouth's rebellion. Another is James Innes, a son of an Ejectee, whose remarkable success in obtaining licences (probably with some fees accruing for the service) suggests that he was no unworthy representative of the genius of North Britain. But further instances must be spared. Enough has been said to assure the student that, in spite of its bigness and its copious tabulations, the work is by no means a dry accumulation of "facts and figures" heaped up after the deadly dull manner attributed to statisticians and German experts. Further encouragement is given by the author himself, who has devoted some pains to showing the student how to use his book in the pursuit of inquiry. Naturally, in spite of every care in a work of the kind, running to more than 2,000 large pages, errors have occurred, but these the author has done his best to correct in appended lists which should be carefully noted. The prevailing accuracy, which is a quality religiously to be coveted by any historian worthy of the name, is due not only to the author's own unwearied zeal, but to the assistance of several hands eminent in this kind of work, including the Rev. Alexander Gordon, whose many notes and illustrations are a special feature of the book. As to the inferences and theories put forward upon the basis of the facts recorded, the reader will, of course, use his own discretion; one gathers, however, that while writing with enthusiasm and vivacity, the author's judgment is not lightly given in cases of controversy. In particular, attention may be directed to the bearing of these documents upon the claims and history of the "English Presbyterians." It is suggestive to note that this quite invaluable contribution to Nonconformist history resulted from a "challenge" thrown out in the Transactions of the Congregational Historical Society in 1904. Who knows but that ten years hence, if Europe lasts so long, the Unitarian Historical Society will have borne similar fruit—better is hardly possible.

Meanwhile the memory of our brave and indomitable pioneers is no bad medicine for minds needing a tonic to-day.

W. G. TARRANT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

WOMEN'S WAGES.

APPEAL BY THE WOMEN'S INDUSTRIAL COUNCIL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The increased employment of women in work hitherto done by men, may either enrich the country, or impoverish it. Every new person who undertakes productive industry under proper conditions adds to the general wealth, since all of us are consumers, and those who do not produce are a charge upon the community. But if those who do produce are underpaid, the whole basis of national wealth becomes insecure, the very citizens who mainly create that wealth deteriorate, their labour deteriorates too, and the whole community grows poorer. In the health, the intelligence, the efficiency of its workers consists every country's real wealth, and those qualities can be maintained only by an adequate level of pay. Now women workers, as a whole, have been, in this country, greatly underpaid, much worse paid than any inferiority in quantity or quality of their output would warrant. In many branches of industry the competition of these lower-paid fellow-workers has either ousted men or reduced the level of men's pay. Working women and working men have both been wronged and have both suffered, and there is now a danger that this wrong and this suffering may recur on a very large scale. This danger, which is truly a national one, can be averted only by women being paid for their work at the same rates as men. Where a woman, that is to say, is doing exactly the same work as a man, she should be paid what a man would be paid. Where—as is not infrequently the case—some process is omitted by the woman, (such as cleaning or oiling machinery or carrying away printers' "forms" when "made up"), her pay should be lessened by the precise value of the omitted process and not by a penny more. In regard to this question all classes of citizens have a duty to perform. Employers do well to employ women; they do ill to pay them at lower rates than men. Women do well to work; they do ill to accept lower pay than men and so compete unfairly with their brothers and husbands. Trade Unions do well in helping women to organise, in inviting them into their own ranks and in supporting their demand for equal pay; they do ill (and moreover are doomed to failure) in attempting to keep women out.

Finally, every voter in the country does ill who fails to protest against the unequal payment of women in the service of the Government, that is, of the nation. The Treasury, which fixes the remuneration of such workers and which should set a faultless example to all other paymasters, stands badly in need of economic conversion.

We are, yours faithfully,

CLEMENTINA BLACK (President.)

HERBERT BURROWS (Vice-President.)

L. WYATT PAPWORTH

(Secretary and Treasurer.)

7, John Street, Adelphi, Strand, W.C.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

A NEW LITURGY.

ORDERS OF PUBLIC WORSHIP FOR USE IN THE CHAPEL OF MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

No small part of the value of a liturgy consists in its familiarity. It is common prayer endeared by common use. The Anglican Prayer Book is a wise combination of new and old. Some of its most familiar portions were novelties in the time of the reformers, but they were blended with a wealth of material which was already approved by experience and mellow with centuries of worship. The compiler of these two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College Oxford—there is no need to conceal the fact that it is the new Principal, Dr. Jacks—has adopted the same plan. He has gone to the ancient sources of Christian devotion as every wise man must do, and he has combined those precious and familiar things with others which will have to win acceptance and can only do so if they have the same enduring qualities. In general arrangement he has followed the Prayer Book model; but he has also preserved the essence of continuity in the deeper things of the spirit. These services have a place within the historical tradition of the Christian Church. It is not merely that the language of Christian affection is used with happy confidence; the quality of spiritual life which they express, the needs to which they minister, the confession of sin, the healing of forgiveness, the sense of deliverance, the security and peace of fellowship with God—these things link the worshipper at once with all who recognise that Christianity is not only a vision of perfection, but also a divine method of attainment. They pass beyond the cold abstractions of moral culture and glow with the conquering faith of the religion of salvation.

From the literary point of view the seven original Canticles are the most interesting feature of the book. Few modern experiments of this kind have been quite satisfying and successful. If it is difficult to write a modern collect, it is tenfold more difficult to write a modern psalm. Can these words, interesting and helpful as they are, sing their way into our affections like the 'Magnificat' and the 'Te Deum'? We doubt whether they are quite rich enough in lyrical quality. Their language is, perhaps, a little too suggestive of a Biblical mosaic which has been skilfully constructed. For the present, however, we prefer to suspend our judgment. It is only when they are wedded to music and become the common language of the congregation, that they will reveal their rich beauties, or it may be their liturgical defects. But however well they may stand this test many people are likely to share our own feeling of disappointment that no place has been found in these services for some of the ancient songs of the Church. The need of familiarity and proved worth has been recognised in the prayers. Is it wise to give quite such a large place to new work in the Canticles?

We cannot close this notice without expressing our surprise at the strange and forbidding announcement which is inserted like a rubric for the worshipper at the end. "These services are introduced," so it runs, "as a means of giving expression to the collective and social aspects of worship and calling the congregation into active participation in the offices of praise and prayer. But they are neither imposed as exclusive forms in which the spirit and traditions of the College are to find expression in worship in this place, nor are they to be taken as authoritatively endorsing or excluding any system of theological belief." These words may easily be construed into an invitation to believe nothing and to accept nothing except the divine right to doubt and disagree. They greet the worshipper as he rises from his knees, like a chill wind from the critical world which sterilises the spirit of worship and cripples the high confidence of faith. We cannot believe that this is the intention. We attribute them rather to a lack of humour and to the blindness which the constant use of high-sounding rhetoric about freedom induces in some sensible people. Perhaps the inverted commas, within which they are enclosed, betray their origin as a quotation from the minutes of a committee, and committees are seldom conscious of their own absurdities. But we ask quite seriously whether Manchester College is satisfied at the present moment to be the victim of its own phrases and negations? If it has no Gospel for the world except the virtue of the open mind, and cannot even invite men to say their prayers together without warning them not to believe more than they like, its spacious buildings and costly equipment will not avail to save it from religious failure. It is because these words are a danger signal, and reveal how sorely the College is still hampered in attacking the real tasks of religion by abstract theories of liberty which have little positive content, that we venture to call attention to them in this emphatic way.

THE HEALING OF NATIONS. By Edward Carpenter. (Allen and Unwin, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; paper, 2s. net.)

WAR is a disease, a disorder of the body politic, but a curable disease, according to Edward Carpenter. So, like a social physician he attempts first to diagnose the trouble, and then set out the way of mending. Without patriotic bias, in the cool detached manner of a scientific investigator, he probes the hidden causes of the present hideous conflict. If the mass of the people of any nation never want war, and have no quarrel with the mass of any other nation, how comes the horrible thing about? There is a military party in every nation, but nowhere obviously as powerful as in Germany. And a machine is made to be used not to rust and rot. Then there are armament makers to whom war means good business. There are members of the Diplomatic Service. If they mean peace and goodwill, they have utterly failed; if they meant mischief, the results could not be much worse. That they belong to a distinct class is exemplified by the fact that 67 per cent. of the candidates for the English Diplomatic Corps are drawn from Eton alone, and one of the qualifications is that each must have at least £400 a year of his own. Then there is a body of men desirous of dominion, of exercising their will over others. War is a means to that end. All these classes have a direct vested interest in war. But none of these or all together could initiate war unless they were helped in imposing their desires upon the people of their respective nations by a widespread commercial error. It is the mistake which is at the bottom of all commercial jealousy, that the financial prosperity of the country one trades with is inimical to one's own prosperity. The commercial magnates of the various countries regard each other as rivals. They seek to diminish each other's trade, to curb each other's activity, to reduce each other's power. Their money, controlling the destinies of the press, furnishes the means of guiding public opinion in the direction they desire.

Ample evidence exists of German jealousy of England's vast colonies, with their huge markets. She long prepared to challenge England's mercantile supremacy and to oust her from her place as the biggest trading power. She chose her own time for striking at her. Carpenter, though he tries to make out a case for Germany, has to admit that the moment of the precipitation of war was chosen and insisted on by her.

"In the present day—though there may be other influences—it is evident enough that rampant and unmeasured commercial greed, concentrating itself in a special class, is the main cause, the tap-root of the whole business. And this, equally evidently, springs out of the innumerable greed of individuals, the desire of private persons to get rich quickly at all costs, to make their gains out of others' losses, to take advantage of each other, to triumph in success regardless of others' failures. And these unworthy motives again spring obviously out of the mean and materialistic ideals of life which still have sway amongst us—the ideals of wealth and luxury and display of which the horrors of war are the sure and certain obverse." And the way out? "Nothing but the general abandonment of the system of living on the labour of others will avail. There is no other way." The responsibility for war he therefore throws upon the system of competitive capitalism favoured by the well-to-do classes in all countries, a system that violates every principle of humaneness, of brotherhood, of Christianity, and the only hope for the future is by way of social democracy, the international union of the working masses throughout Europe in taking charge of their own government and shaping the western world to the heart's desire of the peoples that inhabit it.

"Unless we can reorganise our western societies on a real foundation of actual life, of practical capacity, of honest and square living, and of mutual help, instead of mutual robbery, the social machine will collapse again." He does not foresee happy times after the war. The book is a serious warning, and many share his fears that the problems that shall face us after the war will be more serious than the problems of war itself. The old order has failed, the old social chaos rather. The semi-feudal system, with its privileged classes and pampered idleness, its large-acred landlords, and ponderous savants, and Machiavellian millionaires, all flourishing on a floor below which a vast multitude of the ignorant and disinherited sweated and sweltered through a miserable devitalised existence of drudgery and wage-slavery—has furnished no security against the marauder, the pirate and the murderer. Materialist science has shown herself in her true colours as the handmaiden of Odin and Thor, the church patronised by the tyrant and the oppressor is dumb, and the crowd of the inefficient awakened in the hour of national peril to a sense of honour, find themselves helpless before unscrupulous formidable brutal efficiency. After the shrieking nightmare is past, are we to go back again to the old travesty of society that engendered its tragedies? The classes that make war cannot carry on war without the masses, whom too long they have hounded to do their dread work. There is the hope that the men who come back sobered by the colossal Inferno in which they have participated from a sense of grim duty, may ask for some stake in the country for which they have fought and their comrades died. Carpenter also rests his hope upon women receiving a larger share in the political and social work of the future. He has probably seen how slow social progress is, not to indulge in too roseate a hope; but if the masses could be made to understand, never again should a conscience-reft company of military experts let loose a hell of devastation on a world whose deepest hunger is for brotherhood and fellowship and peace.

J. T. D.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

29TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,435	17	8
Mr. Arnold Lupton	1	0	0
Mr. Edward J. Blake (second donation)	10	0	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence (third donation)	20	0	0
Mrs. de J. du Vallon (fourth donation)	2	0	0
The Staff of the Southwark Secondary School, per Miss Callender	3	10	6
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (monthly donation)	4	0	0
Miss M. Preston	2	0	0
Miss E. C. Harvey (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss M. C. Smith (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. F. H. Russell (fourth donation)	5	0	0
"H."	2	0	0
Mr. Lewis Williams	2	2	0
Mrs. Harold Thomas (second donation)	1	0	0
Miss L. H. Leonard	1	0	0
Col. R. P. B. Rodick (third donation)	3	0	0
Mrs. J. Winsor (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. D. Martineau (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss L. Martineau	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Cave-Browne-Cave	1	0	0
"A. J. A." Deal (fifth donation)	0	5	0
"A. W." (second donation)	5	0	0
Bootle Free Church, per Rev. H. W. Hawkes (second monthly donation)	1	10	0
The Misses Badland (second donation)	2	0	0
Mr. George Banks (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Mr. J. E. Hilditch (second donation)	5	0	0
"K. K." (second donation)	1	0	0
Miss Leigh Smith (third donation)	10	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. R. Stewart	2	2	0
Mr. S. Gilfillan (sixth donation)	1	0	0
The Rev. W. and Mrs. Jellie (second donation)	1	1	0
	£5,535	13	2

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. A. H. Worthington; Mrs. M. R. Green; Cardiff Branch Women's League (per Mrs. A. C. Fox); Mrs. Helsby; Mrs. Notcutt; Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor (three instalments); Clapham Ladies' Relief Committee (per Mrs. Duke); High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, War Relief Fund (per Miss Guildford); Miss Roscoe; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Mrs. Sturge Moore; Leeds Branch Women's League (per Mrs. David); Ilford Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Fyson); Miss Miller; N. and W. Finchley Branch Hornsey Women's Liberal Association (per Mrs. Davis); Mrs. Ernest Cook; Mrs. H. B. Ledgerfield; The Girls' Friendly Society, Rugby (per Miss Thompson); Mrs. and Miss Carter; Finchley Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss Horton's School, "Tremarth"; The Misses Kingston; Stand Unitarian Senior Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thackeray); Sunday School Class, Norcliff Chapel (per Miss E. M. Greg); Mrs. Roscoe and her maids; Mrs. M. H. Dunkerley; Mrs. Notcutt; Mrs. Titterton; Monton Church Women's Union (per Mrs. Nanson); Mrs. Tudor Jones; Miss E. S. Hollins.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE OXFORD SUMMER MEETING.

THE GENIUS OF ANCIENT GREECE AND ITS INFLUENCE ON THE MODERN WORLD.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

ONE objection made to holding the session as usual this year was the opportunity it apparently gave for forgetting; for shutting one's self up in refined intellectual contemplation away from the menacing actualities of the time. No doubt we all have to justify to ourselves and others the fact that we are taking a holiday when things themselves are so awful and so pitiless. Principal Jacks, preaching at Manchester College Chapel on Sunday to an audience probably largely composed of members attending the session, spoke plainly on the point. He said: "We are all public persons now; all we do has a public reference. We are all men and women with a mission beyond the area of our private interests. We must all help our country. Unless we are helping our country we have no right to the protection she is affording us day by day, to the protection won for us by the men who day by day are exposing their lives. But for their valour we should not be here; Oxford would be as Louvain. What return shall we give for this privilege of quiet study, our homes left behind us in safety—this study of the people who laid the foundations of western civilisation? All smaller aims and objects are not for these times... That we may strengthen through knowledge of a great past a wise citizenship in this critical hour and the yet more critical hour when peace is made; that we may combine such a study with the other great forces working for peace, and for peace which shall last; this alone is the aim which can justify any mental detachment." It is not, then, that we are flying to a little shelter from the storms of the world—at least, to the more thoughtful of the hearers gathered in this fairest of home cities. It is rather that, in contemplative contact with the greatest creative efforts in the history of humanity as we are, we may be helped to face not ignobly nor ignorantly in our several spheres the great creative act that lies before us when this bitterness is overpast.

Another objection urged was the remoteness of the subject from present events and anxieties. All the lectures given up to the time of writing have most effectually disposed of this. The appropriateness of the study of Hellenism in the face of present problems is amazing. "If it is true," said Mr. J. A. R. Marriott in his opening address on Greek Polity, "that our debt to Greece is overwhelming, how can it be remote from modernity?" The best justification for the session, however, is given in Dr. Wicksteed's fine words which formed a sort of preface to the meeting: "In this time of travail and anguish of the nations, it is not so much relief and distraction that we seek (when not directly engaged in the work demanded of each one of us by the crisis) as a renewed power of realising, in and below the present storm and havoc, the abiding issues of life that underlie and will survive them. We are fortunate, therefore, in having chosen as the subject of our study a civilisation and a literature that so pre-eminently appeal to the immaterial side of life and stand for its permanent being, as distinct from its transient happenings, as does Hellas. The race whose prehistoric poets could evolve the materials of the Iliad and Odyssey, whose scattered and often harassed or persecuted thinkers, intellectual adventurers, disillusioned politicians and sojourning exiles could rear the fabric of systematic thought which still dominates our highest thinking, whose lyrists could make events equivalent to those of the cricket-field, the race-course, or the river of our day the occasion for songs of immortal beauty and wisdom, and whose dramatists and historians made the long agony of the Peloponnesian war yield a 'possession for ever' to humanity—surely this race can even yet 'purge the emotions of pity and terror in our souls' by bringing each man's own sense of compassion and apprehension into relation with the universal sufferings and aspirations of humanity, and with that august over-ruling march of destiny or providence which we so dimly gauge. No study could better tend to ennoble our sorrows and purify our resolves."

Not merely then with an intellectual curiosity, but a sense of walking on holy ground, we approach this vast temple of ideas whence issued the love of knowledge, the love of rational beauty, the love of freedom, whereby the uses of life have been incalculably ennobled. We are to consider what Hellenism means as opposed to Barbarism, and that at the very moment when the great things Greece initiated and stood for are in danger. And as Professor Gilbert Murray said in his opening lecture on the Greek Epic, though we may feel diffident in turning our thoughts to any remoter subject than the subject which absorbs us all, it is clear that we who must remain at home have a duty to perform in trying to keep clear in our minds the standard of civilisation now being threatened in the world. We cannot allow now more than ever the standards derived so largely from the bright and heroic records of Greece to fall in our minds or in our midst.

The Inaugural Address was given by Dr. Mahaffy, the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, but unfortunately various causes, among which was the intervention of "Great Tom," combined to render his lecture (like all the lectures it was delivered in the Christ Church Hall) inaudible to most of the audience.

Sunday was an interesting day. At Manchester College Chapel it was marked by a new Order of Service and the introduction of a surpliced choir. A noticeable feature in the new Orders of Service is the addition of Meditations and Prayers for Private Use before Worship. The worshipper is given the means of making a definite "act of adoration." "Place thyself in God's Presence; behold Him with the eye of Faith; let thy desires actually fix on Him as the subject of thy worship, and the reason of thy hope, and the fountain of thy blessing." So from the moment of entering the Chapel the worshipper is brought into reverent contemplation of the "Light of our seeing and Soul of our souls; within all spirits and beyond all worlds," and the whole Order of Worship should worthily assist him to remain at that elevation. The singing was interesting; but the opinion may perhaps be ventured that it was taken too slowly.

The sermon by Dr. Jacks was devoted to the subject of peace. We were praying now for peace, he said; but what kind of peace? All kinds of peace were not equally good. Some peace was worse than any war (Dr. Jacks carefully pointed out that he was not advocating war). There was a kind of lethargy, indifference to high things, base material contentment, deadness of soul, when men had lost the sense of high values worth fighting for, which was worse than war. When peace covered up spiritual unrest, when there was a suppressed quarrel which was one with demoralisation and decay and belittlement of soul, there was more destruction to life-values than mere accidental losses in battle. Did we want a spurious peace like the peace before the war? Let them look back five or ten years. Were ever minds less poised, less clear, less concentrated, less at rest than they were then? What turmoil and confusion there were in society, politics, religion, philosophy! It seemed as if religious chaos and old night had broken confines. There was even arriving an habituation to this confusion and conscious disintegration of the social fabric, a critical interest in confusion of thought. Yet formally there was peace.

If peace brought back the spiritual and moral chaos they had before the war it would not be blessed. That would be deplorable, however the war ended, even with British triumph. True victory meant much more than delivery from Prussianism and militarism. It must mean a cessation from that class and personal self-seeking which absorbed men into pursuit of wealth and then quarrelled over its distribution; from insincerity, moral, religious, professional—or peace would be but a repetition of the spiritual anarchy of which the war was one dire product. But there was a hopeful side. The war had imposed a measure of peace on this inward strife, and they were now more truly at peace than they had been twelve months ago. The call of the war had given a centre of poise, a concentration of spiritual steadiness and purpose, and a peace of mind not in the country as a whole before. The common vision, common call, common task, all marked by immense agitation on the surface, showed a new central calm in the nation's life. There was thus a paradoxical peace in the very midst of war.

The interest was sustained in the evening when the Rev. W. Temple preached an arresting sermon at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. Christianity, he declared, made the heroic appeal. It was not just a gentle bearing on life and the little troubles of life; it was a readiness for all. It appealed to the spirit of adventure and was a religion for heroes; Christianity beckoned away to that unknown country which was apart from self, and the adventure of the Kingdom of Heaven was first and foremost a heroic adventure. The preacher found himself the other day at a meeting for considering the religious aspect of the war, and a friend of his who had gravely watched the proceedings beside him remarked in his ear, "These gatherings always consist of women and mild men!" Many people thought the same of Christianity—it was a religion for women and mild men. Every soldier who had gone to the front belied that; he gave a new meaning to the old words of the Christian religion. Contented people were given to regarding God as a remote official, as an employer of labour paying an exact wage for services given, as the agent of a great insurance system against eternity. Christianity was not like that. Our heroic chief, our "great captain Christ," showed by his teaching and his life that one must not approach God in a bargainingspirit. He demanded an absolute surrender and promised no more reward to us than He did to Christ. "I offer neither comfortable quarters nor wages," cried Garibaldi; "I offer hunger, thirst, homelessness, death. Let him who loves his country with his heart and not with his lips only, follow me!" They followed him. They followed him as they would never have done for an exactly stated reward, and they did what they would never have done for a reward. That was God's appeal—not for "mild men" but for heroes; not for talkers but doers; not for comfortable shirkers, but for fighters for the right. He offered no rewards that the selfish man could enjoy; not high wages, not comfortable quarters; but to share His own life.

LADYBARN HOUSE SCHOOL.

RETIREMENT OF MISS BEARD.

EDUCATION in Manchester, says the Manchester Guardian, will suffer a real loss through the retirement, which is now announced, of Miss Mary S. Beard from the head-mistresship of Ladybarn House School, the excellent co-educational school for boys and girls founded nearly half a century ago by that remarkable educational reformer Mr. William Herford, and for many years carried on by his daughter, Miss Caroline Herford, now a lecturer at Manchester University. Miss Beard succeeded Miss Herford eight years ago, and under her charge the school has greatly prospered and has fully maintained alike its usefulness and its ideals. It is difficult in these days of municipal schools and public endowments for a school possessing no such support and conducted on independent lines to keep its place in the front rank, but this school has shown that it can be done, and it is to be hoped that the day may never come when the dead uniformity of a State system will supersede original development and independent ideals in education, particularly in the education of young children.

Miss Beard's retirement is deeply regretted by the Council of the school. She brought to its service a breadth of interest and of intellectual outlook, combined with a sympathetic understanding and love of young children, which were bound to secure the affection and confidence of her pupils and to leave a permanent mark upon the school.

THE girls of the Plumstead Secondary School held a Sale of Work and Entertainments at the end of last term with the result that the headmistress, Miss Bartram, had the pleasure of sending a cheque for £100 to the funds of the English Red Cross Society.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birmingham.—A meeting of the congregation of Waverley Road Church, Birmingham, was held on July 24th, to receive important communications from the Minister and Vestry Committees. The Minister, the Rev. Gertrude von Petzold, placed before the meeting certain facts which necessitated an application for a leave of absence extending over twelve months. She reminded them of her several applications for naturalisation which, unfortunately, had not been granted. She called upon them to uphold the Church and its institutions in this time of trial, as they had done in the past, and to look forward to a time when she would be able, if they so wished, to work with them again for the cause of Christianity and the brotherhood of man. The unanimous applause of the meeting gave proof of the high esteem and great affection which the members and friends of the church have for Miss von Petzold. A resolution was submitted to the meeting asking them to grant the leave of absence suggested, which had become almost necessary owing to the war, and to re-affirm its unabated confidence in and affectionate regard for its minister, the Rev. Gertrude von Petzold, and further to pledge itself to loyally maintain and uphold the Church and its institutions pending her return. This was carried unanimously. Another meeting took place on July 29th for the presentation to Miss von Petzold and Miss R. Widmann of some token of remembrance. A considerable sum had been subscribed which enabled the congregation and friends of the church to present Miss von Petzold with a gold wristlet watch and Miss Widmann with a handbag containing a sum of money. There were presents from the Women's Class and also a few personal gifts. In thanking the meeting for these tokens of friendship Miss von Petzold and Miss Widmann gave expression to the hope that this would not be a complete separation but only a temporary one. There was no sad note. Cordial hand-shaking and best wishes concluded the meeting.

Cullompton.—On Thursday, July 29th, friends from Exeter, Taunton, and elsewhere, joined with the minister and people of Pound Square Chapel in celebrating the completion of their beautiful little House of Prayer by the erection and dedication of an organ. The new instrument, which has been built by Mr. George Osmond of Taunton, is in perfect keeping with the other furniture of the Chapel, and is a delight to both eye and ear. The proceedings began with the presentation, by the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, of a silver-mounted key to Lady Hepburn, who unlocked the organ. A prayer of dedication by Mr. Worthington, and a voluntary on the organ by Mr. W. P. Short, of Taunton (who kindly acted as organist for the day), were followed by Divine Service, conducted by the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, of Exeter; with sermon by the Rev. Dr. J. E. Odgers, of Oxford. After the service tea was provided in the schoolroom by the ladies of the congregation, and a small sale of work was held near by. In the evening Mr. Short gave a Recital (with hymns and vocal solos), in which the qualities of the new organ were well displayed. It is gratifying to know that the proceeds of the Opening Services will enable the congregation to claim "the last £10," promised by the Western Union to complete the £130 needed. Mr. Worthington's many friends will share the thankfulness of his congregation that he has been spared to see this result of his long and self-sacrificing labours, though few can have any conception of the courage and devotion with which he has overcome the difficulties of age and failing sight. Finis coronat opus!

Dudley.—The Rev. E. Glyn Evans, minister of the Old Meeting House, Dudley, who joined the Royal Army Medical Corps early in June, has been promoted sergeant. He is now in camp with his unit at Malvern Wells, and in addition to his R.A.M.C. duties in connection with the Gloucester and Worcester Regiments encamped on the same ground, he has been acting as chaplain, conducting the church parade services on Sunday mornings in the open air.

Horsham.—By the death of Miss Mary Ann Welbey the congregation of the Free Christian Church has lost one of its most respected members. She and her sister had attended the services for nearly thirty years and their seats were rarely empty. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon in the quiet graveyard attached to the church, the service being conducted by the Rev. J. J. Marten.

Liscard.—The ladies of the Red Cross Society in connection with the Memorial Church are earnestly appealing to the members and friends of the congregation to join in assisting them to equip and maintain some of the Belgian hospitals for sick and wounded soldiers. It is recognised that these hospitals need immediate and generous help, and the response to earlier appeals has been very gratifying. The amount collected from the middle of April to the end of June was £10 10s. 1d.

Nottingham.—The High Pavement Chapel and Christ Church Chronicle publishes some extracts from letters sent by members of the congregations who are at the front. A Mechanical Transport man in Alexandria writes as follows: "The wounded from the Dardanelles come here by hospital-ship, or troopship, and we convey them to the many hospitals...we have carried over 10,000. The men come here in all stages of suffering but I am glad to say that the proportion of minor injuries is very high. The greatest number have had no attention since the first dressing was applied on the battlefield. The men show wonderful courage and patience...some come limping down the gangway trying to look as though the pain were not so great after all, and others are gently carried off as they approach the end of mortal life. Many men and officers of the R.A.M.C. from Nottingham are here and are doing very good work." Another, a Lance-Corporal in France, writes: "Yesterday we buried one of our comrades in the little churchyard here. Our little party of twelve gave him a last tribute on a lovely summer afternoon. We were surrounded by all the beauty of nature. The sound of the guns had ceased, as if all this was to be done in solemn and splendid silence. As our little party stood at the 'present' I felt how grand it was to give one's life for such a great cause as ours."

Willaston School. The Willaston School Chronicle for July contained a portrait of Aldred Eric Rawsthorn, Second-Lieut., 4th (Service) Battalion, Loyal North Lancashires, who was killed in action near Festubert on June 15th. As an old Willastonian his death is deeply regretted by all who knew him in his schooldays, and considerable space is given to extracts from his letters and the fine testimony of his fellow officers and the men of the battalion to his courage, ability, and popularity. Mr. Lang Jones, the Headmaster of Willaston School, contributes a sympathetic appreciation which fully bears out the impression created by the portrait which accompanies it. In the course of it he says: "Much of his character may be read from what has been recalled of his career—his enthusiasm, and eager enjoyment of all that is best in life; his sane outlook on things, which made his opinion always one to be respected; his courage; his high sense of duty; and, above all, his unswerving loyalty—it can have been no mere chance that found him serving with the Loyal North Lancashires. And, besides all this, none who knew Rawsthorn will ever forget the sunny disposition, the sincerity, the purity of heart, that endeared him to one and all." Lieut. Rawsthorn, who had crowned a brilliant school career by winning an open History Scholarship at Balliol, was 23 years of age.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A DESCENDANT OF THE FOUNDER OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

The Sunday Observer has published an interesting account of one of our new recruits, Lionel de Jersey Harvard, who sailed for England to enlist after receiving his bachelor's degree at the University which bears his name. His story is not without a touch of romance. It appears that, among the papers of George Bancroft, United States Minister to Great Britain in the Forties, was found a letter from Edward Everett (his predecessor) asking him to seek out a Rev. John Harvard in Plymouth (England), and give him certain books relating to Harvard University. The discovery of this letter led to inquiries being made in 1908 about the descendants of this John Harvard, and the result was that the parents of Lionel Harvard were found. Their son was desirous of entering Emmanuel College, Cambridge, but it was not certain whether he could afford it. The facts were brought to the notice of the authorities of Harvard, who sent him an offer to prepare himself for Harvard College, where favourable opportunities would be given him. The offer was gladly accepted, and a highly successful college career has been the result. Commenting on his patriotic action in joining the army the "Harvard Alumni Bulletin" says:—"It is all of a piece with the devotion which the best young men of Europe are rendering to their flags, which our own youngest graduates rendered so freely a half century ago. Harvard has had good reason to be proud of her sons, but seldom more than of that son who bears her very name."

THE RELIGIOUS FAITH OF JAURÈS.

It is just a year since Jaurès, the great French Socialist and lover of peace, was murdered on the eve of the war. The anniversary has been fittingly commemorated by M. Charles Rappaport, who has published a study of his life under the title, "Jean Jaurès, l'Homme, Le Penseur, Le Socialiste." It is interesting to learn that this fearless thinker, who professed no definite religious faith, had nevertheless a belief in the spiritual and material unity of the universe which was really at the bottom of all his hopes for humanity. The following passage from his pen recalls the Pantheistic emotion to which Richard Jefferies gave expression in "The Story of my Heart." "How many times in wandering along the paths, across fields, I have suddenly said to myself that it was the earth I trod, and that I belonged to her, and she belonged to me, and without thinking about it I slowed down, because it was not worth while hurrying over her surface, as at each step I felt her and possessed her completely, and that my soul, if I may say so, walked in her depths."

IN MEMORY OF JOHN HUSS.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has made the Quincentenary of John Huss the occasion for making a free grant of 5,000 Bohemian New Testaments to be given away among the University students of Bohemia. Mr. Eberhard Philidius, of the Student Movement, Vienna, has described how the books are being distributed. "We have until now," he says, "sent to the front a large number of Gospels—over 2,000—in the different languages of the monarchy. We first secured the addresses of about 500 students, and sent them the Gospels, with a postcard enclosed asking for names and addresses of other students in the field. A great many answered, sending us as many as ten or twenty names in reply. Then these sent more, and so on, in "snow ball" fashion. Meanwhile, the Technical High School, and other institutions put at our disposal a large number of field addresses of students. In this way we have obtained over 4,000 addresses. Five thousand testaments are not too many, seeing there are more Bohemian University students than that. A large number of students serving in the war are wounded or sick, and these can be reached through the hospitals."

MUSIC AND THE WAR.

Miss Dorothea Hollins pleads, in a letter to the Westminster Gazette, that the "language of the soul" should at least be free from restraint in these difficult days, and that music should not be dragged into the bitter atmosphere of international feuds. Sir Arthur Markham has referred to "people who, during the war, for the sake of amusement, go and listen to German music, chiefly Wagner." "If it were, indeed, for the sake of amusement only," Miss Hollins writes, "one might quarrel with their going to listen to any music, not only German music. But during this time of unspeakable strain and suffering, is not the deliverance of the soul through music a necessity rather than an amusement? And do we not need the very best music for this purpose? I have no wish to disparage Russian, French, or English music, but can we forget that we owe the greatest moments in our lives to German composers and German music (to say nothing of musicians such as Richter, Joachim, Madame Schumann, &c.)? To deny it would surely be ungenerous and therefore un-English. Twenty wars between us and Germany cannot alter that fact, and it is a fact lifted so entirely above the dust stirred up by the war that we should assuredly cherish it as one little bright spot in the present darkness and as a herald of the time when, this fever-dream being over, Germany may perhaps again recognise that the 'Kingdom of the Air'—not Zeppelins, but Idealism—is her true province. Personally, Wagner does not seem to me on a level with the immortals, but since thousands find in him their spiritual nutriment, they ought surely not to be debarred from it on the score of his nationality."

THE INTELLECTUAL CLAIMS OF GERMANY.

Dr. C. W. Eliot lends his powerful support to the plea which has often been made in our columns that the claim to intellectual superiority put forward by Germany and accepted meekly by many people in other countries will hardly bear examination. In his recent book 'The Road towards Peace,' he denies that in the spheres of thought and imagination Germany has produced great pioneers. "In the first place," he says, "German literature and philosophy are, like German industrial development, comparatively young. That they should become preeminent so soon was not to be expected. In the next place, the German race has not yet developed leaders of thought in literature, philosophy, poetry, and statesmanship who can bear comparison with the supreme personages in England, France, and Italy. Germany has produced no men that can be placed beside Dante, Michael Angelo, and Cavour in Italy; Shakespeare, Milton, Newton, Faraday and Darwin in England; or Pasteur in France. As to America, it seems to a native American profane to mention Bismarck and the German Emperor in the same breath with Washington and Lincoln."

DEPTFORD GENERAL BAPTIST (UNITARIAN) CHAPEL.

APPEAL.

WE appeal on behalf of the Trustees and Congregation for donations to a fund being raised to save this Chapel from destruction. The building was founded in 1674, and is of great historic interest. Of recent years there has been a marked revival in the work under the leadership of Mr. E. A. Carlier. Some idea of this may be gathered from the following list of activities which are at present being carried on under considerable difficulties:—

Sunday Services: evening attendances, 60 to 80.

Sunday School: 150 children and 14 teachers.

Monday: Mothers' Meeting and Winter Concerts.

Tuesday: Band of Hope and Boy Scouts.

Wednesday: Girls' Sewing Class and Women's League.

Thursday: Women's Devotional Hour; Girls' Club; Choir Practice.

Friday: Boys' and Young Men's Clubs.

While those whom the Chapel serves are of the poorest class they are able, with the aid of a small endowment, to pay their way; but this is largely because Mr. Carlier receives no salary from the Congregation.

A few weeks ago the Trustees were served with a notice from the London County Council condemning the building as structurally unsafe, and requiring immediate and extensive repairs and rebuilding as an alternative to its being entirely demolished. We feel that the loss of this Chapel would be a disaster which the Unitarian public will desire to avert.

To meet the cost of absolutely necessary alterations a sum of £700 is required. The General Baptist Assembly and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association have each made a grant of £50. The Congregation, poor as they are, will raise £50. The London District Unitarian Society warmly supports the appeal. Nothing but the most urgent need could warrant its being made at the present juncture. That need exists, and we earnestly hope that you will see your way to assist in preserving this ancient Chapel for present-day services and work.

Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer to the Deptford Fund, Mr. F. C. Creak, Fernwood, North Hill, Highgate, N., or by the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, 4, Ella Road, Crouch Hill, N. Mr. Pearson has had special opportunities of seeing the good work carried on by Mr. Carlier, and of assisting him in various ways.

C. HERBERT SMITH, President of the London District Unitarian Society.

F. C. CREAK, Treasurer, The Deptford Chapel Repair Fund.

July 31, 1915.

REPAIRS FUND.

FIRST LIST OF DONATIONS, JULY, 1915.

	£	s.	d.
Deptford Congregation	50	0	0
General Baptist Assembly	50	0	0
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	50	0	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence	100	0	0
Mr. Charles Hawksley	50	0	0
Mr. Edwin Tate	50	0	0
Mr. Ronald P. Jones	25	0	0
Rev. S. Burrows	3	3	0
Mr. H. Chatfield Clarke	5	0	0
Mr. Alexander Barnes	5	0	0
Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P.	0	10	0
Mr. C. F. Pearson	20	0	0

FREE CHURCH LEAGUE FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Official Organ: "FREE CHURCH SUFFRAGE TIMES." Monthly 1d.

OBJECT:—

The League stands for the Enfranchisement of Women on the same basis as Men are or shall be Enfranchised.

METHODS:—

Religious and Educational.

Office:

13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence. For particulars apply to Hon. Sec., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thorralby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD. — "HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE." — COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BRIGHTON.—Miss Lucy Kendall will take PAYING GUESTS during AUGUST and SEPTEMBER. Moderate terms. Highly recommended.—20, Charlotte Street. (Sea view).

HARROGATE. — COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author.

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

GREENGAGES for Preserving.—24 lbs. 8s., 12 lbs. 4s. 6d. Pershore Egg Plums, 24 lbs. 4s. 6d., 12 lbs. 2s. 9d. Carriage paid in England and Wales.—FRANK ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston, Herts.

BEDSPREADS FROM IRELAND!

Snow-white, hemstitched, and embroidered, with beautiful open work. Single bed size, 72 by 90, only 8s. 6d. each. Usually 12s. 6d. Catalogue free.—Write, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.

—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENIUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, August 7, 1915.

*. Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3815.
NEW SERIES, No. 918.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Magazine.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS OF THE AUGUST NUMBER.

How the Meadow Saved Itself.
The World-Song. (Poetry.)
The Youngest Knight.
God's Bird.
A Dutch Picture. (Full-Page Picture and Verse.)
Robinson Crusoe. (Part II., Chap. III.-IV.)
Mother Nature's Helpers. (Illustrated.)
'Young Days' Guild Work.
There is always Time. (Poetry.)
The Garden of Gillyflowers.
Grandmother's Quilt. (Poetry.)
Why Bees Make Honey.
Such a Hero! (Poetry.)
How the Vodka Came.
Puzzles and Puzzlers.
Temperance Ideas.
Editor's Chat, &c.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.

Annual Subscription, by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

A specimen copy will be sent post free to any address on receipt of a post card.

London:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL,
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 28, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION'S PUBLICATIONS.

The Bible Literature in the Light of Modern Knowledge.

By E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
Cloth, 2s. net. Postage, 3d.

Belief in God.

By SYDNEY HERBERT MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.
Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester.

Sewed, 2d. net. Postage, 1d.

Moral and Religious Lessons for Infants.

By M. C. MARTINEAU.

Sewed, 6d. net. Postage, 1d.

Favourite Stories.

Selected and Edited by E. PRITCHARD and J. J. WRIGHT.
Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 3d.

Stories for the Little Ones.

Forty-One Stories Selected and Retold by GRACE SPEARS
and DOROTHY TARRANT, M.A.

Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 3d.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHERBURN, }

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.
Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, August 15.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Dr. WM. THOMSON.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Mr. F. COLEBROOK. No Evening Service.
 Ilford, High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W.—No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road.—Closed. Services resumed on September 5th.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. WALTER RUSSELL.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road. Closed during August.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Mr. T. PALLISTER YOUNG. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. F. COLLECOLT; 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street. Closed morning. Evening, Mr. W. L. TEASDALE.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace.—Closed during August.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Rev. RODGER SMYTH.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. T. LUCAN-DAVIES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Mr. C. R. FYSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30.—Closed.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30, Mr. CHAS. A. BREEDON.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church. High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHELD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisdarg Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.

LETHBRIDGE—ROBINSON.—On August 5th, at St. Birinus, Morgan's Vale, by the Rev. B. W. Randolph, D.D., Canon of Ely, assisted by the Rev. E. H. Iden-Hart, of Downton, the Rev. Hugh C. B. Lethbridge, Vicar of the Parish, youngest son of the late J. C. B. Lethbridge, J.P., D.L., of Tregeare, Egloskerry, Cornwall, and of Mrs. Lethbridge, Ravenscourt, Minehead, to Gwendolen Frances, daughter of the late Octavius Robinson, and of Mrs. Robinson, Redlynch House, Salisbury.

DEATH.

BROADBENT.—On August 7th, at Oriol House, The Wallands, Lewes, Betty, widow of James Broadbent, aged 78.

EVANS.—On August 10th, Sarah, widow of the late Rev. George Evans, M.A., aged 61 years.

MARTIN.—On August 4th, at 23, Chislehurst Avenue, North Finchley, Hugh Perceval, the dearly loved little son of the Rev. Basil Martin.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

A CLUB ASSISTANT, about 26, thoroughly domesticated, and desirous of social work. Facilities can be given for training as a Club Leader. Board and residence; if necessary, a small salary.—Write to Miss Murray, Girls' Club, Woolwich.

EXPERIENCED LADY HOUSEKEEPER, used to secretarial work and all domestic management, wishes post, resident or daily, in September.—c/o Smith's Library, Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead.

MISS SIMON, L.L.A., Inter. Arts (Lond.), Teachers' Diploma (Camb.). Care and Education of Girls (under twelve) at Zulla Road, Nottingham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted

20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	395	CORRESPONDENCE:—		A Message to Members of our Churches at the War	401
PATRIOTISM	397	Our Men at the War	400	South African Notes	401
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	398	Hiding our Light	400	A Girls' Club at Woolwich	402
QUAKER WOMEN	398	Closed for the Holidays	400	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	403
		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	404
		Belgian Hospital Fund	401

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

OUR Belgian Hospital Fund still makes good progress, but we are unable to give any fresh details about its administration this week as the Editor has again gone over to France on a tour of inspection with Mr. and Mrs. Allen, and is not expected to return for a fortnight. He will then probably have a good deal of fresh information to give us; in the meantime we would thank our readers once more for their generous support, and plead for further help on behalf of those to whose heroism we are so much indebted.

THE fall of Warsaw overshadows all other news from the various fields of war. It closes a great chapter full of dramatic incidents in the terrific conflict between Russia and Germany. Four times during the last twelve months the Germans have approached and threatened the Polish capital. Their success at the fifth desperate effort appears to be rather of the nature of a Pyrrhic victory. The cost in life and treasure has been reckless and enormous. Nor has it yet ceased. Meanwhile the Russians are bearing their defeat with admirable composure. There is no panic: on the contrary, the immediate effect of defeat is to unite all parties of the empire in a determination to continue the war to the utmost until the success of the Allies is ensured. If the rumour of the Kaiser's proffer of peace be true, and it appears on good authority, it is an attempt to divide the Allies by a favourable treatment of one of their number. The peremptory refusal of the Russian Government to consider any suggestion of peace at the present moment is what might have been expected. France, England, Italy, and Russia have bound themselves not to accept any terms of peace in which all four do not concur. It has always been a part of the German scheme to detach one or other of the Allies from the coalition, and before the German attack begins to decline. We believe that every such attempt will be as futile as the present. The Allies have united in presence of a common danger, knowing well that their only chance of victory is by standing together.

THE evacuation of Warsaw has left but little plunder for the Germans. As far back as July 15th the Russians began the work of removing all valuables, art treasures, munitions, bank balances, and everything that could be utilised as war material. Even the church bells and the telegraph wires were removed. It is curious to read that among other treasures, the heart of Chopin, the great Polish musician, which had been enshrined in a Warsaw church, was taken to Moscow for safety. One third of the population went with the materials. The work was completed on August 5th, when the last Russian soldier left, after factories and bridges had been destroyed, leaving, from the military point of view, nothing but an empty shell.

MUCH as the fall of Warsaw is to be regretted, and deeply as we sympathise with the Russians in this their bitterest hour since the war began, we congratulate them on foiling the German plan of enveloping their army. The Kaiser, in his braggart telegram to his sister, the Queen of Greece, boasted that "my destructive sword has crushed Russia," but no such calamity can happen while the Russian army remains intact and still able to give a good account of itself. Its one weakness, lack of munitions, will ere long be remedied. Russian resources far exceed those of Germany, and time is on their side. Russia was no more prepared for war than we were, and time is their friend as it is ours.

THE Kaiser is by no means the strong, silent man of the Carlylean gospel. He is as loquacious as a barrel of beer with the spigot out and lost. His last protestation of innocence—"Before God and history I did not will the war"—is as unconvincing as his earlier deliverances. Every fresh bit of the history that comes to light of the events behind the scenes leading up to the declaration of war is evidence against him. Yet after all it may be true, as The Westminster Gazette wittily observes, that he did not will this war. No, the war he willed was to be over before Christmas, with Paris and Calais in his possession!

THE latest manifesto on the war by German Professors is perhaps the most amazing of them all. It is signed by an Imperial Minister, the Burgomaster of Frankfort, and by half-a-dozen learned doctors. After the usual declaration of Germany's peaceable occupation with her own affairs until assailed by her enemies, it goes on to express Germany's plans for the future. It is good enough to say, "We do not wish the domination of the world" (for this relief much thanks!), "but the possibility to extend our culture and our commercial and industrial power throughout the world." France is to be finished with once for all by improving the whole frontier from Belfort to the coast, and in addition must pay a large indemnity. Belgium must remain in German hands. Russia must pay an indemnity in kind by giving up rich agricultural lands, supplying an outlet for surplus German population. Great Britain is to be crushed, her over-sea trade supplanted, her naval supremacy extinguished. Egypt is to come under German rule, and other wonderful changes to ensue. The whole manifesto concludes with this saying of Bismarck:—

"Whenever, in any sphere of politics or elsewhere, one thinks one has touched an obstacle with one's finger, courage and victory no longer stand in the relation of cause to effect, but are identical."

* * *

THE nation does not quickly learn the need and the duty of thrift. Newspapers may scold, economists may preach, food reformers may proclaim their various nostrums, Cabinet Ministers may utter solemn warning, but all with apparently small result. Still the Englishman goes pleasuring. Still the rich buy their new motor cars, still the poor crowd the Cinemas, and still the wicked waste of food in the military camps goes on unchecked. The fact is, it is difficult to make the poor believe in the necessity of saving for the rainy day when they see so many signs of extravagance on the part of the well-to-do. And so many of the speeches and the lectures take on the tone that it is the working-man specially who must be instructed and urged. Truly, he often spends too much on beer, but he wants to know why he should give up his beer when the very officers of the army refuse to give up their wine, in spite of the King's example. As for the particular economies recommended to the housekeeper, there are thousands of middle-class families where these economies have been practised for years. There are thousands of ministers of religion, missionaries, teachers, struggling professional men whose income never exceeds £200 a year, who must deny themselves holidays, theatres and concerts, wine and tobacco—men and women who have carefully to guard every penny of expenditure. They manage to save a little for future contingencies, but the rise in prices has hit them so badly that now they have literally no margin for saving. They do not complain; they only feel a little sore when Duchesses and Cabinet Ministers, and other superior persons tell them that at last they must learn to practice thrift. Let the well-off begin. An ounce of example is worth a ton of good advice.

* * *

LET it not be thought that we under-rate the necessity for thrift. That necessity is bound to increase for years to come, nor will it be without its distinctive moral advantages if it leads to the simplification of living. But a necessary duty may easily become a curse to the nation if it is wrongly carried out. Here is The Saturday Review heading a crusade for the abolition of free elementary education, by which it avers the nation will save twenty-five millions a year. We are to return to the bad old method of school fees. Anything more disastrous for the future of our people can scarcely be imagined. With the loss on the battlefield of a whole generation of her young men, England will want more than ever that the new generation shall be not only healthy of body, but so vigorous of mind, so trained and instructed, that they shall contribute more efficiently than any past generation to the national welfare. To stunt and starve the minds of the children in the name of thrift would be as fatal as a German victory.

* * *

It is with much regret we hear of the resignation of Mr. Hall, the minister of our church at Johannesburg. Until the war broke out Mr. Hall's ministry had met with considerable and gratifying success. But first the war and then the rebellion aroused such deep feelings and differences of opinion on both sides that a great gulf opened between minister and congregation, so that further co-operation appears to have become impossible. We do not intend to discuss the matter here. But Mr. Balmforth's letter opens up another question of the gravest importance, namely, the freedom of utterance claimed by the pulpit. We have made much of that freedom; it has been an honourable boast of our community. Generally speaking churches have loyally stood by ministers, even when patience and forbearance have been sorely tried, and many ministers bear grateful witness to the generosity of their congregations in according the freedom claimed. Nevertheless it comes about that there are limits. If minister and congregation are to live together and work in harmony, there must be some measure of agreement. In the name of freedom of utterance a minister of a Christian church is not at liberty to preach Atheism or even Agnosticism. Nor is he at liberty to outrage the feelings of his congregation to such an extent that they can no longer profit by his ministry. Were he to denounce legal marriage as slavery and advocate free love, he would be abusing his position. Freedom of utterance must have regard to many things, and among others to the possibility of wrecking a church by stoning the congregation. It is a wide, delicate, and difficult situation, and requires more consideration than it has yet received.

* * *

WE are glad to see that the authorities have at last taken measures to abate the nuisance of street collections for charitable—or alleged charitable—purposes. Not long ago the Head Mistresses Association issued a protest against the practice of sending young girls into the streets to sell flags or favours, or to push collecting boxes in the face of pedestrians. In future no one under sixteen may collect money in the streets. No collection at all will be allowed without a licence from the Chief Commissioner of Police, and no paid collectors, whether by commission or salary, will be authorised. A few deserving institutions may suffer, but a considerable amount of fraud will be prevented. The friends of the deserving societies must find other means of approaching the public.

* * *

At the annual meeting of the British Association, which will be held in Manchester next month, the influence of the war will be felt in many ways, and it is likely that Prof. Schuster, in his presidential address, will deal with some subject of general interest, and refer to the part which science is playing in the present struggle. The papers on economic questions, education, agriculture, the position of women in industry, credit and finance will, of course, be considered in a similar way in relation to the war, but in the Chemistry Section it will be possible to get away from the terrible obsession of the moment in the discussion of Dr. Dalton's atomic theory, Mr. R. J. Strutt's paper on 'Active Nitrogen,' and such subjects as smoke prevention and homogeneous catalysis. Mrs. Henry Sidgwick will preside over the Section of Educational Science in the course of which some eminent men will take part in a discussion on 'Methods and Content of History as a Subject of School Study.' The subject of military training in schools will doubtless be debated with much keenness, and the report upon outlets for labour after the war should also provide stimulating food for thought.

PATRIOTISM.

YEARS before Johnson defined Patriotism as the last refuge of a scoundrel the word stank in the nostrils of all honest men and all true lovers of their country. For those who flaunted their patriotism were nearly all men who could be bought. They crowded the benches and the House of Commons, and many a peerage was the price paid by the Government for a safe vote. Offices and sinecures rewarded the faithful. The national coffers were fair game for every needy adventurer. So the noble word patriotism became soiled with all ignoble use. Thank God that in our day it has recovered something of its purity; to be patriotic is just to be a loyal, brave, devoted self-sacrificing Englishman. It is true there are still men in our midst who would make a national crisis such as the present war an occasion for lining their own pockets. It is true that something of what passes for patriotism still consists of jingoism, or the merest bigotry and narrow-mindedness, exhibiting itself as national prejudice, national conceit, national hatred. But all this bears a small proportion to the immense volume of pure and passionate feeling for our native land and our country's cause which never since the days of the Armada so thrilled the community as to-day. Patriotism does not mean "my country right or wrong." It means that when the country is engaged in a righteous cause and demands in its extremity the sacrifice of ease, wealth, and life itself, we give and serve, obey and suffer like Wordsworth's "Happy Warrior" who, when called upon to face

Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined

Great issues....

Is happy as a Lover; and attired

With sudden brightness like a Man
inspired.

It is worth while asking, what are the elements and powers of a true patriotism? They are surely a certain exaltation of spirit, gratitude of heart, pride in the heroic deeds, labour, and martyrdoms which have made our country what it is, together with a passionate jealousy for her good name, and an equally passionate conviction that it is for the advantage of the whole world she should be strong and free and honoured. Further, it is like loyalty to our own family just because it is our own. No doubt there are superior persons in our midst, citizens of the world, cosmopolitans, and others of the same queer make who tell us that this is narrow, parochial and exclusive. Loyalty to the family is an old-fashioned superstition. Our family is all mankind; our country the whole world! We have learned that to love all we must not love any one in particular with a special and peculiar affection. Well, well! The objector can only reply, "Show me a man to whom his own father and mother are no more and no less than any other old man or old woman, and I will show you not a man at all but Carlyle's 'forked radish with a curiously carved head.'" The world-wide roots itself in the special and individual. Certainly, love that stops at the individual, at the home, at the native land, will soon cease to be love. But the love that cuts itself off from the individual, be the individual brother, or friend, or country, and does this in the name of the world-wide and universal, will ere long shrivel, decay and die. It is by increased loyalty to the family that we become loyal patriots; it is by increased loyalty to our own race and country that we learn to respect and honour all other races and countries. The man who counts it an unspeakable blessing to be an English citizen, is the very man who will count it an unspeakable blessing for a Frenchman to be a citizen of France, a German to be a citizen of Germany, an Italian to be a citizen of Italy, and so on the world over. The more he estimates the worth and grandeur of his own citizenship the better will he learn to honour the citizens of other States who feel to their country as he feels to England. The man who honours most the distinctive characteristics of his own race and nation is the man who will best honour the distinctive characteristics of other races and nations. It is a false patriotism that seeks to impose on other countries its own type of civilisation. This is the initial and the colossal mistake of Germany, that she wishes to Germanise every other European nation. All are to take on German "Kultur." And this is the great reason why all the world is up against her. Men are doing battle with an attempt at world dominion by which all shall conform to one standard. Germany in her arrogance fails to realise that many types of civilisation are needed to the development of the human race, and that no one type is to be an Aaron's rod, swallowing up all the rest. Her attempt to Germanise Poland and Alsace by forbidding their inhabitants the use of their own languages, by imposing on them her military system, her school system, her habits and manners, is a hateful tyranny which in the long run breeds a terrible revenge.

It appears to be necessary that this should receive some emphasis seeing there are persons in our midst who tell us that it would make little difference to us in our individual lives should England become a German province. We should go on with our work much the same, take our wages as of old, eat and drink and visit the picture palaces with the same zest as to-day. We may think such people too insignificant for much notice, but the fact of their presence in our midst is an indication of deplorable ignorance, perverted reasoning, and an utterly false conception of what it is to be a citizen of a free country and the descendant of a line of heroes. The flabbiness of such an attitude of mind is only equalled by its meanness.

The value and blessing of a pure patriotism is that it fulfils the essential condition of an ideal outside our own personal or family interests, an ideal which has power to awaken in us capacities for devotion, service and heroism that are deaf even to the penetrating cry of self. It is an ideal that calls out all that is best within us by offering us the radiant image of something nobler and more enduring than self; something that shall fulfil our own thwarted hopes and aspirations when we are but a handful of forgotten dust. It is an ideal that derives strength and inspiration from the feeling that we belong to an illustrious race, that we are the heirs of their greatness, and are called to perpetuate their glory. It is an ideal by which men overcome the fear of death and offer themselves gladly on their country's altar. The life of nations or of men is a treasury of experience. Loyalty to the nation, the loyalty which gives and serves and asks nothing for reward, elevates and upholds by the memory of the great deeds, the noble sufferings and the valourous achievements of the men of old. The patriot is he who feels that the life and honour of

This sceptred isle,

This precious stone set in the silver sea, is worth all the sacrifices that men are making. The call that is now made is for endurance. The first enthusiasm when the nation arose with the flame of battle in her eyes—how potent it was to inspire enthusiasm! There is needed to-day a nobler quality—patient continuance amid unforeseen delays, difficulties and disappointments—the patriotism that can stand in the evil day and having done all, still stand. It is possible to turn this necessity for endurance into glorious gain if it strengthens resolution and gives fresh assurance of the righteousness of the cause for which we are in conflict. There is but one temper which will win the victory. It is that of patient perseverance and enduring fortitude.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

WHEN my soul is in heaviness: and my heart is disquieted within me:

When darkness is round about my path: and all thy tempests go over my head:

Then will I betake me to the great congregation: to hear the psalm of thy redeemed and to cast my burden on the Lord.

Thou shalt cause me to hear of joy and gladness: the songs of the blessed shall visit me in the night:

They shall declare the might of thy spirit: they shall also make mention of thy peace:

Of love made perfect through suffering: and the rest that remaineth for the children of God.

As a cloud of witnesses they shall surround me: as ministering spirits they shall strengthen my soul.

They fought the good fight, they kept the faith: they came through great tribulation, enduring unto the end.

And now, O Lord, they rest in thy keeping: they shine as the stars for ever and ever:

That the lost may be gathered in from all nations: and thy way made known to the uttermost parts of the earth:

To such as wander in the wilderness: and to them that are afar off upon the sea.

Thou callest us into the communion of thy beloved: the glorious fellowship of the children of light:

That we may walk in the joy of thy presence: who wilt greatly refresh us with the river of thy life.

O send out thy light and thy truth, let them lead me: let them bring me to thy holy hill and to thy dwelling-place.

O draw me from out the great waters: lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

Then shall my soul return unto her rest: I shall come to the haven where I would be.

[From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.]

O THOU who art the God and Father of mankind, may thy blessing rest upon all men, that in every nation thou mayest be adored, and thy holy will acknowledged as the universal law. May prosperity be founded in justice, sympathy, and goodwill. Through the communion of thy Spirit may the people be joined to one another as a sacred brotherhood, each seeking the good of all. Let selfishness, violence, and fraud perish for ever. So may war and cruelty pass away from the world, and men live together in unity, peace, and concord, through loving subjection to thee, who art the Lord of nations and the King of kings. AMEN.

[From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.]

QUAKER WOMEN.

MRS. BRAILSFORD'S book is a study of the origins and initial energies of "the peaceable people called Quakers," to use their own expression in the petition to James II., though in view of some of the energies piquantly but sympathetically described here the adjective may seem a little ironical. Not herself a Friend, the writer enters with understanding into those emotions and crises, that "dim world of intuitions and withal of unshakable convictions in which the early Quakers had their being"; and her presentation of the psychology of George Fox, at least, is acceptable to that modern mood of ours—the mood which examines the credentials of the makers of thoughts and words who claim to be our spiritual teachers; secretly and under whatever normal habit of public worship asking, "By what authority?" and demanding that the Fiat Lux shall be made good to the soul. George Fox's answer to many questing souls has been satisfying. There are those outside the body of believers in direct descent from him to whom his doctrine of the Inner Light seems the nearest possible point of contact with the Life which is the light of men; which is merely saying that the mystics are of one family. He was, it seems, a visionary who was lucid and a mystic who was actively practical, combining, as Mrs. Brailsford insists, idealism and common sense; he led his spiritual children in their heroic age of persecution through appalling afflictions into the realms of the Illuminated Life, and through his inspiration they were triumphant victors over material circumstance. A little while ago martyrdom seemed obsolete; now we know it is not so. Yet, immersed as we are in the horrors of a devilish ingenuity which is new every morning, the physical endurance of these early Quakers and especially of the women, seems a thing almost incredible to us. There was a Mayor of Marlborough who, secretly "convinced" by Barbara Blaugdone, confessed ingenuously that "he could not take up the cross to walk in that way." We cannot help some sympathy with the Mayor's pusillanimity; but Barbara, whom the author calls a seventeenth century militant, who went on a fortnight's hunger strike, not as a protest but as an "exercise," in prison, who did not despise the lodgment offered by a "Pig-stye very clean and never a Pig in it" after being refused at the inn at Bridgewater, who was brutally flogged, who was 46 at "convincement," walked in that way for nearly half a century more of life. She was a well-connected woman with some means, "never chargeable to any," as she said; and it seems true that George Fox's message had in it for her as for so many others new depths of the divine. But over and above the spiritual initiative which centres in George Fox, this book is a contribution to the history of the Woman Movement, and there is indicated a curious parallelism in the doings of these early Quaker women and the militant suffragettes of yesterday. The methods employed: constant protest, speaking in season and out of season, distribution of letters and pamphlets, appeals to authorities, including Cromwell, Charles II. and James II., all of whom from varying motives showed themselves on the whole remarkably patient with the Quakers, interruptions and "brawlings" in places of worship and meetings: seem to bring the seventeenth-century contestants outwardly, at least, into touch with their twentieth-century sisters.

Quaker Women, 1650-1690. By Mabel Richmond Brailsford. London: Duckworth & Co., 7s. 6d. net.

Mrs. Brailsford asserts that the status of woman had been lowered by the revolt against Catholicism and by the contentions of Puritanism—a generalisation open to controversy as a whole, but true in certain particulars, such as the suppression of religious houses and the disappearance of ecclesiastical women—and is perhaps rather too condemnatory of "the sectaries and bigots" of that world. Among these sectaries and bigots by her own showing the Quakers were some of the noisiest, and it is possible that Fox's championship of women had consequences which he did not originally contemplate. This championship was, of course, the logical outcome of his mystical convictions. Inward reality his great pre-occupation, this intuitive pioneer kept at the root of his thinking the revelation that had come to him at the age of 24: he had come to know, he says, "the hidden unity of the Eternal Being," and here he found justified his claim of equal rights and responsibilities for man and woman. The Inward Light knew no sex favouritism. The service of God was as much the end of woman as of man. His master-idea being the Light that lighteth every human being coming into the world, the dividing lines between man and woman, between class and class, were obliterated for him, and God Himself was within the soul of woman and asserting its validity. This thought of woman was very different from that of Knox and Calvin; it rather approached from the inner and mystical side the idea of the noble Elizabethan woman as seen and portrayed by Shakespeare. From this followed Fox's ideas concerning "the true and greatest interests of women," of women preachers, and of marriage. Milton's "He for God only, she for God in him," would have been an absurdity to Fox; God Himself, and not God through a husband, was the medium of the woman's divine experience.

Fortunately, Fox's personality remained lovably humorous through all his transcendent experiences, and the dangers of women's worship were avoided by his calm good sense. For his call "to them to come out of prison" had an immense response, and Mrs. Brailsford pictures the ranks of women, young, middle-aged, old, rich, poor, gentle, simple, from Mary Fisher that adventuress serving-maid, to Jane Stuart, James II.'s natural daughter, who "fielded and span" to cast in her lot with the Friends, pouring through the door he opened to serve a gospel which claimed all their faculties, eager then as in later times to refute by their achievements the imputation of inferiority and lack of soul.

Fox's two great discoveries—that "to be bred at Oxford or Cambridge was not enough to make a man to be a minister of Christ," and "the steeple-house and yt ground on which it stodee was noe more holier than yt mountaine," determined rather unfortunately the first activities of many Quaker women. These Mrs. Brailsford treats with a pleasant humour indeed but apparently sympathetically, without quite perceiving the unbeautiful implications underlying their interruptions and brawlings in the "steeple-houses," and the extravagant methods they adopted to make themselves heard. It is surprising to us that people who held the tenet of the Inner Light should even in those intolerant days have found it so impossible to recognise the possibility of that Light's being found in other people. We are well able to realise some of the effect produced by the sudden breaking in upon the quietude of a house of God, and the violent interruption of a spiritual message not always inadequate or insincere, when a strident female voice, hysterically pitched, condemned as damnable its divergent ideals, and we cease to wonder at the physical persecutions which followed. Anne Blaykling, for instance, described by her friends as a "pretious lively heart," affronted the minister in the pulpit of Haverill Church, "callinge him Priest, hirelinge, and deceiver, greadie dumbe dogge, with many more words of the same nature." It is satisfactory to learn that Anne was severed for a time from the Quakers on account of her "singularity and whimsies in several things," which, perhaps, may indicate a certain interrogation in the body concerning the women who thus "shouted their way into notoriety." The touching phrase of one woman preacher deserves to be noted: "I returned into the silence out of all babling talk." But what are we to say of the devastating address administered to one of the Quaker persuasion itself at Limerick—an address neatly characterised by the Quaker historian as "a few words, but powerful"—"Serpent, be silent!"? The unhappy preacher thus wounded in the house of his friends never preached again, and "became foolish in the latter end of his days." We can well believe it; such proceedings do not make for sanity.

Fox's first adherent was Elizabeth Hooton, a comfortably circumstanced matron of 50—"that antient woman" as they frequently called her—who became the first woman preacher of the new doctrine. She came from the Baptists to whom Fox unconsciously owed much; and Mrs. Brailsford suggests her influence in the attitude he adopted towards women's work in the church. She was a most enthusiastic, adventurous person, interesting to us not so much on account of her Quaker zeal and sufferings as for her anticipation of Elizabeth Fry by 150 years, in insistent pleas from her own prisons for gaol reform. This agitation is thus seen to be as old as Quakerism. Her long interest in the wretched prisoners was eventually recognised, for in her old age she was made one of the overseers of the Fleet Prison to care for imprisoned Quakers. The history of Mary Fisher, servant girl and pioneer of Quakerism in New England, carries the missionary zeal which was so marked among them up to its most romantic height. She went incredibly on foot across the Morea, through Greece, and over the mountains of Thrace to Adrianople in the hope of converting the "Grand Turk" himself. She was unable to ask her way; but as the amazed peasants looked on her as either a messenger to the King or a mad woman, and to be respected in either case, she somehow arrived and obtained her audience. Mrs. Brailsford draws an attractive picture of the Quaker woman's appearance in this Oriental milieu. The Sultan heard her courteously in her attempt to convince him of the error of his religion and the truth of hers, and she returned safely. Apparently there were no other tangible results. Mary Fisher shares the distinction of being publicly "whipt," after having delivered herself of some candid opinions regarding the undergraduates of Sidney Sussex College, that "Cage of Unclean Birds" and "Synagogue of Satan." They appealed to the Mayor against preaching women, and her punishment made some stir even in those callous days. The justices of the town repudiated all share in responsibility for the action: an unusual proceeding.

Of the strange adventures of the aforementioned Barbara Blaugdone; of fifteen-year old Elizabeth Fletcher, "an able minister of the Gospel through many parts of the nation"; of Susanna Worth, Quaker, and wife of the Bishop of Killaloe; of "that prating woman Audler"; of Jane, the Stuart among the Quakers; of Judith Zinspinning, preacher and author in Holland and many others, Mrs. Brailsford, evidently embarked on a labour of love, has much of interest to say, and for this the reader is referred to the book itself. It is well worth reading not only for its interest but for the questions which it opens up in the reader's mind.

Early Quaker history is a history of contradictions. Quaker enthusiasts were extravagantly and violently fanatical, uncharitably abusive in speech, unseemly in behaviour, stupidly and uselessly obstinate in defying legitimate authority. Looking at this side of them only one is inclined to endorse Clarendon's estimate: "Their faction is their religion." A religion which appears to consist chiefly of antagonisms and denunciations is always suspect, and the persecutions which followed these "rawe spirits raveing up and down" were inevitable, granting the characteristics of seventeenth century humanity. But there is the other side, perceived by both Cromwell and Charles II.: their passion for truth which often explained their discourtesy; their absolute integrity, so that we have the odd picture of a body of Quaker prisoners marching without a keeper through the busiest streets of London from Newgate to Bridewell, trusted to be there "before bed-time"; their humanitarianism which began in the prisons and was presently to extend to consistent care of the poor and the emancipation of the slave; their real humility of soul which withdrew into the silence to wait upon God. To-day their spiritual heirs, divested of outward extravagances and no longer persecuted by a world which is, indeed, inclined to admire them rather sentimentally for their invariable respectability, their frequent wealth and their vaguely understood tenets, still witness by their spiritual sincerities to the authenticity of George Fox's message. But the inability of the Friends to deal influentially or weightily with the present appalling situation is disappointing, and seems to be due to the amiable weakness which, refusing to face realities, thinks that the pedantry of barbarism can be adequately confronted by a pedantry of pacifism. A little of George Fox's inspired common sense is needed to deal with the new facts and yet retain idealism.

The thought of Margaret Fell fitly closes this procession of women which Mrs. Brailsford conjures from a strange and violent past. On her the eye, tired of antinomies, rests with satisfaction. In this "nursing mother of Quakerism" there seems no shrillness or want of balance, but rather, given up as she was to a spiritual cause, all that is most noble in human character. A woman of some position and of culture (was she or George Fox responsible for that joyful rendering of Habeas Corpus as "horpus scorpions" ?), of great moral influence, of immense industry and organising power, of clear logical mind, of heroic powers of endurance, of sane estimates of things "in the world," it is Margaret Fell whose spirituality and humanity we still feel, joined with the qualities of her second husband, George Fox. It is she who personifies the ideal which dawns upon our mind at the suggestive word "Friend." The other women are strange and unfamiliar to us. But Margaret Fell is a companionable presence given to us by Quakerism, and still warm and alive.

F. R.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

OUR MEN AT THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In reply to the circular recently addressed to the Ministers or Secretaries of Congregations, asking for the names and addresses of those who have joined the King's forces, sixty-six replies have thus far been received. The lists have been prepared with much care, and I desire to thank sincerely those who have responded to the request of the President of the National Conference for the trouble they have kindly taken. But there must be many others who would desire that their heroes should receive the message of remembrance and encouragement which the President wishes to send. I shall be glad to hear from them as soon as possible.

So far about a thousand names have been received. If we consider the size of our congregations, this number is, I think, quite creditable to their patriotic spirit. It is especially gratifying to note the comparatively large numbers that have been recruited from many of our country congregations.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES HARWOOD.

60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, N.W.,
August 10, 1915.

HIDING OUR LIGHT.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—My present military functions have brought me into the neighbourhood of some of our East Anglian Churches. Will you allow me to relate my experience of visits to two of these, as shining examples of the policy of "hiding our light under a bushel"?

Let us call the first X. The chapel here is at the moment closed and services are not held, but it happens to be, historically and architecturally, one of our finest meeting-houses, and in its prime used to draw crowded congregations of several hundred worshippers.

I found the building without much difficulty, as its exterior was well-known to me, though I had not been to X before ; the gates of the chapel yard were padlocked, and there was no visible notice-board of any kind. The visitor is therefore unable to discover the nature of the building, the name of the secretary, or the place where the keys may be found. My next move was to look for the secretary whose name is given in the 'Essex Hall Year-book,' and on finding his house, at a great distance from the chapel, I was told that he had left X two months ago, leaving no address, and was believed to be living in London. Finally by enquiry among the houses adjoining the chapel I happened to discover that the keys were kept by the solicitor to the trustees, and was able to penetrate into the forbidden ground, and to observe on the wall of the chapel, quite concealed by a large holly bush, a notice board from which every vestige of lettering had been obliterated by time and weather.

On my second visit, I met by chance a young officer, an ardent member of one of our suburban congregations, who had been quartered at X for some months, and had never been able to get inside the chapel, which he was anxious to see.

In the town of Y, not many miles away, there is another chapel of great age, where regular morning service is held. On arriving at Y, two Sundays ago, I was told which street led to the chapel, and after a quarter of an hour's search discovered it down a side lane, entirely hidden behind some houses, with no indication whatever, either on the main road, or down the lane, that the building existed at all, or could be reached in that direction.

It sounds incredible, but it is a fact, that even on the chapel itself I was unable to find any notice board giving the time of service, or the minister's name, and I only knew that I had found my destination by seeing some of our familiar green posters inside the vestibule.

What must be the condition of the congregation where such a state of things is possible? X and Y are not sleepy country villages, but small towns of some activity, in or near which large numbers of troops have been, and still are stationed. Imagine the impression made on a young man from one of our great Sunday Schools in Lancashire or Yorkshire, who finds himself in camp at these places, and wonders whether there is a chapel near at hand where a stranger will receive a friendly welcome! Do the dozen or so adults who constituted the congregation that morning at Y think it impossible that such a man should exist near their town, when hundreds of our Sunday scholars and Church members are undergoing military training? If any particulars have been sent from Y for the statistics on public worship recently collected by the National Conference, one is inclined to wonder if the small attendance at their service is attributed entirely to the pursuit of Sunday amusements.

You may say, of course, that these cases are exceptional, and it is to be hoped they are; but why should there be any exceptions at all in this matter? It surely ought to be regarded as an essential condition that every Chapel and Church we possess should display, in a conspicuous position, a proper notice-board, giving the name of the place of worship, the name of the minister, if there is one, and the name of the caretaker, or other person who has charge of the keys.

The last point is often neglected even when the others are attended to, and I have before now been defeated in a prolonged attempt to get into one of our finest chapels in a large town through which I was passing, owing to entire ignorance in the neighbourhood of the building as to whether there was a caretaker at all, and, if so, where he might be found.

Whatever the world may think of our particular "light," can we not at least ensure that it is set on a candlestick, and not hidden under a padlocked bushel with no indication as to the whereabouts of the key?—Yours, &c.,

RONALD P. JONES.

Headquarters 2/1st East Anglian Division,
Thetford, August 10, 1915.

CLOSED FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As the other day I rose from the reading of the National Conference's "Report of the Special Committee on Public Worship" and was reminded that at its meetings in October the chief discussion of the Conference would be on this fundamentally and primarily important matter, I turned to our denominational newspapers and found that several—relatively a considerable number—of our churches in London and elsewhere would be closed this month. Could anything be more ironical? I have since heard that others of our churches will be closed too.

Now, Sir, while it may be the business of the committee of a particular congregation to determine whether its church shall be open for public worship on Sundays in August, or any other month, I protest against the decision to close. If it is not "worth while" to open, I contend that it is less worth while to close, and that this closing is an advertisement to the world of a disregard of public worship which is detrimental to our denomination. How many churches of the Establishment will be closed? How many Roman Catholic churches will be shut up? How many Nonconformist? Will the witness of any other denomination to the need of God in these days of national suffering and peril be as lax as that of our own? At a time when we should multiply, not reduce the facilities for public spiritual testimony and supplication, it is grievous for any man who believes that our churches have anything whatever of truth and helpfulness and peace for others to contemplate any single one of them with the repelling legend on its doors, "No admission."

After eighteen years in the Unitarian ministry, most of which have been spent in the deliberate endeavour to bring the unchurched into our communion, I am convinced that the chief reason for the want of success of most of our congregations in gathering numbers is the indifference with which not a few of our people regard the act of public worship. As a whole we do not give the impression that we are a worshipful people, and this circumstance is strikingly emphasised and accentuated by such decisions as that against which I have protested.

I write to you after conducting services for what have been by reason of the day the smallest congregations of the year. It has been uplifting to be with those of my people who could not go away for holidays, and a few strangers who were glad to come in. It was worth while for us to be together; it was good to be in "the beauty of holiness" on a very quiet day of the Lord with one or two new worshippers who had found that the church door was open.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM C. HALL.

Northampton, August 10, 1915.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

30TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,535	13	2
Miss A. H. Lunn (second donation)	3	0	0
Miss A. M. Lunn (second donation)	2	0	0
Miss E. G. Wood	5	0	0
Mr. A. F. Jones (third donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Jolowicz, for the Belgian Refugee Hostel, Compayne Gardens (fourth donation)	7	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Anonymous	5	0	0
Miss Edith Preston (second donation)	5	0	0
Ordnance Survey Office, Belfast, per Mr. Kinsman ..	5	0	0
Mr. Wm. Spiller (second donation)	5	5	0
Mr. F. Burton (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall, (monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Dr. A. Hugh Thompson (second donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Helen Buckton (fourth donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Elizabeth Brown (third donation)	2	0	0
Mr. C. Reynolds (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss C. M. Horsnail	1	1	0
Miss Ellen Chapman (third donation)	1	0	0
Miss Mary E. Swaine (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Punnett's Town School, per Mr. B. H. Naylor ..	10	0	0
Mr. Jesse Argyle, for a Friend (third donation)	10	0	0
Mr. Marsden (eleventh donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Percy Sedgfield (per Mrs. Sedgfield)	5	0	0
	55,605	11	2

Parcels have been received from:— Mrs. P. William Kessler; Miss Lucy Colton; Mrs. E. A. Wurtzburg; The Memorial Church, Manor Road, Liscard; Westbourne Park Chapel Women's Relief Corps (per Mrs. W. H. Browne); Mrs. Varian; Miss Taylor; Swinton and Pendlebury Belgian Refugees Fund; The Misses Badland; Miss Green and Mrs. Williams; Mrs. Marsh; Miss E. Drummond; Miss A. Langley; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee; Miss Nettlefold; Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Miss Bruce; Mrs. William Healey; Mrs. Edward Chitty; the Rev. W. Carey Walters, Mrs. Titterton, Mrs. Nuttall, Mrs. Priestley-Smith, Lewins Mead Domestic Mission, and Miss M. T. Worsley.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

A MESSAGE TO MEMBERS OF OUR CHURCHES AT THE WAR.

MR. HUGH RATHBONE, the President of the National Conference, is sending the following letter to the men of our churches at the war:—

"Dear Friends,—In the name of the National Conference and as its President I am privileged to send you a message of sympathy and good cheer. At the call of your country's honour and danger you have bravely offered yourselves for her defence. Many of your friends at home are making large sacrifices, giving of their money and their service for the same great cause, but you have done more than they in giving yourselves, and you have done it fully and ungrudgingly. We want you to know that your friends are proud of you, and that your country admires and blesses you for your splendid courage, faithfulness, and temper. In the face of danger, delay, disappointment, fatigue, saddened by the death of many noble comrades, you have carried yourselves as famously and fearlessly as ever man did on earth. God has given you the high task of fighting for the freedom not of your own country only, but of Europe and true civilisation.

"Believe that you are fighting in God's everlasting war against injustice and wrong. May God's blessing be on you. Remember how many at home are thinking of you, praying for you, feeling with you in your dread hour of trial. Your brothers, friends, and teachers in the Schools and Churches to which you belong send greeting after greeting. They would have you bear yourselves on the battlefield as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, who is the great Warrior against all wrong. Fight for the sake of the victory of the Right, not for the sake of revenge. May the Spirit of God make and keep you true, honourable, chivalrous, and obedient even in the hottest of the fight, and when your need is the greatest may the thought of the Eternal Righteousness ruling the worlds be to you strength, hope, and comfort. And the prayer of all who know, love and honour you is that you may come back with 'eyes that tell of triumph tasted,' and with the gift of Peace in your hands for the land you love.

Your sincere friend,

HUGH R. RATHBONE.

Liverpool, August, 1915."

Ministers are urgently requested to send the names and regimental addresses of members of their churches and schools who have enlisted for the war to the Rev. J. Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, N.W.

SOUTH AFRICAN NOTES

THE war is bringing its tale of grief, suffering, and misery everywhere. The heroic sacrifices which are being made are the accompaniments of widespread cruelties and sorrows. Here in South Africa we are living for the moment in sight of gay banners and streamers, and with the plaudits of victory sounding in our ears, but many of the country districts are seething with passion, families have been divided, social relationships embittered, Churches almost rent in twain, and educated men forced to do what is virtually convict labour for refusing to take up arms in an aggressive expedition which they felt to be unnecessary. Our own Church in Johannesburg has suffered, and seems hardly likely to weather the storm, the Rev. R. J. Hall, our minister there, having been compelled to resign owing to differences with leading members of his congregation with reference to the war. That a Liberal minister, in a so-called Liberal Church, should be compelled to resign because he preaches what he believes to be the truth, that truth taking the form of Christ's gospel of Peace and Love, shows how deplorably the war spirit may warp the judgment of otherwise fair-minded and good-hearted men and women.

It appears that since the beginning of the war Mr. Hall has felt himself out of sympathy with popular feeling on the subject, whether German or British, and for some time he refrained from preaching about the war. But with the exacerbation of public feeling between England and Germany,—a feeling of bitterness and hatred, stimulated by what I can only describe in this relation as a gutter Press, and culminating in Johannesburg in widespread and systematic destruction of property, and an organised attempt to boycott all Germans out of business and commercial life,—silence became unworthy and unendurable. Mr. Hall was privately informed that an attempt would be made to procure his resignation at the annual meeting of the Church on the grounds that his "labour sympathies and attitude on the war were objectionable." He therefore decided to restate his position in the pulpit. A summary of this re-statement I give in his own words.

(1) "Prior to the war I preached, and the congregation accepted without question, the Fatherhood of God. That doctrine involved His love for Germans, Austrians, and Turks as for English, French, and Russians. I should be bound, therefore, to protest against the enlistment of religious institutions on one side or other as though God were exclusively either pro-Entente or pro-Triple Alliance.

(2) "Prior to the war I preached, and the congregation accepted without question, the Brotherhood of Man as a logical outcome of the Fatherhood of God. That doctrine implied the necessity that I should try to make my brother hate hatred and loathe crime, not that I should kill him because he had killed some one else. To act in the latter way would be to reduce myself to his level of attainment. I could not see the wisdom of fighting hate with hate, but only with love even to the point of losing one's own life.

(3) "Prior to the war I had preached, and the congregation had accepted, the Leadership of Jesus, not as a supernatural guide, but as a practical man in close touch with the everyday problems of human life. I still felt that up to the present time the highest human wisdom was embodied in the teaching of Jesus as it related to war, and that while the opposite course might be momentarily advantageous, on a long view only disaster could come from adherence to it.

(4) "Finally, I had preached the ultimate salvability of every human soul, that it was not for us to assume God's prerogative of judgment to the point of taking life.

"If I could not myself take the life of any foe, neither could I be party to asking another to take that life.

"These were the points of my re-statement. The sermon was labelled Pro-German by members of Committee. One member sent a letter to Committee protesting that I did not represent my congregation, and was disloyal to my country. I therefore resigned.

"At the Annual Meeting, held on July 12th, my resignation was considered by the congregation. In view of the deep-seated difference between us on the matter of war and non-resistance, it was decided by the congregation to terminate my ministry forthwith. I have therefore ceased to be minister of the Johannesburg Unitarian Free Church as from the evening of July 12th.

The reader will notice that the attitude taken up by Mr. Hall is that taken by the Society of Friends, the Mennonites of Holland, the Tolstoyans, the recently formed "Fellowship of Reconciliation"—which embraces such widely respected representatives of religious thought as Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin and Dr. W. E. Orchard—and last, but not least, by Jesus Christ in the Sermon on the Mount, and, even to ignominious death, on the Mount of Calvary. It is not, therefore, the attitude of an eccentric or a visionary, but that of deep and earnest students and leaders of religious thought. It has always been the crowning glory of our faith that it was free—free from the bondage of hard and cramping religious dogmas, free and untrammelled to enter the uplands of the Spirit as a pioneer to purer and deeper life. How often have we been reminded of this freedom! How often, from pulpit, platform, and College Hall and chapel, have we been told to exult in its privileges and to prepare ourselves for its responsibilities—

"free from any subscriptions, tests, or obligations inconsistent with the sacred rights of truth and conscience." Now, if the example of the Johannesburg "Free" Church is followed, a new test will be imposed on our ministers: "Are you a Quaker? Are you a Mennonite? Are you a Tolstoyan? Are you a member of the Fellowship of Reconciliation? Are you a preacher of the Sermon on the Mount?" I am quite sure there is not one of the principals or professors at our colleges but will lament this deplorable action of the Johannesburg Church. It is a wound in the very heart of our religious life, and a blow at our highest and noblest traditions. If its example be followed, spiritual freedom will become a byword amongst us, and we shall become the laughing-stock of the whole religious world.

There is this, indeed, to be said in extenuation of the action of our Johannesburg friends (for I have good friends there, and I write more in sorrow than in anger), that the bitterness engendered by the war, the racial hatred which has been fed and stimulated by a Press which has no corrective or counter-balancing influence, and the dreadful misdeeds of German militarism, produced an atmosphere in which charity and fairness of judgment became daily increasingly difficult. With the return of normal times I am sure a truer spirit and temper will again assert itself. Already, indeed, we are learning from the accounts which are slowly trickling through from the East that militarism is much the same everywhere, that Russian militarism has been guilty of deeds as dreadful and terrible as those of Germany, and that our condemnation and pity must not be confined to one nation alone.

Mr. Hall is a young man, and, with the impetuosity of youth, he may have been less tactful than an older minister would have been in the trying circumstances in which he and the congregation found themselves. During the past year the deficit with which the year began has been almost wiped out, and the Treasurer reports that "the Church may congratulate itself upon a highly satisfactory state of affairs financially." In his work in connection with the Workers' Educational Association Mr. Hall has had the support of the Rev. S. F. Hawkes, Mr. R. T. A. Innes, the Chief Astronomer, Dr. Corstorphine, Dr. Lehfeldt, Prof. Orr, and other well-known citizens of Johannesburg.

R. BALMFORTH.

Cape Town.

[It is scarcely necessary to remind our readers that the attitude of Mr. Balmforth and Mr. Hall towards the war is not that of THE INQUIRER. On former occasions we have dealt with the arguments of the Peace-at-any-price Party, and do not feel called upon to repeat them.—ED.]

A GIRLS' CLUB AT WOOLWICH.

By the kindness of the Editor I am permitted to give an account of a girls' club at Woolwich which was started last year soon after the outbreak of war in order to provide a place for rest and recreation for the girls living in this busy garrison town, the need being extremely urgent owing to the shifting population of thousands of soldiers. The social workers in the neighbourhood have long wished for a girls' club which would be run on democratic lines, the girls being invited to express themselves in all the several activities which are being carried on for their benefit, both educational and recreative, and also for a club that would be non-party and non-sectarian. I think we may say, even in the short time of our club's existence, that this spirit has been kept in view, the consequence being that we already have girls from several denominations or none working side by side. It is believed that this mutual forbearance may gradually become a strong link towards breaking down the sectarian differences which are often keenly felt, though not, perhaps, understood by girls of the class for whom the club exists.

The house is not altogether satisfactory, but was the best that could be obtained at the time, consisting of three rooms for classes and social life, with a hall which is used for a gymnasium, dancing, and concerts. The club has been called upon to face peculiar difficulties in the past few months from the fact that a most capable leader was suddenly called away to other work, the ties which had been formed between her and the girls being thus broken. The attendance fell away, and for some little time it was considered doubtful whether the club could be kept alive. However, a fresh start has been made, and to show what it is proposed to attempt for the coming winter, a few of the offers of help from ladies and gentlemen which have been received may be of interest: the conducting of a citizenship class, a dramatic class, and classes for drilling, Morris dancing, singing, needlework, and sweet-making. An archaeologist who has written a very good history of the surrounding neighbourhood, is willing to give the Rambling Club some afternoons, when he will endeavour to awaken the latent love for the beauties of nature which I venture to think exists in every human being. Other offers are for lectures on 'Plant Life' (illustrated by lantern slides), and 'American Humour.' Friends from Hampstead have already promised help in entertainments on Saturday evenings and in various other ways.

May I now mention what further is required and the developments which can proceed if help is forthcoming: (1) The services of a lady doctor once in two or three weeks. This, I believe, will be an entirely new venture for Woolwich, yet it surely needs no pressing. The boon such services can confer on the members, and ultimately, it is hoped, on their mothers also, is beyond reckoning. (2) A "talker" on infant care, hygiene, and allied subjects. (3) A helper to volunteer regular work in running a penny bank to provide a nest egg for the girls in the months after the war, when it will be sorely needed. (4) On Sundays it is intended to inaugurate, if possible, an hour's quiet time in the hall (this is to be looked upon as a privilege, and only those will be expected to attend who desire to do so) which shall be devoted to talks on various subjects, with the intention of drawing out the spiritual and creative side of the girls' characters. Among other subjects it is much hoped that it will be possible to have some simple talks about the value and meaning of music.

The club is badly in need of equipment, among other things some easy chairs and good pictures. It was very lucky last week in receiving from H.R.H. Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, a couch, twelve chairs, and two forms, which have already cheered many a weary girl who is at present working from 8 to 8, all day Saturday, and, in some cases, also Sunday. A scheme for providing the voluntary munition workers at the Arsenal with a cold luncheon on Sundays is also under consideration. From this outline of work and hopes it will be seen that a great effort is being made to establish a permanent club where the aims and aspiration of its members may be fulfilled, and to make the Woolwich Girls' Club an invaluable asset to the civic life of the borough. It costs £250 a year to run. The hours for opening are from 7 to 10 P.M. every night in the week. On Saturday afternoons those members who are free to do so can play tennis and hockey on the L.C.C. grounds; there is also a good swimming bath which some enjoy. The fees charged are 2d. per week for each member, with small subscriptions for games, outings, &c. Through the hospitality of an interested friend there has been an excursion this summer to Bromley, to which nineteen members and their leader were invited. Towards this excursion the members were asked to pay a small amount, as it is believed that the principle of giving, even to working girls, everything for nothing is not to be encouraged. It was greatly enjoyed and a very happy result followed. The hostess, coming into close contact with one of the members less strong than the others, has offered her hospital treatment, to be followed by a three weeks' holiday. As the club and its usefulness become more known, it is very much hoped that such personal contact between those who can give and those who need to receive may very much increase.

Any assistance offered will be most gratefully received by the Hon. Club Leader, Miss Ada Murray, at 51, Wellington Street, Woolwich. She would also be delighted to show the club to any lady or gentleman who would care to write for an appointment. A. M.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Auckland, New Zealand.—Friends of the late Mr. and Mrs. Macky, whose death occurred in the sinking of the Lusitania, will be tenderly interested in the following lines from a letter just to hand from an Auckland correspondent:—"The last service they were at here was a Harvest Service, the first ever held in the Auckland Unitarian Church. Mr. Macky was not the one to say much, but he looked as if the great desire of his heart had come to him; and he was glad that his last Sunday at home had been full of the note of gratitude. Knowing what I do of the way in which he had prepared everything as for the end (for he liked to face all possibilities), I feel sure that he took the service as a fitting conclusion, if it was to be, of his praise here on earth." A city Memorial Service was held in the Town Hall on the Sunday after it was certain that they were lost; the Rev. W. E. Williams was asked to take part, and offered the prayer. There were nearly 4,000 people present, and "scarcely a dry eye in the place." The church held its own Memorial Service a week later. Up to the end of June three of its young men had been lost in the war; notwithstanding these sad experiences the congregation is keeping well on its way.

Belper.—As a sign of the effect of the war in drawing the various churches together it may be noted that for the first time the Unitarian minister has read a lesson in the parish church. The Rev. A. Leslie Smith performed this part in the representative service at St. Peter's on the evening of August 4th. He also read last Sunday afternoon at the drum-head service of the Home Guards, of which he is a Section Commander and the vicar is Chaplain.

Derby.—The Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland has resigned the pulpit at Friar Gate Chapel in order to devote himself to the welfare of the blind of the town.

Doncaster.—It is gratifying to learn that twenty-four members and friends of the Free Christian Church have joined His Majesty's Forces, and this week the minister, the Rev. Percy Jones, goes into camp in the R.A.M.C.

Heywood.—The late Mrs. William Wild.—On August 2nd the death occurred of Mrs. Wild, aged 80 years, at her residence in Heywood. Mrs. Wild had been closely identified with the life of the Heywood Unitarian Chapel for over half a century. Associated in their service and sacrifice with the first generation of worshippers, whose enthusiasm ensured the prosperity of this vigorous church, she exercised during these years a social influence upon the lives of a younger generation of workers; and, by her example and generosity, encouraged every effort which furthered the equipment of church and school for their spiritual work. A well-known and beloved personality in the philanthropic life of the community, she was honoured by all, and not least by the struggling and honest poor to whom she was an unfailing friend. While at home she regularly joined in worship at the Britain Hill Chapel, and her presence there will long be missed. Many of the earlier generations of students at the Home Missionary Board who used to come to preach at Heywood, will recall the hospitable home at which they were always welcome, and the gentle spirit whose motherly instincts made their stay with her a peculiarly happy and helpful time.

Leeds.—On Sunday morning, August 8th, the Rev. R. Nicol Cross, preaching at Mill Hill Chapel, spoke especially of the events which had taken place during a year of war. As a nation we could, he said, look the world in the face, and say that against our most earnest plea and argument were the forces of devilry let loose by him who held the key. This was a strength and comfort, but not the only one. "What do they know of England, who only England know?" How true it was, when they saw the men of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand flocking to the colours of a land which many of them had never seen. Stranger still did the mystery of the power and personality of England grow when they thought of the position of India and South Africa. Despite initial follies, not to say misdeeds, there, she had won confidence by her subsequent wise and generous statesmanship. What of the Motherland herself? She had not sought to save the skins of her soldiers by being a traitor to civilisation. When they turned from the field to look at home they need not be less justly proud. Women had given their own, their best; with something of the pride of the mothers of Sparta, and that was the finest thing in all history. As a nation, however, they had not risen as high as they might have done; they had not struck off all their fetters. There had been a deep, an unusual seriousness in the land, but it could not be said that much difference had resulted so far as organised religion was concerned, and we had still to make our people a sober people. In conclusion Mr. Cross referred to the change which had come over Germany. They were right to be Germany's pupils when she was a master, he said, but they would not be her slaves when she was a tyrant. The service closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

London: Plumstead.—In September next the Rev. D. Delta Evans will have completed two years' service as temporary minister of the Woolwich and Plumstead Unitarian Congregation. The church council, through the Executive Committee of the London District Unitarian Society, has extended to him a cordial and urgent invitation to continue his charge for another twelve months, pointing out that the work is beginning to show tangible results. A long-standing promise to conduct the service at the Links Hall was fulfilled last Sunday evening by Sapper A. George Tarrant, B.Sc., of the L.E.E. Anti-Aircraft Detachment (a member of the London Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union), who took for his subject 'Rebuilding the City: the City of the World's Peace.' He laid emphasis on the need and the value of a strong religious faith to carry us successfully through the present struggle, and made an earnest plea for loyalty to their religious convictions on the part of those whose duties did not call them away to the actual scene of battle. Another member of his Majesty's forces, who attended for the first time, expressed his real pleasure at the unexpected privilege of listening to a sermon by a comrade in khaki. Since the annual meeting three of the new supporters of the cause have joined the forces—Messrs. Elliott, Parsons, and Knight, two of whom, being old soldiers, have obtained commissions; while from one family, long connected with the congregation, no fewer than six sons are now serving with the colours. A few days ago, the Secretary (Mr. F. J. Munns) received an interesting letter from Pte. Knight (A.S.C.), in which, after describing some of his experiences in France, he says: "If friend — could have a month here, he would cease grumbling for ever on his return home. I often lie awake in my tent of a night, thinking of home, and of you at the Links. Although Sunday here is hardly distinguishable from any other day, nevertheless, last [Sunday] evening from 6.30 till 8 my thoughts, if not my body, were with you. Let me express the hope that you as a congregation may increase and prosper. Do your best to reward your able and eloquent minister; for in honouring him you are honouring yourselves and the faith to which you profess allegiance. May God bless you all is the earnest wish and fervent prayer of your sincere friend, R. Knight." Pte. Knight is well known in the district, and other parts of London, as an interesting speaker at Sunday afternoon gatherings.

Mountain Ash, Glam.—Successful anniversary meetings were held in connection with the Sunday School on July 18th. The children's choir, conducted by Miss Mabel Wilkins, L.L.C.M., ably acquitted themselves, and the musical part of the services was a great success. On the following Sundays, July 25th, and August 1st, special services were held on the mountain side, attended by large congregations. A special feature at the morning service was the large number of men who were present.

Wandsworth.—On Sunday, August 8th, the services at the Unitarian Church were of a special character in connection with the close of a year of war. In the morning the Rev. W. G. Tarrant spoke on the subject of national greatness. He held that the Christian principle: "He who serves most is greatest," applies not only to individuals and small groups, but also to nations. When, he asked, was England greater, when her merchants grew rich on the slave-trade, or when her Parliament voted a great sum of money to abolish slavery in her dominions? When was Spain greater, when she ruthlessly exploited the aborigines of South America, or when her missionaries and governors laid the foundations of civilised life in that continent? Was France great when her neighbours were over-run by the armies of Louis XIV., or, rather, when she freed her peasantry, secured just administration, and opened the gates of liberty to mankind? Was the Russia of a hundred years ago, when her rulers deliberately encouraged drunkenness, to be ranked as high as the Russia that had recently sacrificed a huge revenue in the interests of sobriety? As for Germany, it was difficult to speak with moderation. Its true greatness had lain not in wealth, or power, or cleverness, but in the services rendered to mankind in art and scholarship and uplifting thoughts. We had seen her led by ambitious militarists into the tragic mistake of supposing that the Christian principle had no force for the State, and that national greatness was to be sought in domination, not in service of mankind. It behoved ourselves to guard against cheap denunciation of others, while our own record needed our serious attention, and the ideal of helpfulness was in danger of being lost in the pursuit of selfish ends. In the evening, Mr. Tarrant referred to the causes of the outbreak a year ago, and expressed a conviction, deepened by the careful study of the diplomatic documents issued since then, that our nation did its duty when it resolved to withstand to the utmost the destroyers of international equity. Let the issue be what it may, to persevere in that duty with unswerving resolution was in his judgment the only right course for us.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE ANGELS OF MONS.

The story of angelic intervention between the English troops and the enemy at Mons is still being retailed, and although Mr. Machen has frankly explained that the myth is the outcome of his own imagination, and appeared in the form of a short sketch in an evening paper last September, many people still refuse to believe that it is pure fiction. Mr. Machen, in the introduction to his newly-published book, in which the Mons story, and other "legends of the war" appear, attributes this to the fact that angels, with certain reservations, have retained their popularity in England; and, apart from this, many people who are interested in the study of the occult find it difficult to relegate the belief in certain "ghostly" experiences to the region of crude superstition, although they do not deny that it often degenerates into a craving for uncanny stories which leaves the credulous and ignorant mind open to the grossest deception.

WITH THE RUSSIAN RED CROSS.

Mr. and Mrs. Aylmer Maude have contributed to the Daily Chronicle a translation from notes made in her diary by Countess Tolstoy, one of Tolstoy's daughters, who is acting as a Sister of Mercy in the eastern theatre of war. She describes how, in the course of her experiences, she had considerable trouble with a wounded officer who was being transferred with other wounded men from the hospitals in Grayeva to Belostok. A sister from Grayeva who accompanied him warned her that he was very capricious, and sometimes wanted to drive everybody away, and to throw everything on the floor. "At first he did look askance at me," she says, "but afterwards I managed to feed him, and even to converse with him in writing. The Sister mentioned to him that I was Leo Tolstoy's daughter, and he smiled and wrote: 'I had not the happiness of being in Yasnaya while my ideal was alive. The heavy blow of his death fell while I was still in the military school.' After a while he wrote 'November 20, 1910?' the date of my father's death, and looked at me inquiringly. I nodded. He smiled joyfully. He was pleased to be able to remember the date. He took my hand and pressed it warmly. We took him to the best hospital in Belostok, and he nodded to me pleasantly as he was carried away on stretchers."

THE NEW ENGLAND LITERARY TRADITION.

Miss Gertrude Atherton has done scant justice to the New England writers in her recent utterances against "the blight of the New England tradition," but there is some truth in what she says, though some of us may still sigh in days of a more abundant vitality for the silvery peace and "other worldliness" of Concord and the Transcendentalist period. American writers to-day have another message to deliver, another order of life to interpret, and it is an astonishing thing that they so often fail to do this with the freedom and courage that characterises the activities of other men, who, in different ways, are shaping the future of their nation. "We certainly are lacking in self-confidence in literature, music, painting—in all the arts," says Miss Atherton, and it is to this that she attributes, not only the gratitude with which America accepts everything artistic and literary that the other nations choose to send her, but the pathetic veneration for the New England tradition (perhaps more peculiarly characteristic at the present time of the smaller towns of the Middle West) which still has some of the old-established journals and best known writers in its cold grip. The New England school of thought makes for stiffness and preciseness and the elaboration of phrases, rather than for vital ideas and a sense of contact with the actual life of men. "It is really the Spectator tradition, the Addisonian tradition." In England it is discarded and forgotten, like the poets with long hair and black silk stocks who are still, it seems, to be found in cosmopolitan New York.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOARD-RESIDENCE in comfortable house, two miles from Aysgarth Falls. Vegetarians catered for. Convalescents receive special care.—Miss SMITH, Low Green House, Thoraby, Aysgarth S.O., Yorks.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

BRIGHTON.—Miss Lucy Kendall will take PAYING GUESTS during AUGUST and SEPTEMBER. Moderate terms. Highly recommended.—20, Charlotte Street. (Sea view).

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET August. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

HUCKABACK TOWELS, snow-white Irish Linen, with Damask borders. Size 22 by 40 inches. Bundle of four, 5s. 8d. Postage 4d. Bargain Catalogue free. Send postcard to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larnie, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, August 14, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3816.
NEW SERIES, No. 919.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God.
New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges,
2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.
Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage,
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—
Miss F. Hill, 35, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Principal: Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A., D.D., LL.D.

For particulars as to LECTURES, SCHOLARSHIPS, and EXHIBITIONS, apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to one of the undersigned.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A.,

1, St. James' Square, Manchester.

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.,

12, Glenloch Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

HEROES OF FAITH,
FROM WICLIF TO PRIESTLEY.

By ALBERT THORNHILL, M.A.

With 14 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net;
postage 3d.

In writing this little book the author has been impelled by the conviction that our young people have only to learn the story of the lives of the great Heroes of Faith to be moved with the desire to emulate their noble examples in the field of daily duty.

LESSONS FROM THE PAINTERS.

Lessons founded on Celebrated Pictures.

By LUCKING TAVENER.

With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net;
postage, 3d.

During thirty years of ministry, including pulpit, platform and class work, I have found the use of works of Art most valuable. This little book is written in order to show how reproductions of pictures might be used to illustrate ideals and duties.—From Preface.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tarif and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, August 22.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTHAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL. No Evening Service.
 Iford High Road, 11 and 7, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. — No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road.—Closed. Services resumed on September 5th.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. C. SHERIDAN STEVENS.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Mr. F. EDWIN ALLEN.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. L. TUCKER.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormoad Road. Closed during August.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. WM. THOMSON.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worples Hall, 7, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. RUDOLF DAVIS, B.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45. Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. PERCY W. JONES.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN LEE.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D., S.S.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street. Closed morning. Evening, Mr. S. R. GIBBON.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace.—Closed during August.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30. Mr. HAROLD W. STEPHENSON, B.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. STEPHENS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. HARMAN TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGEES, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUGHLAN, M.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church. High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. PAYNE.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

SCOTT.—On August 13th, at Linthwaite, Windermere, the wife of Sir Samuel H. Scott, Bart., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

GIBSON-SMITH.—On the 17th, at Wheeler Street Chapel, Lozell's, Birmingham, Sydney Edward, only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Gibson, "The Laurels," Esme Road, Sparkhill, Birmingham, to Nelly Maude, youngest daughter of Mrs. Smith, Handsworth.

WATKINS—GOODLAND.—On July 31st, at Christ's Church, Purley, Capt. E. V. Watkins to Grace, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Goodland, of Taunton.

DEATH.

TAVENER.—On August 18th, at 109, Whinbill Road, Aberdeen, Jeannie Hunter Malcolm, beloved wife of Rev. Lucking Tavener.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

A CLUB ASSISTANT, about 26, thoroughly domesticated, and desirous of social work. Facilities can be given for training as a Club Leader. Board and residence; if necessary, a small salary.—Write to Miss Murray, Girls' Club, Woolwich.

MISS SIMON, L.L.A., Inter. Arts (Lond.), Teachers' Diploma (Camb.). Care and Education of Girls (under twelve) at Zulla Road, Nottingham.

RELIABLE NURSE-HOUSEMAID or NURSE willing to undertake some housework, wanted end of September. Two boys 4 and 1½. Excellent reference essential. Good wages.—Mrs. WORSLEY AUSTIN, 31; Wheeley's Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

HOUSEKEEPER-COMPANION.—Needlework or other useful employment desired by experienced practical gentlewoman. Salary required.—L.P., INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	407
SENTIMENTALISM AND THE WAR	409
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	410
A SILVER CRUCIFIX	411
PERFUMED DREAMS	411

CORRESPONDENCE:—
Quakers and the War	412
Hiding our Light	412
The Teachings of Christianity	413
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Socrates and Plato	413

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund	414
A Church in the Woods	414
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	415
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	415

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

AMID all the excitement of the war, the daily tale of horrors and heroisms, the eager reading of telegrams and news from the front, the speeding up of munition works, the doings of Zeppelins and Submarines, the fall of cities, the thunder of guns, it is well we should now and again, and in some quiet moment, pull ourselves up and ask, "What are we fighting for?" Is it just to beat the Germans? That, indeed, is our immediate duty, yet only as a means to an end. We are not fighting for the sake of fighting, nor yet to prove our superiority to the enemy, which would be a poor business. Unless as we fight we keep clear our faith and confidence in the highest ideals of justice, honour, freedom, humanity, our conflict will degenerate into mere brutality and revenge. It is a great cause in which we are engaged, the maintenance of the permanent elements of human welfare, the vindication of the plighted word, the passion for righteousness in national and international affairs, the resistance at the utmost sacrifice of an aggression that knows no higher law than the mailed fist—this is the cause which has called us out of the ways of peace into the field of war. It is a spiritual thing for which we have sent our sons and brothers into battle. We are not out to "crush the Germans"—God forbid—but to redeem them from a totally false ideal of national life to an ideal that is sane and healthy. We think meanly of our cause when we think of it as anything less than an effort to further the coming of the kingdom of God, that kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness. If we think that our cause is the enlarging of our trade, or the destruction of a rival power, or the security of our vast possessions, we shall make our cause as poor as our thoughts. To make our cause noble we must think of it nobly. What we are out for is the better fellowship of all Europe, the liberties of Belgium, the assuaging of bloated armaments, the redressing of the wrongs of wronged nationalities, the vindication of the right of each state to its own type of civilisation, resistance to the claim of world-dominion. To be found faithful to that noble cause we must guard our hearts and thoughts lest we tarnish by greed or retaliation the national conscience.

* * *

ANY sign of the German mind returning to sanity is to be welcomed. Herr Lissauer's 'Hymn of Hate' is, perhaps, the most glaring instance of mental and moral derangement the present war has brought forth. Its immediate popularity in Germany was significant of thwarted hopes and dreams and plans. No civilised nation in its senses could have made such an exhibition of perverted feeling and judgment. And no nation with the slightest sense of humour could have shown itself so dull-witted and of so rancorous a temper. But Herr Lissauer has repented of his remarkable effusion. He explains in the Berliner

Tageblatt that he did not foresee the way in which it would be used by the public. He admits that it is very unsuitable for the young. The hymn, he tells us, was written as the result of a passionate impulse in the first weeks of the war; but on reflection he asks himself, "Whether these feelings can continue with the cool consideration of practical politics." It is in response to "attacks" in Germany itself on the wickedness of his attempt to glorify hate that he puts forth a quasi-apology. He does not want to go down to posterity with this thing like a mill-stone round his neck. He sees that there are some of his countrymen who are ashamed of his outburst of passion. He is ready to pour cold water on the fire he kindled. Alas! the mischief is done. The mind of Germany inflamed by dreams of conquest and aggrandisement, in the bitterness of disappointment responded at once to the call of hatred to England, the arch-enemy. Russia and France might be forgiven when they had been duly humbled, but England never. It was she who turned the scale, and nothing can be too devilish for her punishment; so the 'Hymn of Hate' is daily sung with gusto and gnashing of teeth. Happily there has been no such exhibition of impotent fury in this country. At first we were a little shocked, but Punch's wonderful picture of the German family and its morning practice of hate restored us all to good humour.

* * *

ONE hundred thousand voluntary enumerators have been at work all the week collecting twenty-two million register forms. The task has not been an easy one. The enumerators have been called upon for the exercise of much patience, tact, and good humour. It is astonishing how many people there are among the well-off who cannot fill up a simple form without blundering. The chief difficulty has been over question No. 9 relating to "work other than that over which you are already employed." Not a few have solved it by giving no answer at all. The indexing of the returns has already begun, and when it is concluded we shall be in possession of a fairly accurate account of how the nation is employed. The Government registers will arrange the occupations of men under forty-six categories, and those of women under thirty. If there is any great body of "slackers" in our midst the returns will make it known. The immediate result has quickened recruiting to a considerable degree.

* * *

MR. LLOYD GEORGE'S announcement that "up to August 6, 345 establishments had been declared 'controlled establishments'" is eminently satisfactory—as far as it goes. If it could have been made earlier it would probably have prevented several strikes and labour disputes. The contention of the working man that many employers are making enormous profits out of the war appears to be justified or Mr. George would not go on to say, "As a result of this control the profits of the employers are limited and the Act provides that any excess profit over such limit shall be paid into the National Exchequer." We are not told what the limit of profit is to be nor on what principle it is based. Of the working man's part in these controlled establishments, Trade Union rule and custom is for the time being abrogated with the promise of re-imposition when the war is ended. Both employers and workmen are called upon to consent to make sacrifices for the public good in a time of crisis. It is intolerable on the one hand that individuals should be making large fortunes for themselves out of the public calamity. It is equally intolerable that the public safety should be imperilled by Trade Union regulations which limit the output of our sorely-needed munitions. That Government control should now be accepted in so large a number of munition works solves both difficulties at a stroke. The nation will no longer be exploited by individual speculators, and its armies will no longer be crippled by lack of munitions arising from labour regulations which, legitimate in themselves, are out of place in a time of national peril.

* * *

THE parrot cry for conscription goes up day and night from the Northcliffe press with wearisome iteration. These gentry tell us that nothing is going well with us either at home or abroad, and all is due to the lack of compulsion. Delays in Flanders, delays at the Dardanelles, shortage of munitions, slackers in the streets, blunders at the War Office, are all the result of the weakness of an invertebrate ministry afraid to act up to its convictions. The columns of some of our contemporaries are filled with masses of pessimistic rubbish. The only cure for our misfortunes, they assert, is a tap on the shoulder from the nearest constable. The latest move of these bilious critics is the starting of a National Service League for holding fiery meetings up and down the country with the view of bringing pressure to bear on the Government. A list of adherents to this movement has been published with a loud flourish of trumpets. A good many of the signatories are quite unknown to the public, the most prominent name being that of the distinguished obstructionist, Sir F. Banbury. But in spite of this fanfaronade we are quite sure that the general feeling throughout the land is "trust the Government." Should compulsion, in the opinion of the Government, ever become necessary, it will have to come before Parliament in whose decision we shall all acquiesce. No outsiders, not even the founders of the League, can know the facts of the position. We deprecate a crusade of meetings. The responsibility is with the Government only. Any forcing the hands of the authorities will only result in chaos and the probable break-up of the present Cabinet. So long as recruits are coming in as fast, we are assured, as the authorities can deal with them, the cry for compulsion is simply an endeavour to harass and discredit a Government that declines to be the tool of the reactionaries.

* * *

THE attitude of belittling criticism on the part of some half-dozen of our jingo newspapers is becoming a serious nuisance. Their daily depreciation of their own country, their constant disparagement of the exertions made by all classes of the community, furnish the enemy with abundant material for rejoicing, and tend to chill the enthusiasm of our heroic troops at the front. It is, of course, possible to attach undue importance to the utterances of a journalism which expects something melodramatic to happen every day, and is ready to sacrifice the true interests of the country in its eagerness to work up a sensational scare. But, however contemptible these efforts, they suffice to irritate and dishearten many who are making sacrifices they can ill afford in the national cause. Let them be assured that the facts of the situation are of quite another kind. Our descendants will wonder at the magnificent response of our people to the national call for service. To have raised and equipped and drilled into effectiveness three million men in the course of a single year is an achievement no one dreamed possible, least of all our enemies. To have swept the seas of every enemy ship afloat is a feat of incalculable value to each of the allies. To have transported an army of a million men to France without the loss of a single soldier is a proof of the matchless power of our navy. To have shut up the German navy in its harbours, where for the purposes of war it is as harmless as if at the bottom of the sea, tells its own story of England's power. The loss of the transport King Edward in the Ægean Sea is a disaster indeed, and has awakened profound sorrow throughout the land. But horrible as it is, it does but serve to emphasise the almost miraculous success which has attended the work of the English navy in guarding the long line of transports from Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Let no one be dismayed by the croakers. To our countrymen at home and abroad we would say, sursum corda.

* * *

IN the current number of Goodwill, a journal issued by the "World Alliance of Churches for Promoting International Friendship," which is to a large extent a Pacifist association, we are glad to notice a paper by Dr. T. J. Lawrence on the "Concert of Europe," in which the truth about the present war is put before the Pacifist public in plainest terms. Dr. Lawrence writes:—"This war is the most terrible ever waged on earth. And it is also the most wicked. From the beginning it was a sin against light on the part of the men who made it, though not on the part of the men who marched at their command, still less on the part of those who took up arms to oppose them. Its remote causes were a belief in force rather than justice as the regulator of human affairs, a contempt of human brotherhood, and a mingled fear and distrust of political liberty. Its immediate causes were a determination to force a conflict when France and Russia were ill-prepared, and Great Britain lacked, so it was deemed, both the will and the power to intervene. It was conceived in sin and born in iniquity. And its methods have proved worthy of its origin."

We value this utterance on the part of Dr. Lawrence and the journal in which it appears not only as witnessing to the righteousness of our part in the war, but also as likely to gain a hearing in quarters usually deaf to the voices of those who defend and justify England's participation in the great conflict.

SENTIMENTALISM AND THE WAR.

THE words "sentiment" and "sentimentalism" have much the same relation to each other as the words "religion" and "religiosity." They speak of the transformation of good things into ill things. Sentiment is thought coloured by emotion; sentimentalism is emotion largely discharged of thought. If sentiment be "the lyrical feeling awakened by truth and reality," sentimentalism is the artificial awakening of feeling by fancies and fiction, at points far distant from the truth of things, and distant also from any possible ends of noble action. At the present moment the public ear is afflicted by the drone of men and women in whom warm feeling is divorced from any adequate appreciation of the stern and stubborn facts of the national situation. Many of these people are distinguished by personal charm and high character, but their judgment is perverted, first, by emotional indulgence unchecked by clear thinking, and second, by taking a fanciful and sometimes unreal life for an ideal one. It is a mark of the sentimentalist to believe that his disease is blooming health; instead of resolutely facing the facts which dominate the national life and constitute the national danger, he gives himself up to theories, solutions, and remedies which are almost farcical when applied to the realities of the position with which the nation has to deal. When, for instance, a well-known minister of religion urges us to seek peace with Germany by offering to share our colonies with her we see a worthy man up in a balloon, pursuing the shadows of clouds and thinking to build a castle of safety on those airy foundations. He is oblivious of the very elementary fact that the Colonies are not ours to share, that for all practical purposes they are free and independent nations, having the right, which they would sturdily assert, to settle their own destiny. It is impossible to imagine the indignation of Canada or Australia or New Zealand if any proposal to hand over to Germany even the smallest portion of their respective territories were for one moment entertained by the British Government. It is only the nebulous, distraught sentimentalist, lost to all reality who could find a ray of hope in such a grotesque proposal. Or let us take the answer made by a speaker at the late Swanwick Conference when asked what he would actually do if a murderous attack were made upon him by some ruffian. The speaker having denounced the use of physical force under any circumstance provoked from the audience the question as above. He replied, he would paralyse the ruffian by an effort of spiritual force. We wonder! It boggles the mind to try and picture the British soldier, inspired by the Swanwick sentimentalist, laying down his arms and endeavouring to paralyse asphyxiating gas and howitzer shells by a display of spiritual force. When our sentimental friends wax eloquent on the horrors of war we agree with them. When they remind us of the dear and sacred things of peace and goodwill we are grateful to them. When they declare that Christian principles should control the actions of states not less than those of individuals, and that international disputes should be settled by methods of justice and conciliation, we entirely concur. We concur while at the same time pointing out that these declarations by no means cover the whole grounds either of physical or spiritual force. For it is also true that "sometimes civilisation does git forrid on a powder-cart," and that in the long working out of events God makes the wrath of men to further human good.

When we are reminded of the cruelty, brutality, and suffering of war, and of the thousands of eager, promising, and brave young lives strewing the battlefield in death, we remember also that this is a stern world in which men live, where pain and suffering and death are not necessarily displeasing to the Divine Will or inimical to the spiritual growth of the race. Now, perhaps, for the first time we begin to realise (using the words of Evelyn Underhill in The Hibbert Journal), "Why it is that the saints in spite of their infinite compassion for all sufferers, have never regarded suffering itself as an evil thing, nor looked for a physical order from which it should be eliminated; why the Church, too, has her soldier saints who have known how to combine impassioned love of order and faithful adherence to the creed of Christ with unflinching struggle in a righteous cause.... War has sometimes been a constructive force, numbering among its offspring many sins and cruelties, hateful passions, vile deeds, embittered thoughts, squalor, misery, waste, yet the twin spirits of tragedy and sacrifice are its children too." But leaving that aside and turning to our pacifist and sentimentalist, and admitting all that he has to urge, we ask, What course then do you suggest the nation should pursue at the present crisis when it is struggling for its very existence?" It is not enough to answer by protestation of the wickedness of war, nor by torrents of blame for the policy which led us into war, nor by interpretations of the teaching of Christ which imply that non-resistance of evil is the first of all Christian duties. For a moment let all these things be granted. The question still remains, What would you have us do under the present circumstances? Would you have us call home our troops and leave Belgium to her fate? Would you have us disarm our navy and leave our shores open to invasion? What sort of message would you send to hearten our men at the front who are laying down their lives so freely in order that you may live in peace and quietness and freedom? Will it give them help and consolation to be told that making the supremest sacrifice a man can make in this world—laying down his life for a great cause, for freedom, honour, justice, home and friends and country, they are doing that which is opposed to the Christian Gospel? It is all very well for the sentimentalist to aver his willingness to die rather than resist by force the enemy. He knows very well that he will never be thrust into that extremity. He is safe only because other men will suffer death to ensure his safety. He will enjoy the peace which is the fruit of victory in the field without incurring any of its risks. Even he looks forward to victory for our armies since it is inconceivable that there should be a single Englishman who does not feel that the war must be carried to a decisive issue, even in the interests of peace and goodwill. It is still more inconceivable that there should be persons, who, rather than resist by force of arms a Power which preaches the altogether damnable doctrine that might is right, would allow that Power to over-run Europe regardless of every obligation of honour and humanity. The truest friend of right against might is not the man who sits at home in his comfortable armchair like Falkland "ingeminating peace," but the man who toils for peace through untold suffering in the trenches. There is no help for peace in the sentimentalism that merely carps at the manner of our entanglement in a struggle that must alter all the world for ever.

There is an ignoble pacifism which lives at ease and with the comfortable sense of a superior dissent from 95 per cent of his countrymen. We are all familiar with the emotion that repels from war, and hates it; but most men are also aware of a stronger moral and spiritual emotion which they connect with patriotism, with respect for the plighted word and equity between nation and nation. When this emotion leads to war it entails much suffering; but men have never shirked suffering for their country. That they are called upon to suffer for an ideal may be the fact which constitutes its attraction. Before the glory and power of the ideal they are not afraid of death.

For how can man die better
Than facing fearful odds,
For the ashes of his fathers
And the temples of his gods?

The sentimentalist tells us that all this is a "throw back" to barbarism, wrecking at a stroke a dearly acquired civilisation. On the contrary, it is the breaking down of barriers that stood in the way of a finer civilisation than the world has yet known. The immediate results for many a long year will be, must be, a burden heavy to bear; but the end will be a saner organisation of international relations and a brighter outlook for human fellowship—always provided the victory be great enough to ensure an all-round reduction of armaments and the overthrow of militarism. This it is rules the sentimentalist out of court. He is doing nothing to help the great cause forward. On the contrary, he is clogging the wheels. Every little pacifist meeting is a hindrance, it encourages the enemy, it tends to discourage our soldiers. It leads the enemy to think that we are weakening in our resolve to fight the thing through, inducing him to redouble his exertions; and if Thomas Atkins were not so stout-hearted and gloriously optimistic, it would relax his moral fibre to hear good, soft-hearted people declare that he is engaged in a procedure little short of criminal. On the contrary he believes that he is engaged in a contest not for British supremacy as against German supremacy, but for the supremacy of conscience, honour, good faith, and humanity against the brute principle of military force.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

THOUGHTS.

THOUGHTS are the angels which we send abroad,

To visit all the parts of God's abode.

Thoughts are the things wherein we all confess

The quintessence of Sin and Holiness

Is laid. All wisdom in a Thought doth shine,

By Thoughts alone the Soul is made divine.

Thoughts are the springs of all our actions here

On Earth, tho' they themselves do not appear.

They are the springs of Beauty, Order, Peace,

The city's gallantries, the fields' increase. Rule, Government, and Kingdoms flow from them,

And so doth all the New Jerusalem,

At least the Glory, Splendour, and Delight,

For 'tis by Thoughts that even she is bright.

Thoughts are the things wherewith even God is crown'd,

And as the Soul without them's useless found,

So are all other creatures too. A Thought

Is even the very cream of all He wrought.

All Holy fear, and Love, and Reverence, With Honour, Joy, and Praise, as well as Sense,

Are hidden in our thoughts. Thoughts are the things

That us affect: the honey and the stings Of all that is are seated in a Thought,

Even while it seemeth weak, and next to nought.

The matter of all pleasure, virtue, worth, Grief, anger, hate, revenge, which words set forth,

Are Thoughts alone. Thoughts are the highest things,

The very offspring of the King of Kings.

THOMAS TRAHERNE (1636 ?-74).

HOW lovely are thy messengers,

O Lord of Hosts: my soul hath a desire and a longing for thy word.

Thou sendest forth thy prophets in every age: and thy truth runneth swiftly to the ends of the earth.

The pure in heart have seen thee, O God: the lowly have found thee near at hand:

These tell of thy loving kindness: from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same they keep not silence:

Publishing peace upon the mountains: and bringing good tidings of great joy:

That thou art blessed for ever: and in thy will is our peace.

Thou art the everlasting fountain of life: and they that drink thereof shall thirst no more:

Light of our seeing and soul of our souls: within all spirits and beyond all worlds.

Who sustainest the heavens with the might of thy power: and gladdenest the eyes of all living with the beauty of thy holiness.

That the children of men may behold thy glory: and see thy wonders in the great deeps. AMEN.

[From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.]

ALMIGHTY FATHER, in our sorrow and care we pour out our hearts before thee on behalf of our forces now in active service. We know that thy compassion is infinitely greater than ours, and that thou needest no reminding of the wants of thy children. But we cannot help beseeching thee of thy love and mercy to do what we can never do—to comfort and sustain them in the hour of conflict and of peril, to help them to bear their hardships, their wounds, and their adversities, to assure them of thy Fatherly protection of their beloved kindred, and to give them perfect peace in death. Help us all to do our duty towards them and to their families. In the vicissitudes of this war, teach us by our reverses to be humble, and by our conquests to be more faithful to thee and to the cause of justice and liberty. Into thy hands we commit our beloved King and country, our soldiers and sailors, our ministers and the Members of Parliament who guide our national counsels. And may all we do, or gain, or suffer, bring more glory to thee, and promote the true welfare of mankind. AMEN.

A SILVER CRUCIFIX.

WHEN young Hughie Ratigan found himself sent to the front to fight somewhere in Flanders, everything appeared very strange to him. The country-side was strange, the people were strange, so were their dress and their whole way of going on. He couldn't know a word they were saying at first, either. But there was one thing very homely and nice to Hughie. That was to see the old woman he was billeted with and her little grand-child Julie kneeling down every night to say the Rosary. It put him in mind of his poor mother at home in Connemara. She'd be praying there about the same time. And he remembered what she had said when he was saying good-bye to her: "The Son of Mary, He that died on the Cross for us, He'll watch over my boy for me." He'd think over that word and be kneeling down in that little Belgian home beside the old woman and Julie.

When Hughie went off to the soldiering the people about had all said it was the best thing that could happen to him. He hadn't been going on too well the way he was. There was no harm in the poor boy, only for the old mother spoiling him, rearing him very tender and useless. And it's a true saying, "A pet lamb makes a cross ram." Hughie grew into what you might call an arch thief; fond of a sup and a great warrant to poach, but with no element for work.

The changed boy he was after his training! The swinging step of him, head up and back straight! His mother couldn't but feel proud of him then. Of course she fretted to think of he going into such dangers. But she knew he was right to fight for them that had been so wronged; so she didn't let on to him the fear was in her heart.

So Hughie had started in fine feather. His comrade-boys were agreeable. And if the sergeant was a bit contrary sometimes, why them all knew it wasn't the man's fault. Sure he had to be doing as well as he could. He'd be in the trenches for may be ten days at a time; then back to the old Granny I spoke of, and she was real good to him. It wasn't too long till they understood one another middling well. And she told him how that her only child, little Julie's father, had been shot down by the Germans with a lot of other men because they made whatever little resistance they could when the village was attacked before the British drove them back. Julie would always be watching for Monsieur Hughie to come back for his few days' rest and refreshment. They were all friendly with the Tommies, God help them! couldn't do enough for them. Well and good; but this didn't last. There came a time, Hughie didn't rightly know what happened, but they were beaten back out of their trenches, and Hughie found that he was lost. He didn't know where the others were; he didn't know where he was or what side he ought to go. It was pitch dark and raining like as if it was coming down out of a sieve. He was knee-deep in mud. Betimes he'd fall over something, he couldn't know what, and he wouldn't care to look what it was even if he could see. He was one ache of hunger and cold and tiredness. But he kept on some ways thinking he should reach the little house he knew and the old friend. Wasn't it just ahead of him?

Where at all was it gone! The clouds lifted, and there he saw, not the grand little town he had left so short a while before, but a huddle of ruined walls, all black and very quiet. He thought he must be in some mistake, and was wondering where on earth he could be when he saw a piece on farther a faint little light. He dragged himself towards it. It was shining from a half-ruined house. Hughie peeped in through a window.

If it wasn't the very place he was longing to see! Only all through—other and confused as if a big wind had turned it upside down! But there was the old woman, and her face more like a withered leaf than ever. She and the child were kneeling hand-in-hand praying and looking up at a Crucifix against the wall. Hughie knew it to be one he often saw in the chapel. He guessed it had been saved from there, the Chapel being battered down since he left; it had been just opposite. Silver it was and most beautiful, all complete even to the nails through the kind, praying hands.

Hughie gave a soft little tap on the window. The next minute had'd give all he had—it wasn't much—to not have made that sound. For the child started up from her prayers wild with the pure fright. She looked like a mad thing. But in one second of time the Granny had her in her old arms, and the little curly head pressed against her breast so that Julie's eyes were hid. Then she said tremblingly, "Entrez!" And when Hughie did that she almost smiled as she said, "Look out, my cherished one, it's our own Monsieur Hughie, back safe, by the mercy of the good God!"

So Julie peeped out and then went over to Hughie to kiss him, and sit on his knee. Every now and then she'd give a sob out of her. Hughie petted her and even got her to laugh at some queer saying, and before long she fell asleep so that he could lay her on a bed that was in the corner, and cover her up there.

The old woman was creeping about getting ready whatever scraps of food she had, and while Hughie was breaking his fast on them, and feeling comforted and refreshed by the welcome he found waiting for him, she told him what had been happening since he had left.

The village had been shelled. Yes, the very Chapel was down. But some one had saved the Crucifix and given it to her to keep before running away. They were all gone except herself and Julie.

"I am too old and feeble to go," she said, "and besides, how could I let Julie see? Oh, it is worse than death to see terror in a child's face, so we hid.... And she knows nothing. The good God has helped me. She knew only about her father, that he is gone on before us to Heaven. And if they come again I will cover my little one's eyes close, close, and whisper to her not to fear, that He is taking us away, too, to Himself where her father is. We pray always before the Crucifix.... But she must not see the horror...."

That minute Hughie heard a sound, the tramp of soldiers' feet. And it couldn't be the British, he knew. And it was coming, coming on quickly. The old woman was praying again; she had not heard it yet.

Hughie stood up and crossed himself. You have to make up your mind in a hurry there.

"I'll be going on now, Mam," he said, "and is obliged for the supper; it put heart in me." He blew out the light. "You will be safer without that in case...."

There's how she never saw him tearing the Crucifix off the wall as he rushed out again into the night.

It was dark enough still, but the enemy saw him. He ran first as if to meet them, then stopped, then turned aside. They followed him away from the village.

The old woman lay down beside the child, and the two of them slept sound till morning. With Hughie about they felt themselves to be safe.

Later some of the people came stealing back. From where they had been hiding they had seen the Germans that night entering the village, then swerving to hunt after something. That something was Hughie. They found him stretched in death a good piece off. But he had the Crucifix still. They buried it with him, and the old woman and Julie lay flowers on his grave and say the Rosary there now.

K. F. PURDON.

PERFUMED DREAMS.

A YOUNG man who lost an adored sister while she was yet a blithe and winsome child tells me that memories of her are always heralded by an arresting fragrance of violets. At such times if a friend endowed with any keenness of sense should chance to pay him a visit, he will inquire "Where are the flowers whose sweetness fills the room?" But the only answer is a smile, for the dreamer's rapt face is lit by the belief that she has been there, the little companion of his youth, the merry mischief-maker whose gaiety is now expressed in turning sadness into sweetness, and consecrating memory, till it comes out of the past like yonder waggon of hay with sleek horses shaking their jangling bells, and merry lads high perched on the load, and filling the road with the delicious scent of the mown and mellowed grass. In that beautiful prayer which Festus makes in the hospital at St. Sebastian for his forgotten, ruined Aureole, he is reminded of past graces.

I know thee, who hast kept my path, and made Light for me in the darkness, tempering sorrow

So that it reached me like a solemn joy.

Ah! if only in the height and depth of our present sorrow that tempering might come, what depth and height of solemn joy might not our soul range between! For life retains nothing in the raw form, but is always busy converting rocks into roses, and raindrops and tears into rainbows, and agonies and exultations of spirit into strength and beauty of character. Yea, "Knowledge by suffering entereth, and life is perfected by death."

What straining of the elemental substance ere the thought took grace and form, and there at last it is revealed in the blossom, the bird-song, the lovelit eye. There are things that can be communicated only in the long-resting glance. There are "mysterious motions of the soul no way to be defined save in strange melodies." Then what a vivid and varied language is colour! One can read passion in the poppy, blatant bounce in the escholtzia, dim blue eyes of memory in the forget-me-not, quiet affection in the pink rose, spiritual yearning in the blue lotus. But what are the fragrant things saying? Something in them is reaching out to you, calling to you, as significantly as colour and song are calling. How varied is the appeal! And how difficult to translate into words the difference of sense-impression. There is the scent of the first primrose and the yellow Himalayan poppy. There is the scent of the wild white violet and of the freesia. There is the scent of the fragrant butterbur and meadowsweet. There is the scent of the wallflower and the white jessamine. There is the scent of the Daphne and the night-scented stock. There is the scent of the hawthorn and the elder, of which but a little goes a long way. There is the scent of the broom and wayfaring tree. There is the scent of the boroma and the bog-myrtle. Try and describe the differences between four things as wide apart as the bluebell, the cowslip, the lavender, the sweet pea, or take four or five kinds of scented roses, how limited is our language! We borrow from other flowers and say it is a lemony smell, or it reminds me of woodruff or of the beanflower, or of lilies of the valley, or of lilac. Some of my friends boldly jump into an alien category and declare that hawthorn has a yellow smell, and the fragrant orchid blue and silver. The poets sometimes almost speak of scents in ethical terms.

How sweetly smells the honeysuckle
In the hush'd night, as if the world were one
Of utter peace and love and gentleness!

All sweetly fragrant flowers convey the impression of peace and love and gentleness. They are on the side of happiness and goodwill, not of discord and misery. They are an accent of the everlasting yea. When Beethoven stood speechless before his stricken friend, Madame Erthmann, and then sat down to the piano and began to pour out his soul's desire to comfort and console her, and said "everything to me in music," he used one of the soul's dialects when words but fail. The Great Life Force has used sweet scents in the same way. They are a lover's lure, they are a soft caress and a silent call, they are like a touch of an unseen hand laid in so tender a reminder.

I cannot lift the temple flower (Plumeria Acutifolia) to my face but at once I feel and see the yearnings of ten thousand hearts in every age toward the Ineffable God, and then the response of the Great Spirit like a great wave swamping with infinite solace the souls of His seekers. I can hardly bear to hold a certain spring flower for the exhilaration as of a rhythmic dance of world-forces compressing a myriad ages of growth into a maddening moment of ecstasy, communicated by the pulse of its wildly careering sap.

And one can now hardly dare to pass through the summer-scented bowers of our country lanes without being moved to tears by the sense of a vast Heart tortured with longing for its own, as the Master of Life, Manito the Mighty, yearned with compassion over his people, so the flowers make the night air redolent with delicious pleading and solemn warning:—

I am weary of your quarrels,
Weary of your wars and bloodshed,
Weary of your prayers for vengeance;
All your strength is in your union,
All your danger is in discord;
Therefore, be at peace henceforward,
And as brothers live together.

J. T. D.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

QUAKERS AND THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In an excellent review of Mabel Richmond Brailsford's "Quaker Women," which appears in your issue for the 14th inst., the writer "F. R." criticises the attitude of the Friends in relation to the present war in the following words:—"The inability of the Friends to deal influentially or weightily with the present appalling situation is disappointing, and seems to be due to the amiable weakness which, refusing to face realities, thinks that the pedantry of barbarism can be adequately confronted by the pedantry of pacificism."

I am amazed that the writer should so misunderstand and misrepresent the Quaker position. Looking around at the general attitude of the organised churches one is compelled to admit, if one's view of Christianity is clear, that the witness of the Friends is the only logical approximation to the essential ethics of the Christ and His Cross. The Quaker does not seek to meet the "pedantry of barbarism" with the "pedantry of pacificism" but with something much greater, the irresistible power and dynamic of Divine love. To refuse to believe in the omnipotence of this force is to refuse acknowledgment of the essential basis of Christianity itself. The Quaker witness is not simply "do not retaliate," it is far more positive, it is the assertion of "overcoming evil with good." It postulates a residuum of divinity in every human personality, and believes that this must respond ultimately to the appeal of the Spirit of Love. As William Temple says in one of his "Repton Sermons," "No man can go on for ever betraying a trust which is constantly renewed; no man can go on for ever rejecting a love that remains unquenched by all his ingratitude." Love may be crucified by hate, but through the Cross it will conquer; if the cross of Jesus means anything it means that. The Quakers have "faced realities" and realised that Satan cannot cast out Satan, that the spirit of war cannot be destroyed by war, but is only perpetuated by such a method. There is no "amiable weakness" in this, unless the meekness of Christ be called by that name. It is not the unheroic attitude, for only those who adopt it can realise what it means at a time such as this, when the superficial logic of "necessity" is again blinding the Christian Church—as it has often done before—as to its plain duty in regard to war. Those who adopt such an attitude are as "voices crying in the wilderness," but it is theirs to engage in the service of healing, restoration and love, comforting the distressed, binding up the wounds of the stricken, caring for the widows and the fatherless, and helping to keep the star of faith shining in the midnight darkness. How finely and nobly Friends are doing this must be acknowledged by all who know of the work they are accomplishing, but greater than all, if our vision is only clear enough to perceive true values, is the witness they are bearing to "the virtue and power of that life that takes away the occasion for all wars"—to use the words of their own inspired founder—waiting in the patience of hope "till the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied."—Yours, &c., H. LEWIS JEFFERSON.

Highams Park,
August 17, 1915.

HIDING OUR LIGHT.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—As coming from one who takes a deep interest in our Churches from various points of view, Mr. Ronald Jones's impressions on a first visit to our Churches in a section of the Eastern Counties is worthy of attention.

But the complaint made is only evidence of a deeper seated cause. We might even ask, has our light ever shone in the Eastern Counties; in other words, has modern religious thought ever gained a firm footing in the Eastern Counties? These Chapels which have come to us, it might almost be said as residuary legatees, were founded at a time when travelling was slow and difficult, and each town led almost an independent existence. Worthy citizens flourished and took an interest in local matters. There came a time of religious excitement when many saw reason to leave the Church, hence dissenting congregations were formed, among them the Presbyterian. Then came a time of internal division, and by reason of an open trust the advanced section was able to hold on to the buildings, not, however, without loss in numbers. As the worthy founders died off and conditions changed, their families scattered or became indifferent, or rejoined orthodoxy for social or other reasons. Thus the attendance dwindled, for vacant places were not filled up, until finally we have the position to-day when it is difficult to find suitable local men to assume any responsibility.

If the foregoing is a fair summary of the trend of events, something more is required than prominent notice boards. There is the need of a new baptism of the spirit. But the spirit bloweth where it listeth, and because there are convenient buildings, that is no guarantee that the spirit will lodge just there.

The Chapels X and Y are not difficult to identify. Considerable thought and money have been spent on X in recent years. It is closed at the moment through untoward circumstances, but had there been any adequate local response to the efforts already made, the result would have been different. The case hardly stands alone.

Many believe that this war is going to make all things new, that politics, and social life, and religion will have to make new departures. Especially in religion, only that which is grounded on reality will remain. All sects must examine their foundations including our own. It is possible, therefore, that there may be a spiritual requickening in the Eastern Counties, whose sons have been among the foremost to obey their country's call. In that case the ancient Chapels which have fallen to our care may enjoy a renewal of usefulness, if we are ready to adjust our focus to the rising dawn.

What has been said of the Eastern Counties will apply to a considerable extent to the south-eastern and southern rural districts.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD CAPLETON.

113, Highbury New Park, Aug. 17.

THE TEACHINGS OF CHRISTIANITY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I read in your issue of the 14th that the Rev. R. G. Hall has had to resign the ministry of the Unitarian Church in Johannesburg because he insisted on teaching the orthodox doctrines of Christianity as if they were practically binding on Christians at the present time. For instance, he taught the Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man, love your enemy, turn the other cheek, &c. Now it is very clear to-day that very few people believe these doctrines. The whites in Africa do not believe that the blacks are their brothers. The colour bar in South Africa (myself and a few others protesting) was established a few years ago by the British Parliament in the Act of Union. The nations of Europe are now engaged in the most frightful slaughter the world has ever known, in direct defiance of the teachings attributed to Jesus Christ. I cannot regard this as a satisfactory result of about 1,000 years of Christian teaching. A religion which does not apply to a serious crisis is, to my mind, a religion that fails when it is tested. Sunday after Sunday, year after year, passages from the beautiful teachings of Jesus are read to us and preached to us.

But when the crisis comes no one (except Mr. Hall and a few others) acts in accordance with them. What teaching shall they follow? The shepherds have misled their flocks. They are now on with a different instruction, they are teaching gun and bayonet, fire and sword; after the war these will be put by, and the other teaching, with great skill and eloquence, will proceed as before with the same result. Suppose the German nation instead of being taught in all its churches and schools the Sermon on the Mount (as taught by Almighty God when He came to earth in human form), a religion which it evidently did not believe, had been taught some religion which it could believe, a religion more in accordance with practical politics in Europe to-day, is it possible that it might have been believed, that it might have guided that great nation when the crisis came, in the way of peace? As it was they had to choose between Jesus and Bernhardt, and Jesus wasn't in it. Had the priesthood been modernised, and had they taught a practical religion (say, like Norman Angell), they might have guided the people on the lines of gentleness, mercy, honour, honesty, commonsense, arbitration, commercial prosperity, and intellectual fraternity.—Yours, &c.

ARNOLD LUPTON.

7, Victoria Street, Westminster,
August 15, 1915.

[Mr. Lupton falls into the usual mistake of the pacifists, whether Quakers or Tolstoyans, namely, that theirs is the only permissible interpretation of the teaching of Christ. We commend to Mr. Lupton's consideration Mr. Lloyd Thomas's little book on 'The Immorality of Non-Resistance'.]

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

SOCRATES AND PLATO.

Greek Philosophy. Part I. Thales to Plato. By John Burnet. London: Macmillan & Co., 10s. net.

THIS is one of a series of books on the Schools of Philosophy which are appearing under the editorship of Prof. Sir Henry Jones, who seems to be finding his philosophical metier in this particular kind of work. The one man for the Greek period was, of course, Prof. Burnet, whose 'Early Greek Philosophy,' now in its second edition, is a standard work on the subject. The chief interest of the present volume will centre round his account of Socrates and Plato. Whatever be the final verdict upon his theses, it will be admitted that he brings to the work of interpretation a thorough knowledge of the Platonic dialogues, not only of the earlier but of the later, and, indeed, his aim in the past dealing with Plato is rather to fill up a lacuna in the general knowledge of Plato's late dialogues than to give a detailed apology for the conclusions at which he has arrived from their study.

It would be impossible within the limits of a notice like this to do more than call attention to what is nothing less than a revolution in the traditional views regarding Socrates and Plato, views which, he tells us in a note at the end of the book, became to him hopeless so long as a quarter of a century ago. He characterises the usual method employed in building up a picture of Socrates and his philosophy as that of using the material in Xenophon's 'Memorabilia,' and, as it must be admitted to be incomplete, eking it out with just as much from Plato as suits the preconceived idea of Socrates in the mind of the scholar. "Such a procedure is hopelessly arbitrary, and can only land us in unverifiable speculations. It would be far better to say at once that we cannot know anything about Socrates, and that he must remain a mere X." Xenophon is recognised to be an untrustworthy historian, and his 'Cyropædia' shows that he had a turn for philosophical romance. He is hardly the one to be accepted as authority for Socrates. We are thrown back on Plato, if we are to get any tenable knowledge of Socrates at all.

To this the question at once suggests itself: if Socrates and his activities were so far above Xenophon's comprehension, and so widely removed from his commonplace and philistine interests, why should he have troubled to write a book of recollections at all, or have tried to justify Socrates to the future? Moreover, does Xenophon profess to be giving a full and complete representation of Socrates' mind and pursuit? His interest is that of an apologist; and his purpose to rebut the charge that Socrates did not honour the gods of the city, that he pursued scientific inquiry with its irreligious tendency, and that he corrupted youth. Consequently, it is his business to illustrate how Socrates behaved himself in regard to traditional religious customs; how he eschewed physical science, and how he laboured to build up a secure and stable moral life among the Athenians. And we believe it is not difficult to show from the dialogues of Plato that in these main points Xenophon was not in error. The amount of consistency between Xenophon and Plato appears, indeed, to us to be greatly underrated. Perhaps the Symposium and the Phædrus may be taken to indicate that sometimes Socrates did venture beyond the method of question and answer into something like a speech, as the Platonic 'Apology' certainly states that he gave himself up to a propaganda of the soul, which had as much to do with ethics as with metaphysics. It was the morality rather than the dialectic which Xenophon was concerned with; but we cannot find evidence in Plato, any more than in human experience, that these two may not coexist.

Aristophanes in 423 B.C. represents Socrates, at that time something over 47 years of age, as still deep in the minutiae of physical speculations. Prof. Burnet accepts this, but it is difficult to reconcile it with the autobiography in the 'Phædo,' and with the precise and definite contradiction which Socrates, in Plato's 'Apology,' gives to this particular bit of Aristophanes. If he had not by 423 given up physics for ethics, his reference to Aristophanes in the 'Apology' was not fair. It was misleading.

Prof. Burnet's great thesis is that the Socrates of Plato and the Socrates of history are one and the same. The former held the doctrine of "forms" therefore—a doctrine prevalent among the Pythagoreans—but he held it in such a way as to give rise to the difficulties discussed in the first part of the 'Parmenides,' difficulties due to the necessity of understanding how the Forms can subsist in, and account for, the world of sense which is a changing manifold, and so seems to destroy the "oneness" and absoluteness of the Forms. It was the problem of Plato to elaborate a theory of the "intelligible world" and the world of appearances which would overcome these difficulties without simply giving up phenomena as non-existent; his task was to arrive at a view in which the intelligible would explain and account for the appearances, give them their due place, and not deny them. This is what Socrates had failed to do, and it indicated the next task of philosophy to be taken up by Plato.

It does seem, however, as though at some point the distinction between the historical Socrates and the Socrates of Plato must be made. Aristotle made it, and it has hardly been proved that he was without independent data necessarily. Besides, Burnet himself admits that what we have in the dialogues is Socrates, imaged in the mind of Plato. It is impossible, therefore, to draw the line which separates the subjective from the objective with precision, and thus again we do not wholly escape the arbitrary. How far, for example, are the details of the Republic to be taken as Socratic?

We are glad to see that the exaggeration of the purely intellectualist side of Socrates' nature as it emerges in Gomperz, and especially in Joël, is corrected, at least, by a recognition of the religious and mystical strain in Socrates' mind, connected with the divine voice and the trances into which he sometimes fell. But it is round the theory of Forms and the interpretation of Aristotle's references to it that the battle will rage among scholars. Profs. Burnet and A. E. Taylor have thrown the glove into the arena.

R. N. C.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

31ST LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,605	11	5
Lewins Mead Domestic Mission per Mr. Gaylard	0	16	0
Miss Alice L. Colfox (third donation);	5	0	0
W. W. (second donation)	0	5	0
University College, Nottingham, per J. E. Shimeld;	5	0	0
Liscard Memorial Church and Red Cross Society, per Mrs. A. Johnson (fourth donation)	4	3	8
Miss Emma G. Holt (third donation);	20	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. B. Woodall (second donation)	5	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Miss M. Harwood and friends	1	5	0
Miss Jane Partridge (second donation);	5	0	0
Mrs. R. A. Bond for "R." and "D." (third donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Hibbert	0	5	0
Nurse Barlow	0	1	0
Kettering Road Church, Northampton, per the Rev. John Sale (second donation)	4	0	0
Miss F. A. Short (seventh donation)	2	0	0
Miss Sarah J. Gregg (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Dendy (fifth donation)	2	0	0
Total	£5,663	7	1

Miss E. G. Woods' donation last week was erroneously entered as 5s. instead of 5s. 3d. The total, therefore, should have been £5,605 11s. 5d.

Parcels have been received from:— Miss H. M. Wicksteed; Mrs. G. H. Edwards; Mrs. Harrison; Swansea Unitarian Church Ladies' Sewing Guild (per Mrs. Reid); Mrs. Cook; Miss Katherine Greg; Miss Rosa A. Bond; Miss M. Harwood; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Croydon War Hospital Supply Depot; Miss Jenkins; Mrs. Walter Brockbank; Mrs. Fox; Mrs. Barry Castle; Mrs. Cook (per Mrs. Bice); Mrs. C. M. Rapley; Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. Edward Cobb.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

A CHURCH IN THE WOODS.

THE following account of the origin and early history of the Church at Shady Grove, Adelaide, South Australia, has been written by Mrs. Crompton, of Stonyfell, South Australia, President of the Adelaide Branch of the Women's League:—

In his "Sketch of the Origin and History of the Unitarian Church in Adelaide," the Rev. J. C. Woods gives the following account of its foundation.

"On July 11, 1854, a meeting of the Unitarian Christians of South Australia was held in Adelaide, called by public advertisement; twelve people were present.

"A resolution was passed, 'that the time had arrived for the formation of a Unitarian congregation in Adelaide, and that it was desirable to raise a subscription in order to guarantee a salary of £400 per annum to a minister for three years.' A further sum of £200 was collected to pay a minister's travelling expenses.

"A request was made to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to select a suitable pastor. Their choice fell upon the Rev. John Crawford Woods, B.A., of Newport, Isle of Wight, and he and his wife arrived in Adelaide on September 19, 1855, after a stormy passage of 123 days. On the two following Sundays a service was held in private houses, the opening public service took place in an auction mart on October 9, 1855; 200 people were present, including three brothers of well known Unitarian ministers, Messrs. Higginson, Herford and Crosskey. Our beautiful church in Wakefield Street was opened on July 5, 1857, and large congregations assembled." The choice of ministers was a happy one; Mr. Woods was our sympathetic friend and pastor for 34 years.

On Dec. 24, 1865 a second church for Unitarian worship was opened by the Rev. J. C. Woods at Shady Grove about 20 miles from Adelaide. From that time a religious service was conducted regularly for 17 years by the late Mr. Francis Duffield, of Cobden Grange, and since his death it has been continued by Mr. F. C. Smith, formerly a lay reader of the Church of England. He too has been gathered to his fathers and his grandsons carry on the good work.

Mr. Duffield was a remarkable man. A native of Scarborough, Yorkshire, he was brought up in the Church of England, but in early manhood he came under the influence of his elder brother, William, the minister of "Strangeways" Chapel, Salford. Francis adopted the opinions of his brother, and became a Unitarian Home Missionary in the neighbourhood of Manchester. In December, 1839, he arrived in South Australia exactly three years after the colony was founded, and settled down as a farmer. He was a man of much influence in his neighbourhood, and a frequent contributor to the press; he also printed a volume of sermons and various tracts on religious subjects.

It is difficult for English people to realise the many hardships the early settlers had to face. In 1839 Mr. and Mrs. Duffield, with their infant son William, journeyed to their future home in a bullock dray, travelling at the rate of about two miles an hour, crawling up the shoulder of a steep hill with no road, not even a track; often the driver was forced to cut a way through the primeval forest. Down the slope with the trunk of a small tree fastened to the back of the dray, and dragging on the ground to serve as a brake, jolting over rocks and bushes with no springs, and rejoicing when the foot of the hill was reached without an accident. Having at last found their land, a tent was erected, but no food was to be had except what they brought with them, and no crops could be planted till the ground had been cleared and cultivated. Flour reached the exorbitant price of £20 per ton, and bread fifteen pence the 2lb. loaf.

About this time Mr. John Dunn visited this neighbourhood (now the district of Mount Barker) in search of land suitable for growing wheat. Riding alone through the bush he saw a large mushroom growing; dismounting, he tried to cover it with his hat, but the white edges were still visible. He thought, if the ground can grow a mushroom like that it ought to grow wheat. He applied for a block, and it proved most productive; he erected a flour mill, and at the Great Exhibition of 1851 he won a prize for the best wheat against all the world. Mr. Dunn was a Methodist pioneer, and in the pretty town of Mount Barker stands a handsome church as his lasting memorial.

Within four miles of this church Mr. John Monks took up land, and Mr. Duffield, his brother-in-law, bought the adjoining block. Mr. Monks arrived first, as he came in the ship "Lady Lilford" on September 27, 1839; his future wife, a child of nine, came with her parents in the same vessel. In this remote part of the world the brothers worked, and both were blessed with large families. The nearest school was four miles distant, and little children found it a long way on hot days; so Mr. Monks had a school house built upon his property. When the walls were up the brothers-in-law roofed the house with shingles (flat pieces of wood split from large trees), floored it, and fitted up the room with desks and benches. A schoolmaster was engaged, and scholars soon flocked in. Some years later Mr. Monks gave it to the Unitarian body to be used as a church, also four acres of land adjoining for a cemetery, and trustees were appointed. When free Government schools were built, in the now populous neighbourhood, the Shady Grove school was closed, and has since been used as a church only.

Mrs. Monks told me that in those early days she and her children always helped to gather in the crops; she and her husband reaped with sickles, while the young ones laid the corn in sheaves, and made ties out of a handful of the longest stems. When flour was needed in the household Mrs. Monks sometimes took some of the new wheat, and after blowing away the chaff ground it in a small hand mill, making into bread the same day.

Coming to the present time, in the Shady Grove Annual Report for 1914, we read:—

"Services have been held at Shady Grove on the first Sunday of each month during the year except June, when Mr. A. Monks was to have taken it, but he was too ill and died on June 19. He was buried at the Shady Grove Cemetery on June 21. Mr. Kenneth Smith, Mr. G. E. Smith and Mr. Wilfrid Smith have taken the services. The anniversary service was held on December 4, 1913, when the church was filled; the Rev. Wilfrid Harris gave a very good address, and a number of the Wakefield Street congregation came up by motor charabanc. A new fence and gate have been put round the cemetery this year by members of the church holding working 'bees' on Saturday afternoons. Mr. A. C. Smith has been organist for the year."

This church sets an example which unfortunately has been rarely followed either here or at home. Although they have never had a paid minister, they have maintained regular services for nearly half a century. There is an average congregation of about 24, some of them coming a distance of nine miles. There are no seat rents nor collections, nor fees of any kind, nor any charge for burial allotments in the cemetery adjoining. If the church needs painting or any repairs, members of the congregation meet together on a Saturday afternoon and do the work as a labour of love.

The Rev. Charles Hargrove in his "Letters Home" says, "The best of many good days was that on which I went with a small party to Shady Grove. A well appointed carriage and a pair of sturdy horses was provided for us, and we made our winding way up and up into the heart of the hills till we reached the small township of Halmendorf, where a colony of Germans made themselves a home. In a strange land among foreign folk and under foreign rule they have maintained, to the third generation, the language and religion of the Fatherland. There we were met by another conveyance, for the 20 miles we had come was by an excellent road, but now we entered upon a track through the woods and must needs divide our load. A drive of four miles took us to our destination, verily a church in the woods, for all around and close up to the walls grew the gum trees, and there was no other building of any kind in sight. The congregation was waiting for us, some 14 in all, varying in age from under 12 to over 70; our own party brought the number up to 20. We had a brief service, singing two hymns from Martineau's well known collection, with a prayer and a short exhortation following. It was to us all, I think, very impressive,—the tiny church, standing alone amid hills and woods, the old familiar words, and the two simple memorials to the founders, "John Monks, who died November 7, 1889, aged 74 years, donor of the church and land," and "Francis Duffield, died December 25, 1888, aged 88. He officiated here gratuitously for 17 years."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Derby.—In referring to the Rev. E. S. Lang-Buckland's work for the blind last week the statement was made in error that he had resigned the pulpit at Friar Gate Chapel for that purpose. This resignation took place in 1908, and the present minister is, of course, the Rev. W. E. George, who has been at Friar Gate Chapel for three years. We are interested to learn that Mr. George has undertaken voluntary duty in Derby in works engaged in the manufacture of munitions, and is working four days each week; alternately from 6 p.m. till midnight, and from midnight until 6 a.m.

Sydney, N.S.W.—In The Sun newspaper, June 20th, a lengthy notice is given of the ministry of the Rev. G. T. Walters, who has now completed forty years of service, thirty-one of them in Australia. The churches, Mr. Walters thinks, are becoming more liberal, although in Sydney it seemed to him that there were two extremes—the narrow-minded bigots on one side, and comparative indifference on the other. In England he found more friendly co-operation from other denominations than he had ever found in Sydney, which is supposed to be such a liberal place. With regard to the war, Mr. Walters said, "The majority of the Christian denominations say I am not a Christian at all, in spite of the fact that Unitarians believe that they are nearer to the teachings of Jesus than anybody else. But if we take Christianity to mean anything at all it must stand for peace and brotherhood. Then, in striving for peace and in endeavouring to establish universal brotherhood, we should lose the very points we were aiming at if we allowed the heartless and cruel tyranny to hold sway over the nations. So that, even if as Christians we say this war is absolutely necessary at the present time, we may do so as advocates of truth, and peace, and of a brotherhood which is founded on the highest ethical teachings."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A MAKER OF HAPPINESS.

To many, who knew Miss Edith Sichel only as a brilliant writer who has made the men and women of the Renaissance and the French Revolution live again for us, the sympathetic study in friendship by F. W. Cornish, in the Cornhill Magazine, will reveal other aspects of her many-sided character not less noteworthy. She was a born idealist, and full of the love of her kind. "You must have been happy," she once wrote "before you can give happiness," and it was out of the joyousness of her own nature, even when she was suffering bodily pain, that she brought light and healing into the lives of others by her philanthropic activities. Her frequent visits to Holloway Gaol in her last years—a strenuous and difficult work—were a good illustration of the simple and direct way in which she sought to draw out the dormant good in warped minds. Her presence, it is said, had a magical effect upon the prisoners, to whom she would read or tell stories from the 'Lives of the Saints,' or Tolstoy's parables, dwelling, but in no sermon manner, on their lessons of purity, kindness, or truthfulness. She always found her way to the hearts of these unfortunates, as Elizabeth Fry did before her. "Her object was St. Paul's, 'to save some,' and she followed the plan of the Biblewomen, Salvationists, and other ministrants, who find their opportunity when the prison doors are opened and the victims of society are thrown out again into the world which has ruined them."

* * *

Another strain in her character must also be noticed, her worship of beauty both in nature and the world of art. From Assisi she writes to Mary Coleridge; who was one of her earliest friends:—"Since then I seem to have lived a lifetime of beauty—of light and shadows, of golden suns and white moons turning the olive trees to silver, as they bend and sway to each other, half angelic, half courtly, for all the world like Perugino's seraphs. The sight I almost like the best is that of the Madonna-faced women here, gay-skirted, with figures of such gracious curves, who watch their flocks in the fields and work the while at their distaffs (real old fairy-tale distaffs), or stand up to their waists in the bright green barley, or walk in company of their fierce sunny husbands behind the carts drawn by great white oxen, born for mythological characters to sit on.... What the churches of Assisi are you can't think. You seem to have entered a solemn rainbow, and then discover that every cranny, wall, arch, apse, roof is smothered in frescoes, three-quarters of them Giotto at his very best. I can only say that it is more like Dante in colour than anything else; the same dewy childhood of mind, the same manly power, almost grim; the same godly courage, the same severity of judgment and sober truth. To possess the power of beauty and yet make Soul the foremost impression... to my ignorant mind, that is Giotto's crown of masterdom."

THE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION SOCIETY OF GERMANY.

The Religious Education Society of Germany has for its President Miss Carola Barth of Frankfurt, Licentiate of Theology, who is the only woman in Germany licensed to preach. Miss Barth has not been carried away by the spirit which prevails in her country at the present time, and is doing her best to stem the tide of international hatred and to guard the children against its terrible influence. Writing to Dr. Charles Wendte, who is in California preparing for the Convention of Religious Liberals to be held at Oaklands on August 29, she says:—"How often in this sad time I have been thankful to you and the International Congress of Free Christians and other Religious Liberals. Without it we should never have founded our Free Christian Woman's Alliance, which in these days is a strength and comfort to us. It does one so much good to know that there are religious unities and common endeavours which cannot be destroyed by the present world conflagration. They contain prophecies of a new era of peace, and to promote this, even with our weak powers, is now our first duty, our most beautiful task. How strongly our Religious Education Society feels this sentiment of 'togetherness' which, during the past months, has expressed itself in the woman's movement referred to, I have sought to indicate in the last report of our Society. This report, which I send you, also contains an article by myself on 'Religious Instruction and International Hatreds.' Our religious instruction of children in these days presents problems of especial difficulty, and one of the most important is to prevent hatred against other peoples from obtaining a foothold in the child-soul and poisoning it."

CITIZENS OF THE "LITTLE COMMONWEALTH."

Mr. Homer Lane, the Superintendent of the Little Commonwealth, believes that the faults of children are due to the lack of freedom for self-expression. Speaking at the Conference on New Ideals in Education at Stratford-on-Avon this week, he pointed out that the popular idea that the suppression of a wrong activity destroyed the evil tendency which caused it was fundamentally wrong. Thus, a boy of 14, now a citizen of the Little Commonwealth, had been birched fourteen times by order of the magistrates, but the birchings only made him worse. The very strength of his character led him to persevere in his career of lawlessness. When, however, he was admitted to the Little Commonwealth, he found that his acts of rebellion were in vain, and he gradually sought an outlet for his energies and abilities in work and acts of service which had eventually made him one of the leaders of the community. Twelve of the boys belonging to the Commonwealth—which was only founded two years ago—have already enlisted, and all have been highly commended by their superior officers. It must be remembered that the citizens of the Little Commonwealth have been chosen from among the worst young criminals.

VENICE IN WAR TIME.

"Venice now holds a tragic beauty," says Signora Romero-Todesco in The Challenge. "The interior of the palaces lit up by candles recall other times, when powder and patches and masked balls held sway... The Doges' Palace, the Bridge of Sighs, the Church of St. Mark's, look their old selves lit up by moonlight; the glare of electric light spoils their eternal beauty. The Venetians are changing, they are once more people of dreams and fancies, different from the rest of the world, and people capable of action—the seed of warriors is in them. There may be a feeling of impending danger and loneliness in Venice now, but to a Venetian it is less pitiful than the changes brought about by so-called modern 'improvements.' The charm of Venice is hers once more; everything has returned as it was in the past, even the old watch-calls. Every twenty minutes the silence is broken by the cry: 'All' erta sentinella!' (To arms, sentry!), answered by: 'All' erta sto!' (I am on the alert!) as they stand by their anti-aircraft guns erected on the roofs."

THE CLEANLY HOUSE-FLY.

The house-fly, against which we have been urged of late to wage deadly war, although we are not particularly worried with it at the present time, has found a doughty champion in Dr. Walter Hadwen, who denies that it is nothing but a "spreader of disease." Its mission in life, according to him, lies in an exactly opposite direction—namely, that of the rapid destruction of all dead animal matter, in which it lays its eggs, and upon which the maggots feed so voraciously that in a short time nothing is left. The maggot then becomes a pupa, which birds and fish delight to feed upon, and by this balancing of forces the over-productiveness of nature in one department is kept suitably in check by the activity in another. The fly itself, with its delicate organism and beautiful wings, is a singularly cleanly creature, and though it constantly alights on decaying matter, it never rests a moment until every hair on its wonderful six feet is freed of any substance it may have acquired—a fact we must all have noticed over and over again. A fly spends nearly all its short life in cleaning itself, and is, indeed, one of the best friends the community possesses; but its presence in large numbers is very irritating, and for this reason it is necessary that every kind of animal matter should be kept out of its way, and that all animal refuse should be burnt. If this is done, the visits of the house-fly will become increasingly scarce.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

BRIGHTON.—Miss Lucy Kendall will take PAYING GUESTS during AUGUST and SEPTEMBER. Moderate terms. Highly recommended.—20, Charlotte Street. (Sea view).

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET August. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

GENTS' HANDKERCHIEF BAR-GAINS! Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 18 or 19 inches. Bundle of six, 2s. 9d. Postage 2d. extra. Bundle of twelve, 5s. 4d. Postage 3d. HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, August 21, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3817.
NEW SERIES, No. 920.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God.

New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.

Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage, Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND FOREIGN LITERATURE SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS, MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE
LONDON, E.C.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Principal: Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A., D.D., LL.D.

For particulars as to LECTURES, SCHOLARSHIPS, and EXHIBITIONS, apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to one of the undersigned.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A.,
1, St. James' Square, Manchester.

Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.,
12, Glenloch Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

HEROES OF FAITH, FROM WICLIF TO PRIESTLEY.

By ALBERT THORNHILL, M.A.

With 14 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; postage 3d.

In writing this little book the author has been impelled by the conviction that our young people have only to learn the story of the lives of the great Heroes of Faith to be moved with the desire to emulate their noble examples in the field of daily duty.

LESSONS FROM THE PAINTERS.

Lessons founded on Celebrated Pictures.

By LUCKING TAVENER.

With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; postage, 3d.

During thirty years of ministry, including pulpit, platform and class work, I have found the use of works of Art most valuable. This little book is written in order to show how reproductions of pictures might be used to illustrate ideals and duties.—From Preface.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board. (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

MISS ISABEL COLE, L.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE—Theory of Music and Aural Training. Visiting Music Mistress. Public School Experience. Registered Examinations. Receives Private Pupils—Curwen Method.—9, Holmewood Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income ...	£3,466,000
Claims Paid exceed ...	£16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors.
G. SHRUBSALL, }

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, August 29.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. L. TUCKER, M.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN. No Evening Service.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Mr. JOHN KINSMAN.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road.—Closed. Services resumed on September 5th.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Mr. W. J. CLARK.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road. Closed during August.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FIELD.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. PIPKIN; 6.30, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. THOMAS PIPE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45. Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKE.

{ DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace.—Closed during August.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.15, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SMOOT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. PHILLIPSON, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. HAWTHORN JONES.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHELD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. A. PAYNE.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

WICKSTEED.—On August 9th, at Letchworth, to Joseph and Ethel Wickstead, a son.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

MISS SIMON, L.L.A., Inter. Arts (Lond.), Teachers' Diploma (Camb.). Care and Education of Girls (under twelve) at Zulla Road, Nottingham.

HOUSEKEEPER-COMPANION.—Needlework or other useful employment desired by experienced practical gentlewoman. Salary required.—L.P., INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	419	CAN A MOTHER FORGET?	424	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
A FORTNIGHT IN FRANCE	421			Belgian Hospital Fund	426
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	422	CORRESPONDENCE:—		The Oxford Summer Meeting	426
IRRATIONALISM	423	Quakers and the War	425	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	427
		The Teachings of Christianity	425	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	428

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE were prepared for some shrinkage in the weekly lists of contributions to the Belgian Hospital Fund during the summer and it is satisfactory that it has not exceeded our expectations. We are now fully informed of the kind of work which lies in front of us, and the word must be "full steam ahead." Interest for the moment will naturally be concentrated upon the large new area for our activities which we describe to-day; but it must not be forgotten that our chief centre remains where it was. There the needs are still the greatest, and the familiar routine of pouring in supplies as the wants become known must go on. There is also the small hospital for refugees, for the upkeep of which we are entirely responsible. So there will still be the privilege on our part of asking for funds for this noble work, and on the part of our readers the pleasure of giving with large-hearted liberality.

BUT we do not want merely to put increased pressure upon those who have supported the work so generously hitherto. It must be our aim to find fresh supporters. Here our friends can help us. There are many churches where collections might be taken at a Harvest Thanksgiving service or other suitable occasion. Small sums can be collected locally and sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen. We are at the present moment busy preparing a leaflet describing the objects of the Fund and its methods of work, which will be suitable for distribution. We also intend to publish a preliminary statement of accounts, which will be certified by a qualified auditor. Our contributors have shown complete confidence in the care and economy with which the Fund has been administered, but this confidence entitles them to receive a clear statement of receipts and expenditure. Of the sympathy which has inspired all our disbursements and the friendship which has gone with every gift no account can be given. But our readers know enough about the work to supply this touch of imagination for themselves.

WE have returned from our visit to France confirmed in the views which we have held all along, that personal contact and the consideration of local needs are the only way to secure efficiency, and to prevent wastefulness and irritating delays in work of this kind. Many people have a sort of abstract idea of what a hospital ought to want, and they make up parcels of clothing and comforts which they are sure will be useful. We have come across sporadic gifts of this kind, which have only been admirable in their good intentions. In one hospital the matron told us that she had received two large packing-cases from a society in England, and the contents were quite useless. Some of the things were not needed, and others were quite unsuitable for Belgian soldiers, and all the time there were crying needs, which a little personal inquiry would have revealed. This kind of wastefulness with its accompanying disappointment, is avoided by our method of asking for lists of requirements. It enables us to supply exactly what the people on the spot really want, not what we in England think that they ought to need. No higher compliment has been paid to the efficiency and common sense of the administration of the Belgian Hospital Fund than the remark which a General in the medical service of the Belgian army made to Mrs. Allen:—"Mais, Madame, vous êtes si pratiques!"

It is in every way an admirable tonic to be separated for a time from our own newspapers and to follow the events of the war day by day in the French Press. For one thing it is a wholesome corrective of our self-importance. We fall too readily into the delusion that everybody regards us as the predominant partner in the war. That is not the view of Paris. France is interested first of all in her own news and not in ours. We are her helpers, but on land hers is much the bigger effort. Then the French newspapers are smaller and less sensational than ours. They do not make so much of sensational reports or the opinions of clever writers, who have turned their attention to the war because literary business is slack elsewhere. And lastly they do not fill the streets with staring placards, which encourage false rumour and spectacular fear at the cost of a real desire for accurate information. On returning to English newspapers we feel how much they contain which we should be better without. In the case of many of them it seems to be their policy to educate us by emotional obsession instead of by the discipline of thinking.

THE sinking of the Arabic by a German submarine last week is one of the most callous and cold-blooded crimes of the war. It has not appealed to the popular imagination in quite the same way as the sinking of the Lusitania, for fortunately the death-roll is much shorter, and there was not the same feeling of pride in the ship. But the fact that she was outward bound robs the outrage of even the shadow of excuse. There were no munitions on board. There was no merchandise for the enemy. The passengers and crew who were drowned were sacrificed to the unbridled lust of destruction. Even the German authorities seem to be hard pressed for a plausible excuse, if we may judge by the farrago of unintelligent nonsense which has been issued by their official bureau.

THE strange and disquieting thing about the affair is the passive and waiting attitude of the United States in face of this new outrage upon her citizens. If President Wilson's Notes to Germany mean anything, the breaking-point has now been reached, but no one has any confidence that discussion will not still be prolonged indefinitely. We have no wish to see America involved in the horrors of war; but even less do we want to see her lose a sensitive and valiant self-respect. Her public men must surely be stung by the insults which are heaped upon her by Germany. The clumsy excuses which have been put forward for the sinking of the Arabic are meant for American consumption, and they show the value which is placed upon American intelligence in Berlin. As for the Allies it cannot surely be a matter of indifference to the manhood of the United States that the opinion is steadily gaining ground among them that her moral procrastination is dictated by the almighty dollar. That is not an opinion which we have any wish to endorse, for we recognise to the full the peculiar difficulties by which her government is surrounded, but we fear that it is becoming firmly fixed in the popular mind. Unless it is dissipated by something stronger than fine words it can hardly fail to make a fatal difference to the moral prestige of America in the future.

WE learned long ago the unwisdom of laying much stress upon rumours of internal difficulties and dissensions in Germany. Our information is at best very scrappy, and it reaches us usually through the medium of some unknown neutral journalist. There seems, however, to be real ground for accepting the accounts which have reached us of a deep cleavage of opinion between what may be called the party of annexation and the party of national defence. The military party, backed in all probability by a large and arrogant jingo element in the country, has used the familiar stalking-horse of a peace-loving Germany attacked by a world in arms long enough to serve its turn, and it has now unmasked its real purposes of conquest. The war is to result in a policy of expansion on all sides. Belgium is to be brought under German rule. The French coast is to provide safe ports for German commerce. All the wealthy mining districts are to be retained. It is a vast dream of unbridled covetousness based upon galling political disabilities for all the conquered peoples.

WE have known all along that these are the real aims of Germany. She has gambled with the lives of men and the liberties of the world in order to gratify her lust of dominion. It is this knowledge which has bound the Allies together by links of steel. But it is interesting to find that a number of thinking people, who have been gulled hitherto by the absurd fable of a war of self-defence, are seriously alarmed by the brutal realism of this annexation campaign. According to the French journal Humanité a group of influential men, which includes Prof. Harnack, Prof. Hans Delbrück and Herr Dernburg, has sent an anti-annexation petition to the Chancellor. It is couched in the following terms:—

Germany did not enter the war with the intention of making conquests, but in order to maintain her existence which had been threatened by a coalition of enemies, and the progress of her development. And on the conclusion of peace Germany must not seek anything that does not serve these objects. Petitions recently presented to your Excellency lead to a different conclusion. We therefore consider it our duty to oppose these aspirations with all energy and openly to express our conviction that in our mind their realisation would be a serious political error, pregnant with consequences, and would not strengthen, but fatally weaken, the German Empire. After a purely objective examination of the situation we declare ourselves upholders of the principle that the incorporation or annexation of peoples politically autonomous or accustomed to autonomy is to be condemned. The German Empire arose from the idea of national unity and national homogeneity. It would only assimilate the foreign elements slowly and incompletely, and we do not wish to let ourselves be driven by either persons or events to abandon and change the fundamental features of the creation of the Empire and thus destroy the character of the national State.

HERE, almost for the first time, is political language which we can understand and accept. The grandiose dream has disappeared; the rhetoric of hate is silent; and we seem to hear again the voices of the men we used to know and to credit with foresight and wisdom. It is very doubtful whether this party of moderation has much influence in Germany at the present time. The militarist is usually a bad blunderer in politics and he needs the severe chastening of defeat before he will listen to advice. But it is the beginning of better things. The men who penned these words realise that other people have equal rights with themselves, and that any settlement which subordinates the rights of humanity to the worship of power must be a fatal weakness to the German Empire. When once we can discuss the situation on these lines we may advance far on the road towards agreement.

PROF. EHRLICH, who has just died, was a Jew by birth, a German by citizenship, and an internationalist in science. "In the world of science all national barriers have fallen," he said in an address delivered in London in 1913. He himself was one of the great pioneers in the application of scientific discovery to the art of healing. His name will go down to posterity as the discoverer of the drug known as salvarsan, which has been highly effective in the treatment of various forms of parasitic disease. The whole world is heir to his discoveries. All great literature and art have in them universal qualities though they may be strongly marked by national characteristics. But in the region of scientific discovery even these disappear. A man like Prof. Ehrlich may care most of all to help his own country, but he is at the same time the servant and benefactor of mankind.

ONE of the most curious hares started by our scaremongers is the idea that the Congo Reform Movement was financed and inspired by Germany. To indulge in groundless suspicions and innuendoes against persons, who have done conspicuous public service in the past, because of their critical attitude at the present moment, is a very base form of patriotism. Mr. J. H. Harris has pilloried this sorry slander very effectively in a letter to The Manchester Guardian. As a matter of fact strenuous efforts were made to secure German co-operation, but without avail. Nothing could induce any of the authorities in Berlin to say a single word in protest, and this lack of sympathy was a source of genuine embarrassment to the cause of reform. "Congo reform," Mr. Harris writes, "owed its inspiration to no diplomatic intrigue, but to the revelations of Congo travellers, merchants, and missionaries. These included British, Belgian, French, Italian, and American, and, although several German subjects knew what was in progress, none joined hands with those who struggled for reform."

A FORTNIGHT IN FRANCE.

THE members of the "Délégation Anglaise," who have been in France on behalf of the Belgian Hospital Fund, have had a busy fortnight. We have visited about forty hospitals and convalescent establishments scattered about in the large tract of country which is controlled from Rennes. Some of them are placed in small towns like Lannion or religious houses in remote country villages. Others are to be found in hotels and public buildings in important centres like Rennes itself, St. Brieuc or Dinard. Continual travelling by rail or motor was necessary in order to cover the ground in the time at our disposal, but everywhere the way was made easy by the letter of introduction from General Stainforth which we carried with us, and the knowledge of the Fund and its activities which had preceded us. The experience gained has been of inestimable value. We have learned what the needs are in different places and how we can help to supply them, and we have carried to these soldiers and doctors in their exile a message of sympathy which has touched and warmed their hearts. For the moment we shall only attempt to set down a few general impressions of the visit, leaving it to the capable and vivid pen of Mrs. Bernard Allen to describe many of its incidents in greater detail. Our readers may expect an article from her and an urgent appeal for funds next week. The notable success of the visit was due chiefly to her untiring devotion to the work, ably seconded by Mr. Kelland's intimate knowledge of French life, his unfailing savoir faire, and a bonhomie in presence of which even officialdom becomes human.

This fortnight among the Belgian sick and wounded was also a fortnight in France, and it has left an ineffaceable impression of the greatness of the French people in this terrible crisis of their history. We watched the sobered crowds on the boulevards in Paris. We read the newspapers, so much less theatrical in style than our own. We travelled in trains packed with soldiers who had seen the war at close quarters. We visited holiday resorts on the sea coast, only to find that the casino and the fashionable hotels had been turned into hospitals. The tragedy of the war brooded over everything. It has bitten deep into the hearts of the people. Perhaps they are inclined to take it more philosophically than we, with our lighter burdens, are able to do. They dismiss personal inconvenience and the necessary revolution in their daily habits with the familiar phrase "mais c'est la guerre." But this note of acceptance, the absence of grumbling and excited conversation, are the outward signs of a deep seriousness of mind. The mass of wounded men, which seems to overflow into the remotest corners of the land, the faces of the women who have given all they hold dear for the salvation of their country, the haunting spectacle of a whole population in mourning for their dead, all tell the same story of a terrible discipline from which none can escape. But with discipline there has come the power to endure. It is too soon to speak of any widespread revival of religion. We can only record a traveller's hasty impression that the churches are fuller and the congregations more devout than we have ever seen them before, and men are no longer conspicuous by their absence. It is not due to any policy of reaction, but simply to the deep human need of spiritual help. Here in the unseen world of love and sacrifice and power are the roots of endurance. And France means to endure. She knows that she is fighting for things that are more precious than life itself, and there can be no thought of peace so long as the insolent aggressor occupies a single inch of her soil.

But we must turn from these larger aspects of national life to the more domestic concerns of the Belgian hospitals. In many respects the situation is different from the one with which we have been familiar for many months elsewhere. There, only a few miles from the Front, the feeling of exile is not so acute and the hospitals are reserved entirely for Belgian patients and controlled by their own doctors. When the men are drafted further south they become the paying guests of the French "Service Sanitaire." Special wards are allotted to them in various hospitals under the charge of a Belgian doctor but the whole administration is in the hands of a French Médecin Chef. It is not for us to criticise these arrangements. They have been made partly on grounds of economy, but chiefly because it is hoped that they will be quite temporary. In many places the French authorities have been most generous in the buildings which they have allotted to the Belgians. At Dinard, for instance, they have given them the Casino with its glorious view over the sea. Elsewhere they are located in the spacious dormitories of seminaries and lycées, where there is an abundance of sunshine and fresh air. But nowhere is there any sign of luxuries or even of the ordinary hospital comforts which we provide for our own men. Skilled nursing is also a great difficulty. In some of the more populous centres bands of French ladies have undertaken the work, but in the remote places a great deal has to be left to the orderlies. The hospitals which have found a home in religious houses are fortunately placed. They are clean and well-arranged, and the sisters are unwearied in their unselfish care of their patients. We shall not easily forget the Sunday afternoon which we passed at St. Perme, the Mother House of the Little Sisters of the Poor. The courtesy of our welcome by the Mother Superior, the complete absence of ostentation, the subdued voices, the ascetic tidiness, the atmosphere of unworldly contentment and religious peace, all spoke of a life which has found its divine end in personal simplicity and devotion to the good of others.

From this brief description it will be seen that the field for assistance by the Belgian Hospital Fund in this district is narrower than it is further north; but there are none the less many urgent needs. The task of nursing her own wounded is taxing the resources of France to the uttermost, and there is no cause either for wonder or complaint if the Belgian doctors feel the lack of many things, the provision of which would make all the difference to the efficiency of their work. We can provide them with instruments for their own use and with simple comforts for their men. We have made arrangements for monthly lists of urgent requirements to be sent to their medical chief at Rennes. General Stainforth will revise them, striking out everything which he considers superfluous, and then forward them to us. In addition to these medical demands there is in many places great need of recreation for the men. Over and over again we were asked for packs of cards—surtout les jeux de cartes; draughts and dominoes are also much appreciated. These are things which we can provide, and they are of more value than may appear at first sight. Time drags along very wearily for these men as they lie in bed or hobble about the wards. They receive no visitors. Most of them never get a letter. Many of them have lost sight of wife and child since the beginning of the war. It is a fate so cruel that few of us can realise all that it means. They must be saved from their deep dejection. The vacant hours must be filled with pleasant occupation instead of anxious thought or sullen brooding. Cheerfulness is a half-way house to health, and with health comes renewal of courage to continue their valiant struggle.

So much for the constant stream of small gifts for which we shall want a steady supply of money. In the aggregate it will require a considerable sum, if anything effective is to be done over the whole area on the lines which we have indicated, and we cannot be satisfied with anything less. But we have reserved the chief need for the last. In addition to its hospitals the Belgian army has established several "Dépôts de Convalescence," where the men are received before they go back to their regiments. Those who are crippled by wounds or sickness and will never fight again may also pass many weeks there, for they have no home or shelter of their own. These depots are entirely under Belgian control, but for lack of means they are most sparse in their equipment. Decent beds are the crying need. Our readers will remember that we have already sent out 200 beds to Chateaugirant, near Rennes.

They arrived just before our recent visit. The whole place has been transformed, and the men have lost the temper of sullen rebellion against the conditions under which they were forced to live. When we left the building after our visit of inspection they all hung out of the window and cheered, and there was a great shout of "Vive l'Angleterre." That cheer was for the Belgian Hospital Fund and for all who have helped in its beneficent work.

But now we have discovered two other places, where, simply for justice and for pity's sake, we must do exactly the same thing. In one of them 300 men just out of hospital have to sleep on straw mattresses laid on planks on the floor. It would be poor accommodation for a hardened criminal. The very capable officer who is in charge of the depot has done wonders in most unpromising conditions, but beds he could not get until the "Délégation Anglaise" arrived upon the scene last Sunday morning and told him that the days of plank beds for the Belgian heroes of many a battlefield are numbered. For the other depot, where the commanding officer has also shown marvellous contrivance and resource, we shall want another 150 beds, making 450 in all. We have such complete confidence in the generosity which has never failed us since the beginning of the Fund, that the beds have been ordered already. We know that those who like to lie softly themselves will be glad to help us to redeem our promise.

Our fortnight in France brought us very close to the terrible cruelties of war. The soul rises up in hot rebellion against the hard lot of these exiles of freedom, with their tortured bodies and their bitter wrongs. But even they do not forget that freedom has its price, and that the price is always worth while. A Belgian soldier has decorated one of the wards of a hospital at St. Lo with the following motto in bold coloured letters: "Dieu, Patrie, Roi, Liberté: Vivent les Alliés." There is the true note of confidence. This bold defiance of threatenings and slaughter in the name of the things which good men hold most dear has led them far from sheltered homes and quiet resting-places, but in the end it must prove invincible, and their victory will be a victory for the soul.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

THE CRY.

WHENEVER there is silence around me,
By day or by night,
I am startled by the cry
"Take me down from the cross!"
The first time I heard it
I went out and searched
Till I found a man in the throes of crucifixion.
And I said: "I will take you down."
And I tried to take the nail out of his feet.
But he said: "Let be;
For I cannot be taken down
Till every man, every woman, and every child
Come together to take me down."
And I said: "But I cannot bear your cry—what can I do?"
And he said: "Go about the world
Telling every one you meet:
'There is a man upon the cross.'"

ELIZABETH GIBSON CHEYNE.

THE PRICE GOD PAYS.

THE Almighty Father aims not to make us the workmanship of His hand; that He could do at once, without our co-operation or against our resistance, and then all this world of moral misery could have been avoided; but he aims to make us what His children must be, if they are the children of His Spirit and not the machines of His hand—voluntary fellow-workers with Him, sharers in His purposes; and this can be done, not whether we will or not, but only with our will, through our love and loyalty, as those who have the power to rebel if we have the will, not through fear or compulsion, but because He has become the entire Lord of our affections, the God in whom we trust. And this is an end for which, to speak it reverently, God is willing to incur the contingency of any amount of suffering, and for which all who have spiritual appreciation of it will deem that this world of terminable misery is not too vast a price. We cannot have the privileges that belong to moral liberty, without being liable to the evils that are incidental to moral liberty. We cannot combine inconsistent things. We cannot be constrained to obey, or mechanically fashioned to obey, and yet have the joy of a free service.

And all this is a direct consequence from the spiritual truth, the one great spiritual fact with which we have to do, that the Almighty is not our Creator only, but our Father; that in our souls we are the children of His Spirit, and not merely in our organisation, mental as well as material, the workmanship of His hands. The artists of earth, when they become creators of beautiful and glorious things, impress their own thought upon their workmanship, and make it what they please; if they fail, the failure is theirs, and not in the rebellion or disobedience of the materials with which they work; but when they become, not creators, but fathers, their children may turn against them.

And it is even so with the Supreme Creator, and the Supreme Father. His works must obey Him; His children may rebel. Otherwise He must cease to be a Father, and be to us only what He is to material Nature, the Almighty Artist of our souls. And there are some men who have so little perception of what it is to love God with a spiritual love, that they are ready to condemn His providence for not making man upon this principle, for not fashioning him to a course of obedience as He has fashioned the stars. Such men overlook the infinite distance that separates a Creator from a Father. They have not mastered the first syllables of the Lord's Prayer. There are many whom this world of moral misery revolts from God; they do not estimate at their infinite value the spiritual results; they do not see, in all that men suffer through sin, the mighty price that God is willing to pay that He may have children of His Spirit. Until we see this we have no Father; seeing we perceive not, and hearing we do not understand.

JOHN HAMILTON THOM.

ALMIGHTY God, who hast made of one all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, deepen among us the spirit of understanding and goodwill. Take from the hearts of peoples and rulers all partial aims, unhallowed ambitions, jealousies, covetousness, and fears. Confirm the bonds of mutual trust, and subdue the rivalries of race and power. Unite us in the things that make for peace, in the exchanges of merchandise, the pursuit of knowledge, the spread of liberty and good government, till the reign of justice be securely established and law and order prevail throughout the earth. AMEN.

[From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.]

IRRATIONALISM.

IN the beginning of the present century the wave of irrationalism in thought, which had been slowly gathering strength in the latter half of the nineteenth century reached its height, carrying all before it. In the eighteenth century all the great thinkers, with the notable exception of Rousseau, had been rationalists. Hegel, at length, with wonderful power and subtlety of thought, had even exhibited the universe as naught else than the self-development of the "Idea." The very completeness of his system raised doubts as to its validity. Was it possible for the human mind to construct a system which could furnish a satisfactory answer to all questions? Could feeling, sensation, and will all be reduced to pure thought, and nature and history alike be only the evolution of the Idea? Goethe's Faust, in the solitude of his study, voices the growing distrust in the all-sufficiency of thought—

Is it the Thought which works, creates, indeed?

In the beginning was the Power, I read.

It was indeed hard to believe that the world was mere crystallised Thought. There must be Power somewhere, and soon a subtle thinker arose who found it incarnate in Will. For Schopenhauer, the founder of modern Irrationalism, the ultimate reality was living impulse, conscious of itself in Man as Will. As it was blind it blundered and suffered, but at length created the intellect as a guide to its ends, only to find that its work was in vain, and that the only escape from suffering was for the Will to turn back upon itself and destroy all desire at the root, thus ending suffering by annihilation.

Schopenhauer's belief in Will as the ultimate reality of the World, and in its fundamental irrationality, had a deep and far-reaching influence on the thought of the nineteenth century. The two most influential thinkers of that century—Tolstoy and Nietzsche—are his spiritual offspring, and started from his basal conceptions. Different as they were from Schopenhauer and from one another, they both acknowledged him as their master and his philosophy as their starting point. Tolstoy, indeed, remained true throughout to its principles. Like Schopenhauer, he found the world irrational. Like him he laid the basis of the good life in sympathy and pity. This sympathy must be given full scope. All forms of the organisation of life which are the work of reason are mere hindrances to the free flow of human sympathy, and therefore "snares," and not aids to the spiritual life. As a pure ascetic Tolstoy, too, would kill all desire at the root, and his doctrines, if fully carried out, would lead not only to the rejection of all rational organisation of life, but to the extinction of life itself.

Nietzsche, at first a devoted follower of Schopenhauer, began to doubt the possibility of destroying life. He felt constrained to believe in the cyclic revolution of the universe, and makes his Zarathustra express his disgust at having to experience over and over again in the infinitude of Eternity all the suffering which had embittered the present life. In the agony of this thought he cries: "All comfort is lost." What then can one do? Only steel oneself to endure, and even to rejoice in bearing suffering as a proof of courage and fortitude. But to do this one must be strong. Sympathy, pity, and love are weakness. Thus Nietzsche is carried along by the logic of his thought to exalt physical vigour, hardness, pride, and contempt for the weak as the essential qualities of the great man. He alone, the "Overman," comprehends and is worthy of existence. His morality is the "master morality"—that transvaluates the traditional moral values, and calls strength, haughty pride, domination of the weak—even cruelty to them if they struggle to break his yoke—good! and pity, sympathy, mutual helpfulness, humility, and love—the morality of slaves—bad! The weak should either be helped out of existence—"that," says Nietzsche, is "our charity"—or should be reduced to the condition of slaves to the "Supermen," who might then tolerate them, make use of them for their own ends, and even approve of their morality as indeed fitting for slaves. This is the essence of Nietzsche's thought, but as he was rather a suggestive essayist and poet than a systematic thinker, much can be found in his works in contradiction to his central teaching. For example, in Zarathustra, we find him in revolt against the very idea of a state—"the coldest of all cold monsters," and picturing his supermen as living the life of hermits, or "hermits in pairs." Elsewhere he envisages society as organised in rigid castes like that of India.

Other famous thinkers of our time have developed Schopenhauer's teaching of the irrationality of the Universe, and of the supremacy of blind living impulse. One need only mention the "élan vitale" of Bergson, or the pluralism of William James. Nietzsche had said "everything good is instinct," and "the world is to all eternity chaos, not as missing necessity, but as missing order, articulation, form, beauty, wisdom." In the philosophy of William James the world, conceived as a chaos of separate, striving beings, seems to lack necessity also. The "élan vitale" of Bergson seems to move blindly onward, creating ever diverging forms of life, amongst which one seeks in vain for any unity of existence or purpose.

This reaction against the often arid Rationalism of the last two centuries has not been without value to philosophy. It has served to bring into prominence aspects of existence which had been overlooked or slighted by the reigning theories. Denying that everything is thought, it has forced us to consider the claims of feeling and will as elements in the constitution of the world. But the ideas of thinkers descend through the writings of literary men, novelists, dramatists, and journalists, and reach the minds of the people in a crude form in which too often the truths they stand for are lost, and only their exaggerations and extravagances remain. And Irrationalism, by its very nature, and by its protest against order and system and the organisation of life, is peculiarly open to this misinterpretation. The denial of the supremacy of reason, the insistence on impulse, instinct, temperament, and separateness easily find acceptance with the majority of people, who have little capacity for thought, and who find what little reasoning power they have fully employed in the struggle for daily bread. The irrationalistic philosophy flatters their indolence when it tells them that reason is impotent, and that the surer guide is impulse or instinct. "Everything good is instinct," said Nietzsche, and to have to contend with instinct he considers a sign of degeneracy. The notion that reason is the ruling power which controls and subordinates instincts is scouted by the Irrationalists. When Wm. James says that "the true is the expedient in our way of thinking," and the Pragmatists tell us that "there is no truth, but only truths," which are made and not found, the plain man feels that he is justified in doing what pleases him, till at length he may even come to agree with Nietzsche that the belief in truth is a superstition, and to echo his eulogy of the Order of Assassins in Syria, whose motto was "Nothing is true, all is permitted." We have only to look round us to see that the denial of reason with its principles of organisation and harmony, of co-ordination and subordination of instincts and emotions is prevalent everywhere. The art of the Post-Impressionists and the Futurists, the music of Debussy and Scriabine, show the repudiation of the form-giving principles of reason. The literature of the day glorifies the man or woman whose leading principle is "to live one's own life" without inquiring whether that life can justify itself at the bar of reason or reflection. In politics Irrationalism has full sway. If a man or a party want anything they have but to work for it without regard to other considerations, or the part which that particular aim should fill in the whole life of the nation. The militant suffragists and the syndicalists are examples of this insistence on a single element regardless of its connection with other ends.

The most terrible example of the madness which results from irrationalism is to be found in the state of mind of the governing classes in Germany, the terrible war which was occasioned by it, and the ruthless and desperate manner in which the war has been conducted by the German leaders. Germany has been organised in a truly wonderful way by men influenced—perhaps too deeply and onesidedly—by the doctrines of rational order inculcated by her great thinkers. The education of her people; legislation such as workmen's insurance against sickness, old age, and unemployment; the beauty and order of her great cities, laid out in a rational plan, by which the speculative builder, and the creator of slums has been banished, and well-ordered streets of handsome houses erected on ground belonging to the corporation; the nationalisation and effective working of the railways—all these and numerous other developments excite the envy of other nations. But the irony of it all! This marvellous organisation of life is but a means to a purely irrational purpose—that of dominating Europe, of spreading German civilisation by force, and giving to a group of military men and Junkers the power to subjugate and rule over the men of other nations as well as their own subjects.

Nietzsche—whose doctrines, in a crude form, have long penetrated the minds of the German people, and especially of the ruling classes—taught that Schopenhauer was mistaken in making the Will to Live the ultimate force in the world. "Not the Will to Live, but the Will to Power," said Nietzsche—"Power and ever more Power" is the real significance of life. All else is of little value, "Nothing is true, all is permitted" to the strong, brave, glorious Supermen, who find in war the only truly worthy activity, attaining in it the full consciousness of the Will to Power. All the fair organisation of Germany was to be utilised for the prosecution of a terrible war; a war in which, by a deliberate policy of "frightfulness," the followers of a "slave morality" of industry, co-operation, sympathy, and equality should be crushed by the new worshippers of Odin. Had not Zarathustra said:—

"Ye shall love peace as a means to new wars, and short peace better than the long.

"I do not counsel you to work, but to fight. I do not counsel you to conclude peace, but to conquer. Let your work be a fight, your peace a victory.

"Ye say a good cause will hallow even war? I say unto you a good war hallows every cause."

The hurling of masses of German soldiers against the machine guns and artillery of the Allies, the laying of floating mines, the bombardment of unfortified towns, the infraction of treaties, and, above all, the calculated atrocities in pursuance of the policy of "frightfulness" in Belgium, are all manifestations of the ruthless Will to Power to which "all is permitted," and the fullest example of the doctrine of Irrationalism. If we defy reason and give the rein to impulse and to any instinct, however brutal, we can only end in madness. And surely never before did the world witness such a display of madness as we have seen in this infamous war. Germany will have suffered the loss of the flower of her manhood and of the exuberant prosperity of the last few decades. She has already indelibly soiled her honour and excited the disgust of the civilised world.

But though the spirit of Irrationalism has reached its supreme manifestation in Germany, the other nations of Europe have not escaped the infection. In a lesser degree they, also, are responsible for this War. Let us hope that, after long suffering, Europe may once more regain sanity, and may realise that, only by the abolition of the piling up of armaments, and of the wiles of diplomacy; by organising for peace instead of war; by a confederation of states; and by the recognition of the truth that a neighbouring nation is not an enemy to be kept poor by protective tariffs, or subdued by a conquering army, but a co-operator in the great task of securing human well-being, can we make progress in the development of a true and a noble civilisation.

MAURICE ADAMS.

CAN A MOTHER FORGET?

It's a steep road that winds with many a sharp curve up the hillside to the plateau where the famous Welsh Arian chapel stands. Part of the route surmounts one of the prettiest glens along which the little stream of Cerdin splutters and splashes. It also passes through the enchanted wood. Here in the far-off days of my childhood fairies could be seen at any time of the day, and always, of course, at night; and here, too, lived a fierce dragon armoured in glistening metallic corrugated skin. It was on one occasion only I actually saw a sinuous length gleaming with green and purple out of which more brilliantly shone red knobs like carbuncles. In the shadow of the bush burned two fires which one knew for eyes, but one did not stay to investigate in those days!

High hedgerows hem in the narrow road on both sides, out of which in prodigal luxuriance spray the fronds of the male and lady fern, of polypodium and hard fern, of spleenwort and rue, so freshly green after yesterday's rain. If you are young, you pause at times in your climbing to gather the wild strawberries, raspberries or bilberries growing upon the banks, or to pick the handsome harebells, or to admire the clusters of nuts on the hazel sticks that make you wish it were already nutting-time. And if you are older you pause at the gaps which permit glimpses of the water mill or the meads which the mythical Olwen flits over, leaving flowers wherever her white feet touch the earth; or where the sheep browse on the verdant slopes flanking the sides of the highest hill, the Polled Head—Pencœdfoel.

And when you reach the end of your journey at the hamlet where the five roads meet, you are disappointed to find that your arduous walk has covered only two-and-a-half miles. You have come to visit the cleanest and neatest sanctuary of the dead anywhere to be found. Here where the winds sweep so broadly, rest some of the most honoured among the past denizens of our village in the valley below. Around the sundial which only chronicles the serene and sunny hours, they lie; and memory here records only their serene and sunny ways.

The antithesis between the plain barn-like building of the chapel and the costly monuments has struck many a visitor ; but it is typical of Welsh sentiment, ever inclined to subordinate the needs of the living to its reverence for the dead. It is not, however, to the ostentatious monuments that I would direct your quiet tread, but to one of the most modest stones. Some distance behind the more eye-compelling memorials, about three feet high, rudely carved and rudely lettered, you will recognise it by the quaint design in the white pebbles that pave the space beneath. One of the well-kept graves. One of the few tablets without eloquent verses. What was there to say? The child died when two years old. Just his parents' name, his age, and the date of death. So commonplace an event that no local bard was moved to sing an elegy—the commonest of local poetic output. Perhaps the baby's uncle, who chipped the stone, and inscribed the brief record as a labour of love, felt with Hamlet it was better to leave it so, "the rest is silence." But such a pregnant, prodigious, fateful silence. As long ago as Feb. 12, 1878, over 37 years, a peasant woman lost a baby boy through scarlet fever. During all those many years she has never ceased to visit this spot as, for her, the holiest upon earth. To be near it, the home has been removed to the closest available cottage. No week is complete without some act of service on the grave.

The mother has had other sons and daughters borne to her. She had children when she lost the laddie. These have grown up and brought her their own sons and daughters. Surely there is enough to engross her affection, enough to exhaust her love, without any left to waste on what is but a name.

Then she has not been without her share of other troubles. She has battled with poverty. She has borne the heat and burden of the day. Many of our countrywomen perform work other-where left to men, work in the fields with its exposure to rough weather, giving to the worker an appearance of being rough and coarse-grained. Surely she has had enough to do to keep her mind free from filching aught from the past. But no, she has never forgotten.

To look at her, one would not accuse her of too much tenderness—this peasant's wife with the sunburnt features and ungainly gait. She has not the divine gift of words. Rosetti and Burne Jones would never have painted her. Millet might. Nor would the liberal Dean have averred that to know her was a liberal education. But to take in one's heart the key lent by that clean stone and well-kept grave in God's acre, and then to peer closely into that homely face, is to see what one never suspected before, and then one recognises a deep well of divine tenderness in the eye, a great capacious motherliness, a loyalty one attributes only to the very good and great. And then when the topics of the day fall out of gear, and some sweeter theme is touched, the voice softens, and at last you hear the unmistakable accent, the woman who cannot forget.

Not until one meets her, or such as her, may the sincerity of such a poem be felt as that which describes a mother's treasuring of the past in Irene Fowler's 'The Child Eternal':—

"I heard their prayers and kissed their sleepy eyes,
And tucked them in all warm from feet to head,
To wake again with morning's glad sunrise,
Then came where he lay dead.
On cold still mouth I laid my lips. Asleep
He lay, to wake the other side God's door,
My other children mine to love and keep,
But this one mine no more.

Those other children long to men have grown,
Strange, hurried men who give me passing thought,
Then go their ways. No longer now my own,
Without me they have wrought.
So when night comes, and seeking mother's knee,
Tired childish feet turn home at eventide,
I fold him close, the child that's left to me,
My little lad who died."

So we hold securely only that we have given away. Death crowns with unfading beauty and everlasting laughter and sweetness the child who was loved and lost. Amid a myriad things past and done with, some remain fresh and vital. For it is given to love alone eternally to keep its own. And if through the long-drawn years a mother can recall how a vanished babe lay with dimpled smiles upon her lap, can He who holds the ages in the hollow of His hand forget? "Zion said, the Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on her son?" In these dark days, when man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn, O Divine Mother, have compassion on thy son, and remember him as he was in the days of his innocence, with the light of Eden in his eyes, and a crowd of stars around his head!

J. T. D.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

QUAKERS AND THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. H. Lewis Jefferson argues that "since Satan cannot cast out Satan" the "plain duty" of the Christian Church is to join (pro hac vice) the Society of Friends. What does he mean by "Satan" (the subject of his sentence)? If he means the conviction that our duty may sometimes be to take up arms, he is invited to establish that identification, and then, of course, he need urge us no further, for we shall have accepted his conclusion. But if the reference to Satan is not an illicit assumption of what he would prove, but some other proposition, offered as a self-evident premiss, what is the content of that premiss? It is clear that "Satan" cannot here mean the love of war for its own sake, the lust to kill, or any of those vile passions that may and do urge men into aggression, such as rancour, envy, self-righteousness, cruelty; for none of these meanings will enable Mr. Jefferson's premiss to lead us to his conclusion. We should infer from it, instead, some such rule as this: Thou shalt not enter upon or pursue war, or any other activity, in a spirit of hatred, cruelty, self-righteousness or envy. And what Christian of any Church would dispute it? What most Christians do dispute is the very different rule, "Thou shalt not wage war in a spirit of love and self-sacrifice, for the sake of mankind."—Yours, &c.,

E. W. LUMMIS.

Lea Cross, Salop, Aug. 24, 1915.

THE TEACHINGS OF CHRISTIANITY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Many people are still mentally distressed at being unable to reconcile the war with the teaching of Jesus. I was, but am so no longer. They cannot be reconciled. Jesus was an idealist, and spoke from an intimate knowledge of the things of God. The truth he preached was the absolute truth of God, which is what we ought to be aiming at ("hitch your waggon to a star") but have not yet reached, because we are not as spiritually developed as he was. When we have been robbed of a coat we do not tender our cloak also. Nor ought we to do so. I am afraid there are very few thieves indeed in whom such an act would bring about a reform of character. We do not turn the left cheek for a second blow after having been struck on the right one. We try and restrain the striker from doing further harm. If we can do this without retaliating we ought to, but if not we must employ the most effective weapons for the purpose. I am always assuming that our motive is purer than that of our opponent, and is free from vindictiveness and self seeking.

In your footnote to Mr. Lupton's letter you imply that there is an interpretation of Jesus's teaching different from the one which it plainly carries with it in the gospels. I cannot agree with this view. If words mean anything they mean what they say in this case. I repeat that Jesus taught from the standpoint of the absolute truth of God. Humanity has not yet attained that standpoint, and cannot therefore apply his teaching literally to present day affairs of life. Let us be frank and recognise this. I do not believe, as some do, that if Jesus were here in the body to-day he would take the side of the Allies and support us in the war; he would prefer to die first. Note his answer to Pilate as given in the 18th chapter of St. John. "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence. . . . To this end have I been born, and to this end am I come into this world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

I submit that the truth he bore witness to was the absolute truth of God. Humanity, as yet, can only regulate its conduct by truth in relation to time, place, and circumstance, and the conditions which pertain at the present moment. Things are right for us which would not be right from the standpoint of Jesus. This seems quite plain to me. What we have got to do is to work and pray for the will to reach the view-point of Jesus, then we shall see things as he saw them, and wars and all strife will automatically cease.—Yours, &c.,

W. L. TEASDALE.

Wolverhampton, Aug. 24th, 1915.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

32ND LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,663	7	1
Mr. Henry Sharpe	20	0	0
Miss A. Smith	5	0
League of Liberal Christian Women, Adelaide, S. Aust., per Mrs. J. Crompton ..	5	0	0
Miss E. B. Partridge (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Bryan E. Johnson (third donation)	2	0	0
"X." (sixth donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. C. Kempson	1	0	0
Miss Harriet Yorke (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. E. Pearson (sixth donation), Miss Pearson (second donation)	12	0	0
Mr. John S. Mackie (fourth donation)	5	0
Mrs. R. T. Heys (third donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. J. M. Perry (fifth donation)	1	0	0
"K. L." (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Staff of Central School, Haverstock Hill, per Mr. F. Chappell (fifth donation) ..	14	0
Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson ..	5	0	0
	£5,728	13	1

Parcels have been received from:—Anon.; Friends in Gee Cross (per Mrs. Berry); Miss Brooks; Miss C. H. Rawlins; Anon.; Mrs. Wallis; Miss Bruce; Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Miss C. R. Holland; Miss Prance; Mrs. J. Collins Odgers; Mrs. Notcutt; Miss B.

Kearne; The Misses Wilkinson; Mrs. W. Healey.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE OXFORD SUMMER MEETING.

THE wonderful weeks of the Summer Session are over. Some wistful regret we must feel that our vivid living with great things and thoughts is passing into the realm of memory. But the glow of these days when we have seemed to watch the sun rise and set on the Parthenon will suffuse dull days to come; the intense atmosphere we have breathed will help us to be less subjugated by circumstance; the fineness of the interpretations we have heard may interpose when our ears are battered by barbarity or the clash of ill-considered speech. In fact, it is impossible to speak adequately of the extraordinary privileges extended to us for this month at Oxford. We knew the session would be interesting, the names of lecturers and subject guaranteed that. But that the experience would be so wonderful as it has actually proved we did not and could not expect, and we have few words in which to express the gratitude due to those who have so lavishly given us of their best. We have never lost touch with this present life. We have not merely been revelling in an orgy of scholarship. Rhythms of sorrow and anxiety have not ceased to beat through all the magic of Greece; and amid those moral issues which the Hellenic consciousness turned into epic and tragedy and philosophy and all "this splendour" we have still faced ourselves. The question of what we of this day would make of them was always put or implied, and the influence of the whole session presses home to our minds and hearts the fearful solemnity of the present crisis for the world. But it has taken us up towards the higher synthesis glimpsed by the highest minds among men; it has touched tragedy with beauty. "I confess," said Prof. Gilbert Murray, ending that course of Lectures on Greek Tragedy which probably none of his hearers will ever forget, "that I looked forward to these lectures with dread. I could not get my mind off the war and all its horror and misery. But I feel that coming to the end of them I must express my gratitude to you for enabling me to find once more, and even now, the joy and mystery which I have found all my life in Greek tragedy. There are certain things eternally beautiful which will be there when the war is over as they were there before the war began, and there for ever. And our duty is to help to keep them alive by understanding them and loving them."

Side by side with the study that centred on Greece there has been a scheme of lectures which treated of modern social problems. The present writer, recognising the limitations of the human mind, did not attempt to attend all of these; but for some of the members they formed the primary attraction of the meeting. The lectures included such subjects as

'War and Education,' by Mr. A. L. Smith; 'The Town and the Child,' by Sir George Newman; 'Social Work after the War,' by Mr. F. C. D'Aeth; 'Trade Training and Unemployment,' by Mr. St. G. Heath; 'Women's Employment,' by Miss V. Markham; 'Organised Charity,' by the Rev. J. C. Pringle; and the Introductory Address on 'Social Service' was given by the Right. Hon. Herbert Samuel, M.P. M.A.

The Greek "State" and its evolution was vigorously sketched by Mr. J. A. R. Marriott in his course of seven lectures on 'The Commonwealth and the Citizen' (based on Aristotle's 'Politics'). The Master of University (Dr. Macan) gave six addresses on 'Certain Aspects and Epochs of Greek History,' painting the coming of the Greeks in the migrations through the great story which began with the old Greek world and ended in the coalescence of Greece with the Byzantine Empire. The Rev. William Temple followed the development of the Greek "ethos" through the writings of Plato to its actual influence on Christianity and its perpetual influence as a principle of ferment in civilisation—a "hairbrained effort," he called it, to make the circle of the entire system of Plato, but showing, at all events, how he is the climax of all that is Greek and his inspiration the Greek passion of intellect. A most illuminating course was that by the Dean of St. Paul's on the development of the Platonic position in Neoplatonism and the place of this in the history of thought. Just as one is tempted fancifully to see in Prof. Gilbert Murray a re-incarnation of Euripides, in Mr. P. H. Wicksteed of Dante, in Mr. R. H. U. Bloor of Aristophanes, so Dr. Inge in his interpretation of Plotinus almost suggests another embodiment of that third century genius in this world of our experience. Mr. Wicksteed took on the story to the influence of Aristotle in the Middle Ages and the systematising of theology through the study of Aristotle by Thomas Aquinas. Prof. Gilbert Murray, lecturing on 'Greek Philosophy after Plato,' dwelt on Stoicism and Epicureanism. The Stoics and Epicureans have been treated incidentally with some fullness by several lecturers, including the Principal of Mansfield College, the Rev. D. C. Simpson, and the Rev. H. Gow.

Fine as all this was, perhaps the most delightful experience in the session has been found in the interpretations of Greek poetry and drama given respectively by Prof. Gilbert Murray, Mr. Wicksteed, and the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor. Those who know Prof. Murray's 'The Rise of the Greek Epic,' will be able to appreciate with what imagination, learning, and beauty he placed before us the world of the Homeric poems, their setting, their subject matter, their architecture and construction. His great translations of Euripides, by which, as Mr. Wicksteed said, he had done such a profound service for his generation, prepared us for his thoughts on and presentment of Greek tragedy, its origins, development, and context. A happy circumstance was the illustrative recitation by Mrs. Penelope Wheeler of 'The Trojan Women' and the 'Iphigenia in Tauris' of Euripides, in Prof. Murray's translation. Mr. Wicksteed gave three lectures on the religious significance of the Greek tragedians, bringing out as his final impression the essential invulnerability of the noble character. By his treatment of the Aeschylean Nemesis, the Sophoclean Irony and Fate, the Euripidean Protest and Revolt, he carried his hearers up to the triumphant assurance that through whatever evil outraging heaven and earth the Eternal Things are on the side of the noble life. Oedipus is the conqueror of fate when the worst is done. Antigone knows the unshaken things of the universe are with her, and none can make her afraid. Character is greater than destiny. Not what happens to a man but what he is: there the mortal may be above the gods.

Mr. Bloor took us into the world of Aristophanes with a most infectious kind of rollicking joy which was a thing quite by itself in the session and did every one good. "In the art of Aristophanes the incomparable," said Mr. Bloor, "beauty and buffoonery met and kissed"; and as he proceeded to exemplify this he did just what he liked with his audience. We followed him gaily into the "comic Utopia" of Cloud-cuckoo-town, and were, indeed, fain to linger there with him, listening to a haunting music behind the laughter which "made nine-pins of humbugs." "Brave muses of philosophy," cried Mr. Bloor, "do not forget my muse—her head flung back, holding both her sides!" Truly, we shall not forget her.

Mr. Delisle Burns gave a course of fine lectures on Greek ethics, not without humour and practical applications. He devoted a spare hour to discussion and elucidations, dealing with exemplary patience with certain odd and puzzle-headed queries which seemed to imply in some of his hearers a mental confusion worse confounded by his very efforts after clarity. Mr. Stoughton Holborn, happily safe after his fearful adventure in the Lusitania, spoke with immense missionary enthusiasm on the meaning of Greek art and beauty and its relation to the common Athenian life. He contrasted modern ideas and ideals of art and beauty with Greek, not forgetting to comment on American characteristics; we were, he declared, smothering all sense of beauty in sensationalism, utilitarianism, comfort, and vulgarity, and coming to regard the beautiful as a mere excrecence. The Plastic Arts found an exponent in Prof. Percy Gardner, Vase Painting in the Rev. G. C. Richards, Greek Medicine in Sir William Osler, the Influence of Greece on French Literature in Prof. de Sumichrast, Greek Dress in Prof. Baldwin Brown, Greek Physics in Prof. Cox. The Rector of Exeter, Dr. Farnell, gave two very remarkable lectures on the Greek Mysteries and Apollo-worship, while the Principal of Mansfield, Dr. Selbie, resuscitated the Greek Fathers into a most surprising and unexpected vitality. Hellenistic Tendencies in Judaism were treated in three lectures by the Rev. D. C. Simpson, and Greek Influence on Early Christianity by the Rev. H. Gow. It is impossible to speak of these and other activities in detail; but it may safely be said that no more admirable course of study than this could have been devised, for the time at disposal, to indicate the influence of Hellas on the world's art, philosophy, literature, and science, and to stimulate curiosity on that great foundation on which men have ever after built, on the digging of that channel along which the stream of thought has ever since flowed.

The four Sundays of the course have been also exceedingly profitable. Perhaps the most notable sermon was that given at St. Mary's by the Dean of St. Paul's to a crowded congregation. "Greece," he said, "stands for a fearless and open-eyed outlook on life—this first and foremost. But it stands also for a robust faith in the order and rationality of the world, in the knowableness of all that it concerns us to know, in the permanence of the laws by which the world is governed; and in the wisdom of maintaining a due measure and proportion and harmony in our own lives and characters. . . . The terrible crisis through which we are passing is stripping from us several layers of comfortable self-deception. We must, if we are to survive, become a clear-thinking as well as a right-living nation. We must cease to live in a mental fog, however inferior the atmosphere of London or Oxford may be to the pellucid air of Attica. Our traditional freedom will be, I suppose, a good deal curtailed; we shall have to learn something of German discipline without, I hope, imitating German brutality; we shall be in future a poor nation. . . . But the things that Greece has to give us cannot be taken away from us, they belong to that spiritual order in which one man's gain is not another man's loss. . . . They will confer upon us that inner freedom which we have valued too lightly, they will add a grace to plain living and a distinction to high thinking, and they will, I trust, diffuse among the many that well-balanced and alert healthy-mindedness which Oxford has striven successfully to cultivate among the few."

To attend the morning service at the beautiful chapel of Manchester College has been a privilege evidently appreciated by many who have come up for the Summer School. Of the Principal's sermon on the first Sunday some short account has already been given; the preachers on the other Sundays were Dr. Dawes Hicks, Dr. Hargrove, and the Rev. H. Gow. These have all left a feeling of moral liberation, of inspiration, of reconciliation and beauty even in the midst of gloom in the hearts of their hearers which has been a worthy sequel to the revelation so finely brought home to us by the exponents of Greek poetry. "The powers of evil," says Prof. Murray "must be granted their full scope, it is only thus that we can triumph over them. Only when they have worked their uttermost will do we realise that there remains something in man's soul which is forever beyond their grasp, and has power in its own right to make life beautiful." There are those who will carry with them a grateful memory of the words in which Mr. Gow moved us last Sunday "by the sense of that mystery," as they turn from this interlude to find themselves once more fallen on darker days.

He must be an unimpressible person who has not felt the stimulus of the setting of these things: the uniquely magnificent hall of Christ Church, the Burne-Jones windows in Manchester Chapel, the ungrudging kindness of the university authorities, the comfort of the arrangements made at Christ Church, the freedom of the gardens and places of quiet beauty. There is little possibility of going wrong in any direction when one is cared for, shepherded, and humorously disciplined by Mr. Marriott, the popular Secretary to the Delegacy. His work of preparation and organisation must have been something stupendous. The course has been attended, we believe, by some 750 persons, in place of the twelve or thirteen hundred of ordinary years. F. R.

MISS BROOKE HERFORD writes to point out that the "Free Christian Women's Alliance," to which a reference was made in a letter by Miss Barth of Frankfurt which we quoted last week, is simply an alias for the International Union of Liberal Christian Women. This Union has its headquarters at Essex Hall, and Miss Brooke Herford is the secretary.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bradford.—The Sunday School in connection with Broadway Avenue Church has recently lost several of its young men. The eldest son of the late Rev. W. Rosling has joined the Cameron Highlanders, and others have enlisted. The Adult Class has also lost its Secretary, and at a recent meeting it adopted the following resolution: "That the members of the Class congratulate Mr. Robertshaw on his appointment to the position of Librarian and Deputy Keeper of the Museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, and in wishing him every success on his leaving Bradford to take up his duties at York, they desire to express their sincere thanks and appreciation for the able service he has rendered as Secretary of the Class."

Provincial Assembly Annual Meeting.—The Annual Meeting of the Provincial Assembly of London and the South-Eastern Counties will be held at Ilford on Tuesday, October 5th. The preacher will be the Rev. A. Farquharson, and the President's address will be given by the Rev. J. Wood. The full programme of the meeting will be announced shortly.

Tenterden.—The 253rd Anniversary Services were conducted on Sunday last by the resident minister, who preached in the evening from the text, "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage." The apostle was in the firing line on behalf of liberty. That was the position of the founders of that congregation 253 years ago, and it was their position and the position of England to-day. Let them then give heed to the Apostle's word.

The British Women's League.—All who had the privilege of hearing the beautiful paper on "The Dweller in the Innermost" which was read by Mrs. Collins Odgers at the annual meeting of the League in Whit-week will be glad to know that it is being published, and that they will shortly be able to give it the quiet study which every one felt it demanded.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

SUPPRESSING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN CANADA.

Some interesting facts about the liquor traffic in Canada have been given in a recent letter to the press by Mr. Guy Hayler, author of 'Prohibition Advance in All Lands.' While the Motherland is tinkering with the evils of drink, "steady progress towards Dominion Prohibition is taking place throughout the whole of Canada. For several years the traffic has been prohibited in Prince Edward Island, Labrador, Baffin Land, the North-West Territory, and the Hudson Bay area. In Newfoundland and Nova Scotia prohibition is in force, except in the cities of Halifax and St. John. By the power of local veto the great French province of Quebec has secured prohibition in 906 municipalities out of a total of 1,143, and the province of Ontario has prohibition in 651 municipalities out of a total of 828. Every year sees the number largely increased by the popular vote. New Brunswick has about 70 per cent of its territory free from the liquor traffic.

* * *

"During June and July" Mr. Hayler continues, "two notable contests have taken place in Alberta and Saskatchewan, resulting in the defeat of the liquor traffic in both provinces. In Alberta a popular vote has declared in favour of provincial prohibition by a majority of more than 20,000. In Saskatchewan the ordinary licensed liquor traffic has been abolished during the war by the Provincial Legislature, by which over 450 liquor bars have been closed throughout the province, including all liquor bars in hotels, clubs, and saloons. For the sole purpose of supplying intoxicating liquors the Government have opened twenty-three liquor stores, and with a view of suppressing drunkenness most stringent regulations have been adopted. For the first two weeks of the new arrangements it is estimated that there was a decrease in the sales of from 50 to 70 per cent. At any future municipal election a majority of the electors may vote to have a liquor store established or to have entire prohibition. In 1919, and at the end of the war, a provincial referendum will be taken on the whole question, Government liquor stores or the ordinary liquor traffic v. provincial prohibition."

WRITERS AND THE WAR.

Many well-known writers are engaged in war service at the present time, some in the Army, some as war correspondents, some as workers under the Red Cross, and others, like Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, and Rudyard Kipling, as investigators who are gathering impressions both at the front and at home, and helping to improve the general work of organisation. Mr. John Masefield, who has been working in hospitals in France for several months, has now taken charge of a picket-boat and a barge for conveying the wounded from Gallipoli to Mudros in connection with the British Red Cross and Order of St. John Joint Committee in the Near East. Mr. Edward Garnett is also working for the Red Cross Society, and will accompany the unit that we are sending to Italy.

IMPRESSIONS OF WAR CORRESPONDENTS.

The best war correspondents to-day seem to be men for whom the old glamour of war has entirely gone, although they have a wonderful instinct for the picturesque, not to say the humorous elements of life at the front even amidst the horrors of the conflict. Mr. Philip Gibbs writes as one who finds his experiences full of a terrible fascination, though they awaken in him, nevertheless, a sense of revolt that has found expression in his recent book, 'The Soul of the War.' Mr. Nevinson is less disturbed, and more philosophical, though he, too, conveys very forcibly at times a sense of the terror and misery of modern warfare. There is a note of wistfulness in his last dispatch from the Dardanelles, where "the very presence of a British army at the mouth of the Straits where Agamemnon ran his ships ashore, and where Xerxes constructed his bridge, seems quite a commonplace and natural proceeding." At the close of a blazing day, the monotony of which has been broken only by the usual "common-places" of shells and bombs, he writes:—"And now the cool of evening has come again, and from the extreme south-eastern point of the peninsula I look over the absolutely calm entrance to the Dardanelles. The Asiatic coast is singularly clear. There are the white forts of Kum Kale, and near beside them the strip of shore upon which were ranged the ships of Homer's catalogue. In the midst of the peaceful waters certain small vessels lie watching, like terriers outside a cornstack. . . . On my left the pretty old town of Seddel Bahr, once as pleasant with gardens as a Persian dream, now stands in stark and dusty ruin. Behind me the peaceful air is torn by the Turkish shells singing the evening hymn of hate, to which the French guns reply. It is a contradictory and incredible scene—a scene that will soon appear as mythical as Troy."

PERFORMING ANIMALS.

The fact that an exhibitor of performing animals was recently punished for cruelty to his dogs and cats shows that, although we may take less notice of this evil at the moment than formerly, the need for vigilance in regard to such performances is still urgent. It is not generally known, perhaps, that a Performing Animals' Defence Committee has been formed for the purpose of discouraging such exhibitions. The first annual meeting was held at Caxton Hall last month, and it was suggested that a League of Helpers should be formed who will undertake to make known any facts that come under their notice in regard to the cruelty practised in training animals to perform in public. The Secretary of the Society will be glad to receive the names of sympathisers able to support this humane work at 34, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

BRIGHTON.—Miss Lucy Kendall will take PAYING GUESTS during AUGUST and SEPTEMBER. Moderate terms. Highly recommended.—20, Charlotte Street. (Sea view).

HARROGATE. — COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS, snow-white Irish Linen, handsome floral designs, slightly imperfect, size 2 yards by 2 yards, 6s. 10d. Genuine offer. Usually 9s. 6d. Catalogue free. Send postcard.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, August 28, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

[ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3818.
NEW SERIES, No. 921.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God.
New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.
Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen. Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lift.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND
FOREIGN LITERATURE
SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS,
MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

Now Ready for September.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JONAH:—

The Story of the Gourd.

LESSONS ON THRIFT:—

The Sinfulness of Waste.

Thrift a Solemn Duty.

The Need for Thrift.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Senior Department—Douglas W. Robson, B.D.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.—THE RICH FOOL.—UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS.—THE FRIEND AT MIDNIGHT.

Junior Department—Alice L. Colfox.

BY THE WAY.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation; Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

MISS ISABEL COLE, L.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE—Theory of Music and Aural
Training. Visiting Music Mistress. Public
School Experience. Registered Examinations.
Receives Private Pupils—Curwen Method.—
9, Holmewood Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors,
G. SHRUBSALL }

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, September 5.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11, Mr. C. A. PIPER; 7, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 6.30, Mr. A. SAVAGE COOPER.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. B. J. EDWARDS.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 7.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Dr. W. THOMSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. G. COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER. No Evening Service.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. W. WAKE; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. O. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. TOPPING.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

{ DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. SHELLY.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. MOSSOP.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DR. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street.—Closed for repairs.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. PHILIPSON, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN MOORE.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College.—Closed during September.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHELD, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliffe, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATECOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINGLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Figgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGES.

EPPS—DU BLED.—On August 30th, in Paris, Ralph Septimus Gladstone, youngest son of Hahnemann Epps, 95, Upper Tulse Hill, S.W., to Marguerite Fanny, youngest daughter of Monsieur Emile du Bled, 53, Rue Claude Bernard, Paris.

HERFORD—JOHNSON.—On August 26th, at the Sale Unitarian Church, by the father of the bridegroom, Robert Osler Herford, B.Sc., elder son of the Rev. Robert Travers Herford, B.A., and Mrs. Herford, Gordon Square, London, to Aldyth, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Johnson, "Windygates," Rhosneigr, Anglesey.

WALMSLEY—SQUIER.—On August 30th, at Stand Chapel, by the Rev. R. Travers Herford, B.A., the Rev. Douglas Walmsley, formerly of Bury and Belfast, to Susan Beatrice, eldest surviving daughter of the late Rev. Wm. Croke Squier, and of Mrs. Squier, Rose Cottage, Stand.

Mrs. LUCAN-DAVIES, M.A.

(Diploma in Education, Liverpool University) has vacancies for Two Boarders. Thorough Education. Individual Attention. Healthy Situation. Fees Moderate.—"Parkhurst," Fields Road, Newport, Mon.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	431	CORRESPONDENCE:—	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
FEVERISHNESS AND COMMONSENSE	433	Irrationalism	Belgian Hospital Fund
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	434	The National Conference	Dr. Clifford's Farewell
BELGIAN HOSPITALS IN THE WEST OF FRANCE	434	MEMORIAL NOTICE:—	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES
THE MEMORY OF SOME HYMNS	436	Mrs. L. Tavener	NOTES AND JOTTINGS

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE article by Mrs. Bernard Allen, which we publish to-day, gives an admirable account of the recent visit of the delegates of the Belgian Hospital Fund to France and of the fresh demands which have been made upon our resources. The visit was undertaken in response to an appeal for help, and it has been the policy of the Fund from the beginning to work along lines of personal knowledge and sympathy. We are sure that our readers will be deeply impressed by the recognition which the Fund has won from the Belgian Army Medical Staff, and the wide area which is now covered by its activities. It began in a very modest way, but the generous support which it received from the first and its admirable organisation have given it national importance. In dozens of hospitals across the water "Angleterre" means the Belgian Hospital Fund and the welcome visitors who dispense its help. This is to all of us a source of gratitude and pride.

* * *

BUT Mrs. Allen's article is more than an account of what has happened. It is a trumpet call for our autumn campaign. It informs us of a number of new and pressing needs and reminds us that the old ones still make constant demands. We have always followed the plan of spending the money as it came in instead of hoarding it. It was the only possible policy, and we know that it is what our contributors desired. It has been a source of keen satisfaction to them to feel that within a few weeks, at most, their money was turned into hospital appliances and other comforts for the relief of suffering. But this means that fresh needs must be met as they arise. At the present moment every penny of money which we have received is pledged, and some cautious people might even think that in our desire to do good we have ventured beyond the margin of safety. On that score, however, we have no anxiety. We know our public, and the deep generosity of their hearts.

* * *

WE want to make it quite plain that we are in urgent need of a great deal more money, if we are not to refuse help, which we have never done yet. This week we have received lists of instruments from doctors who are well known to us, which are urgently needed. In one case it is an operating-table to replace one which had been on loan from a French doctor and is no longer available. For the moment we are holding our hands until the money comes in, as we are sure it will. To meet these and other demands and to purchase the beds to which Mrs. Allen refers in her article, we want £1,000 at once.

* * *

WE stated a short time ago that on a reasonable estimate the help sent to the Belgian Hospitals may be valued at £10,000. We are only astonished that through careful management, close personal attention to details, and the generous elimination of all office expenses, this modest sum, as war charities go, has been able to accomplish so much. Now it is our ambition to double it. The Churches, represented by our readers, have supported the other War Funds most generously, and they have given their young men to the country. But the Belgian Hospital Fund is in a special sense their own. In it they have found a field for their philanthropy which is occupied by nobody else. In a reference to the work of the Fund, which appeared in The Manchester Guardian on Monday, it is stated that for many months the Unitarians have been concentrating upon this most useful work. We believe that they will go on doing so as long as the need exists. From the beginning it has been our hope that this effort might be rich and wonderful enough to be worthy of our noble traditions in the field of practical Christianity and to remain as an inspiring memory for those who come after us.

* * *

A SHORT paragraph appeared in the press the other day which may have escaped the attention of many people. It referred to the excellent condition of the Belgian army. A large number of new recruits has joined, and it is stated to be well-disciplined and in the best of spirits. We are able to corroborate the truth of this statement from personal observation. In more than one town in France recently we watched the training of large numbers of Belgian recruits. From a military point of view they made an excellent display. Many of them were men of mature years and bore the marks of education and refinement. The spirit of Belgium is quite undaunted. These men mean to drive out the invader and liberate their native land. None of those who serve in this war are more worthy to be called soldiers of freedom.

It was announced on Thursday morning that Germany has agreed to modify her submarine policy, and America is naturally much gratified over her diplomatic triumph. The official message, however, leaves so many matters of importance undecided that it is hard to see at the moment whether it is a genuine act of repentance on the part of Germany or only a move for her own advantage in the protracted game which she has been playing with President Wilson. The German promise is in these words: "Passenger liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without ensuring the safety of the non-combatants aboard, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance." Clearly there are here many loop-holes for exceptions. It is, for instance, very easy to allege that a liner is trying to elude a submarine if it deviates at all from its ordinary course. Moreover, what does "ensuring the safety" of the passengers mean? Is it enough to turn them adrift in open boats in a stormy sea? It will also be observed that the undertaking applies only to "liners." The gain to humane warfare will be very slight if merchant-men and fishing boats are still liable to be sunk at sight.

* * *

It is true that Mr. Lansing is stated to have seen representatives of the press and told them that Germany had agreed to warn, visit, and search enemy merchant-men before attacking them, and to safeguard the lives of the passengers. But this promise must be incorporated in an official document before it can be treated as satisfying President Wilson's original demand on behalf of the rights of humanity. We hope most heartily that the first chorus of approval in the American press will turn out to be justified. If so we have some claim to divide the honours with America. Germany's submarine activities have been a failure owing to the splendid courage of our merchant service and the vigilance of the Admiralty. There has never been anything remotely resembling a blockade of our shores. A diplomatic concession at Washington is for her the easiest way out of a policy as costly as it is futile, without a public acknowledgment of defeat.

* * *

An article by Prof. Pares on 'Russia's Real Position' which appeared in The Daily Chronicle on Monday, is far more informing than many of the military discussions, which have been written without local knowledge. He points out that the real aim of the German campaign in the East was to frighten Russia into making a separate peace, and from that point of view it has entirely failed. Repeated offers to negotiate have been refused unconditionally. The Russian spirit is unbroken, and the Russian armies are still in the field.

I was with the retreating Russian army [he writes] from the Carpathians to the Russian frontier, and its moral was not altered in the very slightest by the terrible ordeal of artillery fire to which it was subjected day after day. Units reduced to a tenth of their strength showed the same, nay, a higher spirit than before. When darkness put a term to the unequal conditions our people faced about and showed the enemy who was master when the fighting odds were equal. The Germans, and still more the Austrians, both officers and men, were worn out both in strength and spirit during this interminable advance. The end was to be peace, which is the one great desire that I have always heard expressed by every prisoner of the enemy. Peace was to come because the Kaiser had promised it. But it was quite recognised that peace could not come till Russia chose to accept it. We have now had the test; it means failure; and any prospect of an endless march towards the Ural Mountains will strike more terror into the advancing enemy than even the thought of a retreat.

* * *

It seems hardly worth while to notice the campaign of The Times on behalf of conscription it has been so feeble and so foolish. If the real object were to help the country and not to embarrass the Government the tactics adopted would have been quite different. It would have tried to conciliate all reasonable opposition, and scorned to use the weapons of base insinuation in order to spread the seeds of disaffection. On Tuesday it described the condition of the country in the following words: "The politicians are thinking about votes after the war; the men of business about trade after the war; and the trade unionists about wages after the war." In what nightmare world does this feeble traducer of his country dwell, who fondly imagines himself to be wiser than Lord Kitchener and all the members of the Cabinet rolled into one? This kind of thing will only make it tenfold more difficult for the Government to introduce compulsion, should it ever be necessary to do so. It has hardened the opposition, and aroused widespread indignation and disgust among people who love their country too well to stoop to this kind of envenomed controversy, which only rends its unity with party cries. We will accept cheerfully whatever burden the war may lay upon us, but not at the dictation of bombastic ignorance.

THE real state of the case, so far as conscription is concerned, is admirably described in the following message from the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian:—

I have grounds for stating [he says] that, in spite of rumours and apparently inspired reports, there is no prospect of conscription either immediately or as far ahead as can at present be foreseen. The purely military case against conscription is overwhelming. It is simply this—that the War Office has, and will for months to come have, more men in hand, trained and ready, than it can supply and send to the front. Nearly every village in England is full of soldiers, nearly every lane in the land is tramped by their feet. It takes a vast army to spread out like that. If you ask these men how long they have been in training you will find that most of them have been at it for more than the six months (to put it at the highest) which is necessary to train a modern soldier. Many soldiers in England and Scotland have been in training for a year. When the Government early this year asked for the third million of men it had the first two millions complete or virtually complete. We know, roughly, how many men have been sent to the various fronts. It is easy to calculate what an enormous surplus of men the War Office has in hand. It will need them all and more, but the stream of recruits flows steadily in (with spurts every time a Zeppelin drops a bomb on England). The voluntary system is adequately providing the men, and providing them in the way that can be most conveniently and economically handled.

* * *

WE hope that the coal crisis in South Wales is now happily over, and that we shall hear no more about it to the end of the war. The press has behaved with admirable restraint during the past week, while further negotiations have been in progress, and comments which might exasperate feeling by imputing blame have been conspicuous by their absence. The country must demand of masters and men that they should bury their differences and work with a will for the sake of national freedom and security, with as little regard to their own financial interests as the men who have enlisted in the army. We have frequently called attention to the grave social problems which exist in the South Wales mining districts. The villages have grown with unhealthy rapidity, the housing is often defective, and the population, which has been largely recruited from outside, has few local attachments. Here is a wide field for enterprise after the war is over, and it must not be over-looked in justice to the men who, more than any others, are behind the navy.

FEVERISHNESS AND COMMONSENSE.

THE other day one of the speakers at the Annual Meeting of the Library Association urged that the Public Library has a special duty to perform in helping people to escape from the snare of too much thinking about the war. He remarked quite truly, that the recent course of the war has greatly increased the mental strain upon the nation and upset its capacity for clear thinking. If only people would put a strict limit on the amount of attention which they gave to the newspapers and devote some time every day to the reading of a good book we should have a steadier and far more effective national state of mind. This is not a counsel of aloofness but of commonsense. For all of us the war, so long as it lasts, has to be the dominating interest of life. But for that reason we must escape from it sometimes if mental energy is to be used for its true purpose of dealing with facts instead of phantoms; and our problem of duty is not to degenerate into an obsession of fear.

Many of us who can only be spectators or critics of events, are suffering from low fever. Perhaps we have caught the infection from reading The Times with its daily picture of a nation hastening to ruin, or some friend who affects the rôle of a prophet of evil has succeeded in making us as unhappy as himself. Of course, it only requires a moment's candid reflection to convince sensible people that even a newspaper is not infallible, and is not always even worthy of respect; while the reputé of our dismal prophets for political insight or moral wisdom is quickly scattered by a little breezy commonsense. In not a few cases the best remedy for feverishness is a long holiday from The Times and other dyspeptic papers, and friends with a gift of humour.

But it is not so easy to combat the influences which seem to steal into the mind from the air we breathe. We all wanted swift decisions and dramatic events, and because we wanted them so badly we concluded that they must surely come. Instead of this we have sorrow and anxiety for our portion, hope long deferred, a terrible strain upon national resources, and a heavy burden of private care. We had forgotten that wars are seldom fought according to programme. The tragedies of the world are not governed by our impatient desires, though in the end their long agony closes in triumphant peace. We must remember these things and be wise. For the burden will be still heavier and the strain harder to bear before we have done successfully what we set out to do. If we fall away into nervous exhaustion and dull complaining at the end of twelve months, what sources of strength will be left to us for a second year, or if need be for a third? To meet this moral crisis, with its possible collapse of eagerness and vitality, we ordinary people must revise some of our habits. Many of us have overstrained our emotions. We have lived too long upon shocks of excitement. Battle and war have been our meditation day and night. The newspaper habit has acted like a drug upon intellectual activity. We have suspected ourselves of unfaithfulness if we have cared greatly about anything but military affairs. But ultimately, that way madness lies. We must become more normal. We must guard against the desolating inroads of feverishness and irritability and impatient censure. The war has still its paramount claim upon our lives. We ought to regard it not merely as a supreme test of our endurance but as a sacred task committed to our race for the future of the world. But for this very reason we must think of it clearly and with controlled passion. If ever there was an hour which demanded the sympathy of an unjaded heart, and the insight of an unclouded mind, it is now. We may not be able to command these things at our pleasure, but we can avoid the blundering folly of cultivating overstrain as a virtue, and mistaking dull brooding or fussy complaint for intellectual light.

It is true, the medicine of cheerfulness is not to be had for the asking. A gloomy hearer is one of the hardest problems of the preacher. But men and women with any knowledge of life know themselves where to look for relief from tense nerves and anxiety for the morrow. They find it in their favourite books, in the love of nature, in the laughter of children, and perhaps above all in the selfless service of others. Some of the happiest people at the present time are the nurses who are tending the sick and wounded. They have found a vocation, they have no time for the spectres of the mind, and their view of life is healthy and strong. But most of us cannot touch the need of the hour at such close quarters. We have to look for health of body and mind not in exceptional tasks but where we have always found it. This is no plea for carelessness and self-indulgence or pleasure, "as usual," but simply for sanity and commonsense. A feverish pulse leads to unsteadiness in duty. To lose our cheerfulness is to betray our patriotism. Every lapse on our part from courage and patient endurance into angry controversy or feeble complaint lessens the general power of resistance, for it is the civilian population which keeps an army in the field, and nothing is so demoralising to it as grumbling and discontent at home. If we show ourselves to be a people not only in deadly earnest but also of invincible cheerfulness, steady in purpose, calm and collected in mind, not blown hither and thither by every wind of newspaper doctrine, accepting even bad news simply as a challenge to larger effort, the same temper will permeate all ranks of the army. If we are worthy of our army our army will be worthy of us. There, in a nutshell, are the moral terms of victory.

Not many days ago the present writer was watching a gay scene at a French seaside resort. The shore was crowded with children playing games or digging mimic trenches in the sand. The air was musical with their laughter. They had no care except to be happy. Walking about among them were groups of English doctors and soldiers, absorbed not in thoughts of war, but in the frolic of the children. It was a vision of mirth against a background of tragedy, almost within hearing of the guns. And it was all simple and natural and right. These men would go back to their work in the hospitals or to face death in the trenches with a better heart, because amid all their grim tasks they had still time to be merry, to wander for an hour of blissful idleness by the summer sea, and to enter the enchanted world where the little child is king.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

THE white doves brood low
With innocent flight.
Higher, my soul, higher!
Into the night!
Into black night.

Beyond where the eagle
Soars strong to the sun.
Nought hast thou, if only
Earth's stars be won—
Earth's stars are won.

Beyond, where God's angels
Stand silent in might,
Higher, my soul higher!
Into the light!
Straight to God's light.

MAARTEN MAARTENS.

It seemed to Esmond as if he lived years in that prison: and was changed and aged when he came out of it. At certain periods of life we live years of emotion in a few weeks, and look back on those times as on great gaps between the old life and the new. You do not know how much you suffer in those critical maladies of the heart, until the disease is over and you look back on it afterwards. During the time, the suffering is at least sufferable. The day passes in more or less pain, and the night wears away somehow. 'Tis only in after days that we see what the danger has been—as a man out a-hunting or riding for his life looks at a leap, and wonders how he should have survived the taking of it. O dark months of grief and rage! of wrong and cruel endurance! He is old now who recalls you. Long ago he has forgiven and blest the soft hand that wounded him; but the mark is there, and the wound is cicatrised only—no time, tears, caresses, or repentance can obliterate the scar.

THACKERAY.

The following is a translation of a form of prayer composed by Queen Margherita in memory of King Humbert I.

Credo, Pater, De Profundis. Because he was merciful to all, according to thy law, O Lord, be merciful to him and give him peace.

Pater, De Profundis. Because he cared only for justice, have pity on him, O Lord.

Pater, De Profundis. Because he always forgave everyone, forgive thou his errors, inevitable to human nature, O Lord.

Pater, De Profundis. Because he loved his people, and had only one thought, the good of la Patria, receive thou him into thy glorious Kingdom, O Lord.

Pater, De Profundis. Because he was good until his last breath, and fell a victim to his goodness, give him the crown of martyrs, O Lord.

O LORD, he did good in this world, he bore ill-will to no man, forgiving always those who did him harm—he sacrificed his life to duty and to the good of his country, striving until his last breath to fulfil his mission. By that generous blood which flowed from his wounds, by the works of justice and of goodness which he accomplished in life, Lord of all pity and justice, receive him into thine arms and give him the eternal reward.

BELGIAN HOSPITALS IN THE WEST OF FRANCE.

SINCE my first visit to the Rennes district I had been very anxious to see all the hospitals in that region, as the few I had had time to see on that occasion showed me that there was much need for our help. So it was with great pleasure that I found myself on August 6 en route for Brittany. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Allen, Mr. W. W. Kelland, our indefatigable representative in France, and the editor of THE INQUIRER. We went first to Rennes, which is the centre for all the hospitals scattered about in the towns and villages of Brittany. We had there the satisfaction of seeing that the surgical instruments which we had sent to the hospitals in that town had already been useful, and we saw a number of patients who had undergone operations successfully and were making a good recovery.

When we visited the General, immediately on arrival, we were at first told that the 200 beds we had sent for the convalescent dépôt at Chateaugiron had not arrived, but as we were talking the doctor from the dépôt came into the office with the news that the trucks had just arrived at Rennes. As the beds had to be carted 17 kilometres, it seemed impossible, especially as it was harvest time, that carts could be obtained in time to get the beds to their destination before we visited it. This was on Monday evening. On Wednesday morning we started on our visit to Chateaugiron at 9 o'clock, accompanied by the Commandant and doctors, in two motors lent and driven by their owners, French gentlemen of Rennes. We dismounted at the portal, and as we passed under the gateway the bugle was sounded to tell the men of our coming. Everything had seemed so dreary and depressed on my first visit. Now there was an air of suppressed excitement and pleasure everywhere. We entered the wards, and there in their places, made up with the new bedding, were the 200 beds! How it had been done is a mystery, but some men must have worked all night putting them up and removing the old ones. We were greeted with smiles on all sides; "Vive les Alliés" was blazoned on the walls of each room, and even sometimes "Vive Belgian Hospital Fund!" We saw the new bath rooms for which we are paying the cost of materials, the work being done by the convalescents themselves. They were nearly finished, and 48 men could have hot baths each morning. We were delighted with the ingenious and economical arrangements that had been made. A large room has now been arranged for recreation, and from somewhere a few musical instruments have been produced and the players were instantly forthcoming from among the patients. A Belgian gentleman, who is not strong enough to return to the Front, is established there as "guide, philosopher and friend," and has inaugurated concerts, lectures on the war, even dramatic performances, among the men. The box we had sent containing about 60 games, given by a working men's club in London, had not yet arrived, but it was there a few days later. A small library is being got together, and we have promised to pay for a few Flemish books; the French ones are readily given by the townspeople. With winter in prospect indoor recreations are most necessary. On our departure, the men crowded to the windows and shouted "Vive l'Angleterre," and cheered like English Tommies! and as we left the village a charming little boy, the son of a village magnate, gave me a huge bouquet of roses and heliotrope tied with the Allies' colours, and made the prettiest little speech imaginable.

We left Rennes the next day armed with a letter from the General, which ensured us a welcome at each hospital we visited. We went first to the furthest west of the hospitals on our list. It seemed as if we must be far from the war when we arrived at the little station, but there in L— and round about the town are hospitals for about 6,000 French and 200 Belgian wounded, and besides that there are Belgian and French refugees billeted in nearly every house, and a work-room with about 30 workers started by the "Œuvre Belge" for the women to make clothes for the soldiers. The wards at the hospital were pleasant, and the doctor was very happy to hear that some instruments which he badly needed were on the way. We were glad to hear that they had arrived a day or two later. His great want at that moment was for thick soled shoes for the men to walk out in the garden. There is an immense amount of rain there and the ground is always damp, and the men could not go out in felt slippers.

We went on that afternoon to G— where we found a small hospital, very ill equipped, and here we recognised and were recognised by several men formerly in hospital at Calais, and we had a very friendly visit. There was a very lonely young doctor who had been in England, and was delighted to see us. We spent the afternoon with him, and when we left he felt he had friends to whom he might look for the help he wanted. At the next large centre, St. B—, we saw three hospitals, and all three doctors were formerly at Calais, knew all about us, and had already received their instruments. One of these hospitals was in a convent with a beautiful garden, but some of the equipment was rather primitive. The operating room contained the officer's bed, and his hot dinner had just arrived for him on the table in the corner, but there were hopes that another room might soon be allotted for the purpose. It is quite curious how we often found a hiatus like this in otherwise very good surroundings. It is explained by the fact that the religious communities frequently possess fine buildings which they unreservedly offer for the wounded, but there is no money to assist with the surgical equipment. It was to some extent the same thing at the Mother House of the Little Sisters of the Poor at St. P., where 400 Frenchmen and 200 Belgians are being nursed. The doctor there had already received our instruments and had found them very useful, but the Reverend Mother had a request for blankets to make, as she had just promised to take in 50 more men, and with winter approaching she was anxious that the men should be warm enough. She will be glad to have the 50 warm bed coverings which are already on their way to her. At first when we talked it seemed that the sisters had not had their life disturbed by all these changes, but after a while fact after fact slipped out, and one realised that they had given up their rooms, their beds, all their stores, their kitchen, their garden, but they had kept their chapel, and they had kept their inward life of devotion, and so they had only been disturbed "un petit peu," and there was no sacrifice at all about it! They were just grateful to be permitted to bear their share of their nation's burden of sorrow.

D— is the centre of a large number of hospitals. There are sixteen altogether that we visited in the town and its surroundings, 11 of them for wounded, and five for convalescents. As the neighbourhood is good and French ladies are helping in the work of nursing, the patients there are the luckiest we saw, but even here there was a great lack of sufficient instruments until we supplied them. The convalescent dépôts, all under one lieutenant, were excellently managed, and out-of-door amusements were organised in a field and paid for by small economies effected out of the sum allowed for each man. Here I should like to send a number of packs of cards; they had none, and they are very dear and scarce in France now. It does not matter if they are old, as long as they are complete! In the winter the men will be forced to spend a good deal of time indoors, and some sort of distraction to prevent their thoughts turning to their own troubles too constantly, is a real need.

It was in one of the hospitals in this neighbourhood that we saw some most wonderful eye operations, and as these had been performed with the instruments we had sent, we felt a special pride in them. We saw cases where new eyelids had been made, and looked as natural and comfortable as if they had always been there, and we saw a case where the muscle moving the upper lid had been destroyed by a bullet and another muscle had been skilfully manipulated to replace it, doing the work of the first almost as well as its own. It all seemed like witchcraft, but it was only the work of a brilliant eye surgeon, aided by the instruments devised for the purpose. "I had a very fine collection of instruments before the war," he said, "and these you have sent are as good, and in some cases even better," and never had he so great need of them as now!

Close by was a hospital by the sea under two doctors that we knew before. They were putting all their hearts into making the most of every little thing. As the hospital is entirely Belgian they have few resources, and seeing this we were all soon busy making friends with doctors, nurses, and store-keeper to find out where the pinch came. Of course a few instruments were wanted; we had seldom met a worse equipped operating room. It is true it was only intended for small operations and dressings, but they had no means of sterilising anything except by taking things down to the kitchen (a good way off!) and boiling them over a wood fire, and as the nurses said, "The water is often very smutty!" In the course of an ordinary morning's dressings the journey down to the kitchen and back would sometimes have to be undertaken a dozen times. So here was a clear need for a steriliser for instruments and dressings.

Again, the supply of bandages and dressings was of the scantiest, but a fine box full was awaiting me in London when I returned from one of the war dépôts, and it is now on its way to that hospital. The sea was looking so lovely that morning that we expressed a hope that some of the patients were able to bathe. "They are not allowed by the municipality to bathe without costumes," was the answer, "and we have none for them." That want was supplied that very afternoon before we left.

There were only two hospitals at our next stopping place A—, but in one of them was established an old Calais friend, a skin specialist, with whom we have been in correspondence for some time with a view of starting a special clinique under him, but so far without success. It may yet be accomplished as at present there is no such special hospital, while there are a fair number of such cases scattered about in general hospitals. Here we saw the method of sun bathing for wounds used very largely. The patient has his bed out of doors with only a gauze covering to keep off dust and flies. The sun is allowed to shine directly on to the open wound with very quick healing results.

The next large group of nine hospitals we saw with G— as a centre. They were all generously housed by the French authorities, and their chief needs were small instruments in daily use, and packs of cards. I think every hospital begged for these.

As we went round the various hospitals we noticed how even in the best of them Belgians all seemed to feel that they were so far from home, and I believe every man I spoke to had some sad tale to tell of missing relatives; that is the great difference between the atmosphere of the French and the Belgian rooms. In the French they are gay, and have letters and parcels and visits from their friends; in the Belgian the man who gets any of these is indeed lucky, and there are not many, that is why one's heart goes out to them so warmly, because of their need of friends. It is flattering to us, but it is perfectly genuine, the constant expression of the desire to come to England, and the immediate welcome in the faces as soon as it is known we are English. They look to us in an almost childlike way to help them—for example, a young soldier had an invitation to England for his convalescence. It could not be granted in the ordinary way, but he just handed over his precious letter of invitation to me and left it to me to arrange. I am glad to say that by the kindness of the General to whom I sent the request, he has his permission, and is, I hope, already over here.

But now I want to tell of two most interesting visits we paid to convalescent dépôts. The one at Chateaugiron I have already described, and if the Fund had done nothing else but that one piece of work, it would, I believe, have justified its existence. Now here is another dépôt, on the sea shore at St. P. There are 600 men here, and the captain in charge is allowed 1s. 2½d. per head a day. Out of this he has to pay for everything, except rent. Food is very dear in France now, but he gives the men three excellent meals a day, served on clean white tables, with plenty of mild "boissons rafraichissantes." Out of the saving on the sum per head he has bought tools, and set up workrooms for the making and mending of all their furniture, for mending their clothes and their boots, for all the many wants of 600 men. He has established a canteen where wholesome drinks and cakes and chocolate are sold at almost half-price, and he has even bought a cinema lantern and organises entertainments and concerts. He has provided admirable bath-rooms where all the men can bathe in turn, and he is installing lighting and heating arrangements with a view to the coming winter. He has bought fishing nets and rods and parties for fishing are organised, and in a hut on the playe he has placed a small stove where the fish thus caught can be cooked and where potatoes may be fried! But this is not all the wonderful 1s. 2½d. can do. Out of other economies he has rented two fields, and convalescents are busy turning them into vegetable gardens, and the Captain intends to supply the men in this way with fresh vegetables all through the winter. (They are already practically impossible to obtain locally.) We were taken to see the villas which had been hired for the sleeping accommodation, and "here," said the captain, "I shall be glad of help from the English. I can manage gradually to provide all the other things the men need, out of my economies, but beds are beyond my means," and we saw the wretched plank beds which were all most of the men had. We promised to send out 300 beds at once to replace the worst, and only wished we could have sent enough for the whole 600 men. It was the doctor's turn next, and he at once said that what troubled him was that so many men were becoming stiff-jointed for lack of suitable apparatus to exercise the joints after fracture. There is a centre for mecano-therapy in Rouen, but not nearly enough accommodation, as nearly every man who has had a limb fractured needs something of the sort. He is preparing a list of the apparatus needed, and we hope to be able to send some, at least, of it if we can obtain the necessary money. The other dépôt for convalescents was in a large town. We arrived there very late at night (owing to a motor break-down) and had to leave at noon the next day for Paris; so we called on the Commandant very early in the morning. He has places for 450 men in two dépôts, the first, for 150 men, was in a narrow street in the middle of the town—a more unsuitable building, we thought, could not have been found—but that was before we saw the second dépôt. The same delightful spirit of making the best of things prevailed, and it was with pride that the Commandant showed us how he was able to feed his men well on the sum allowed (1s. 2½d. as before) and how he had saved a little here and a little there, and had a good refectory and kitchen, fitted with all necessary utensils and an admirable "salle des bains," which provided baths for every one in turn. But they had been unable to obtain beds, and so they had bought wood, and the carpenters had set to work and arranged rows of planks raised six inches from the ground, and on this large sacks filled with dried sea-weed did duty as mattresses. And this for men just out of hospital, who would have been petted and cared for in their own homes if they had had any to receive them! A room and a courtyard were set aside for recreation, but games were too expensive to buy. At the second dépôt things were even worse. It was in a disused brewery, beside which ran a canal which seemed to be the recipient of most of the town rubbish. The ground floor of the place, which included the refectory, kitchen, and recreation room, was occasionally inundated by this unsavoury stream, though everything that ingenuity could do to stave off such a calamity had been done. The beams and floors were literally rotting, and men were engaged in replacing the worst and most unsafe with sound wood, also bought out of "economies." When the Commandant took the place over it was swarming with rats, and there was not a pane of glass or a sound floor in the place. In the two months the dépôts have been open, 3,000 men have passed through, some staying only a few days before rejoining their regiments; but already there are 150 "permanents," men who are unfit to rejoin, and this number will undoubtedly be augmented with every week that passes. We made a hasty calculation of funds, and decided to promise 150 beds (and bedding) for the "permanents." These were ordered at once and have already started on their journey. I shall not readily forget the emotion with which the promise was received.

These promises of beds, with the liabilities for instruments, &c., which we have already incurred, will entirely exhaust the funds at our disposal at the present moment. We expect a large number of lists of "wants" early in September from the hospitals we have visited, and the lists from Calais will be coming as usual. A request has just come from a Belgian convalescent camp near Tours where some English nurses, formerly in Calais, are working, for 150 tins of condensed milk and Benger's food for typhoid convalescents. I have been obliged to say I cannot send it for the moment, but will do so "as soon as I can." This is the first time I have been unable to respond to a request for something which I know is needed. I hope that our supporters will make the delay a very short one. I want also to send hundreds of blankets to the convalescent dépôts before winter sets in; but this will cost a good deal, and can only be done if sufficient funds come in during the next few weeks.

ROSE ALLEN.

THE MEMORY OF SOME HYMNS.

"I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."—St. Paul.

WHEN I left the Church of England I most certainly ought to have made a reservation as to this dictum of the great Apostle. I desired to pray with the spirit, and pray with the understanding also, and to preach with the spirit, and preach with the understanding also, but in the matter of hymns my conscience is much more elastic. I am for liberty of the imagination and voice, and some restriction of the critical faculty. Is it necessary to believe all we sing in Church or Chapel? Surely some of those who have written hymns could not possibly have imagined it to be so. It is with me in this matter largely a question of individual taste, and sentimental association. When I was six years old I used to sit beside my governess who played the harmonium in our dear little church in Charles Lamb's favourite village. The hymns we had were to me the songs the angels sang, my governess being the perfect type to which all angels tried to conform. Ever since my taste in hymns has been developing on similar lines. I cannot go with the multitude who make holy-day, for when a plebiscite on hymns was taken, one beginning, "Peace, perfect peace" was the favourite, and to me this is rather sticky stuff. But then, on the other hand, I cannot go with those who select on hard and fast lines, for the selection is either orthodox or unorthodox and I like some of both.

In the very front I put the hymn to Saint Barnabas in the 'Ancient and Modern' collection. Saint Barnabas, says that pithy narrator of the "Acts of the Apostles," "was a good man," worthy indeed of this fine epic strain. Unlike so many Christians, he seems to have had a large stock of natural amiability, and the zeal of the convert did not rob him of this. Perhaps my Saint Barnabas is not quite historical. To me he is as Renan drew his charming portrait, with Antioch for a back ground, in a chapter in 'Les Apôtres,' which is intoxicating in its passionate beauty. And his hymn accords with my ideal. It opens with thanks for the "sons of consolation," of which he was chief. There is a spirit abroad just now to substitute "son of exhortation." Let us scorn it. "Procul, O procul este, profani!" We are up to our necks in sons of exhortation, but where are the sons of consolation? Such as my hymn describes in these beautiful verses—

Those whom thy spirit's dread vocation
severs

To lead the vanguard of thy conquering host,

Whose toilsome years are spent in brave endeavours

To spread thy saving name from coast to coast.

Those whose bright faith makes feeble hearts grow stronger,

And sends fresh warriors to the great campaign;

Bids the lone convert feel estranged no longer,

And wins the sundered to be one again.

And all true helpers, patient, kind, and skilful,

Who shed thy light across our darkened
earth,

Counsel the doubting, and restrain the wilful,

Soothe the sick bed, and share the children's mirth.

All other hymns come a long way after this in my love. Newman's "Lead kindly Light," seems to me to be both popular and good. Everybody is a possible doubter, I trust, for otherwise I take it, no one could be a believer. And it was a true feeling for art which made Newman use the imagery of nature for his pilgrim in doubt—moor and fen, and crag and torrent. But surely, "Praise to the Holiest in the height," by the same writer, is a finer piece of work. It is, too, such an index to Newman's soul, which was not the washed out nothing we call the soul, but a spiritual nervous system. With what intensity the delicate strings vibrate in that verse—

And in the garden secretly,

And on the cross on high,

To teach his brethren and inspire

To suffer and to die.

Much more personal than anything of Newman's is Cowper's "Hark my soul,"

This is very unequal. But it shows Cowper's magical gift of making a stream of melody out of monosyllables. There are two lines in this hymn which I can never sing; they make me choke—

"Lord, it is my chief complaint
That my love is weak and faint."

There is something inexpressibly touching in this intimate personal confession in the midst of all the cold formal hat-in-hand theism of the eighteenth century. It is not always wise when you become a man to put away childish things. The eighteenth century did it to its cost. And here is the child's voice, distinct and wistful.

It is perhaps a study in the art of sinking to turn from such hymns to that collection bearing the ominous names of Moody and Sanky. Surely no two Christians were ever quite so unhappily named as these Boanerges. Yet if I knew of a service next Sunday where a hundred little boys and girls were to sing "Pull for the shore, sailor," I would go and listen. I once used to conduct a mission among children in the slums of London. They were a herd of little unruly raggamuffins, but they could "Pull for the shore" lustily, and it did your heart good to be of their crew. But I must wade deeper yet into Sanky and Moody, for yes, I admit it, the frank vulgarity of the words and music of "Hold the fort" stimulates me amazingly at times. And in this same collection there is another hymn in quite a different vein, which had a strange fascination. It had a tune by Gounod. One verse ran thus—

Hold thou my hand! that when I reach the margin

Of that lone river thou did'st cross for me,

A heavenly light may flash along its waters,

And every wave like crystal bright may be.

The last line is of course lame and insipid, but the first three open out a very solemn landscape, and somehow remind me of Bunyan. To-day I feel that I have reached the last stage of my education in hymns. We have a book of our own at George's Meeting. Mr. Chignell made it. And he made it on the only plan on which books should be made, choose what you like and teach other people to like it. He has taught a large number at George's. If I should criticise that book my life would be in danger. Mr. Chignell had made up his mind to find an utterance for his own religious emotions. He pressed, among other more tractable souls, Shelley, Keats, Coleridge, Wordsworth, and even the Olympian Goethe into his choir. It was a bold undertaking. Doctrinally the difficulty was not so great. I even suspect that he sometimes attributed to these poets points of theology, which were to them at least debatable. But metrically the task was stupendous, for none of them had written with a view to "quires and places where they sing." But he did it. And the result pleases me. I like our book better than any other. If it only had the hymn for St. Barnabas and "Pull for the shore, sailor," I should be perfectly contented.

R. H. U. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

IRRATIONALISM.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have been greatly interested by the article of Mr. Maurice Adams on this subject. It appeals to me as one of the best informed and most informing short accounts of a philosophical situation which I have read for a long time. It has, however, suggested to my mind that there is no reason to be afraid of "irrationalism" as so many people are, and as Mr. Maurice Adams seems to be. When we hear of philosophers who propose the doctrine of living according to instinct, and of people who believe in it, our fear is that such a mode of life will put reason out of commission and reduce its followers to the level of irrational beings. This fear, I think, is groundless. A little consideration shows that the attempt to live according to instinct—if any one were so foolish as to make it—would keep reason incessantly on the stretch and cause the world, if the practice became general, to roar with controversy and argument. Let the reader imagine himself converted to the doctrine of life according to instinct. What follows before he can put his doctrine into practice?

He must first ascertain what "instinct" is; for only a fool would try to live by instinct so long as he was liable to mistake for instinct what was really something else. This means that our convert must study psychology, and the most difficult part of psychology too—an admirable exercise for reason. And not only will he have to study what the psychologists have to teach on this subject, but he will have to settle the differences of opinion among them, which are many and great. If his reasoning faculties finish this part of his task in less than five years strenuous work, he may consider himself fortunate.

Having made himself a trained psychologist on this point, and got a scientific definition of instinct, he must proceed to apply it, and he will now find that the application of his definition will provide work for his reason, compared to which the finding of the definition was a mere trifle. I take a definition at random from an essay which is before me at the moment—not a good definition, but good enough for an illustration—"instinct is unreasoned prompting." Very well, then: our convert's task now seems simple enough—merely that of acting on unreasoned promptings. But which of his promptings are unreasoned? Our convert is in this position: to be true to his doctrine he must not act upon any prompting until he is quite sure that it is "unreasoned." But any one who will try the experiment will soon find that this is not as easy as it looks. From one point of view every prompting is unreasoned; from another point of view every prompting is reasoned. Hunger, for example, is unreasoned in the sense that it didn't come into existence by reasoning; on the other hand hunger is a thing about which I have reasoned a thousand times. How can I make sure that my present hunger for dinner is or is not a reasoned prompting? It is a nice question and I can imagine myself debating it all day and exhausting all the resources of my logic, perhaps in vain. So with other and better definitions of instinct. The difficulty of determining whether particular promptings did or did not conform to the definition would let loose such a flood of reasoning that none but the greatest reasoner could cope with it. Fancy having to settle the question in regard to each and every prompting as it arose within us—is this, or is it not, an instinct! And yet that is what we should have to do before we could seriously profess to be living according to instinct.

Nor is that all. As everybody knows, we are constantly beset by contrary promptings. Consider the promptings involved in writing the present letter. One, let us say, is the desire to see my name in print. But then a contrary prompting bids me save myself trouble by not writing the letter, for I happen to be very busy about other things. Are both of these promptings instincts? Let us agree that they are, without reasoning, though as a matter of fact we might reason about it all day. But which of them am I to follow, for I cannot follow both? Here is a pretty puzzle for reason to unravel! If you say it is not to be unravelled by reason but by a third instinct which will guide me in my choice, then I ask you why I should follow this third instinct rather than either of the original pair. And there we are at it, reasoning again!

On these grounds I venture to think we may dismiss our fears lest this doctrine of life according to instinct should put reason out of commission and make us all "irrationalists." The same might be said about the wider doctrine—a very old one—which bids us "gratify each impulse the moment it arises." Here, too, there would be enormous difficulty and endless work for reason in deciding the exact moment at which an impulse does arise, and if two impulses arose at the same moment there would be the very deuce to pay. To make the doctrine work one would have to be meticulously accurate in the matter of time and the most disastrous mistakes would result from supposing that a given impulse arose a moment earlier or later than it actually did. We should want, in this case, not only psychology, but high mathematics, and incessant attention to the hands of a stop-watch. In short, the work for reason would be infinite.

I have my doubts as to whether there really is such a thing as "irrationalism" in philosophy. I observe that none of these philosophers whom Mr. Adams classes as "irrationalists" wrote their books by blind instinct or appeal to the blind instincts of their readers to accept what they have to say. And as to the German crimes, they always seem to me precisely the sort of crimes into which men have reasoned themselves—which is the worst sort of all.—Yours, &c.,

L. P. JACKS.

Manchester College, Oxford,
August 30, 1915.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I remind Secretaries of Congregations and others of the Triennial Meetings of the National Conference to be held in London, October 26th–28th?

It is specially important to remember that the names of ministers and delegates who desire hospitality must reach me not later than October 1st.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES HARWOOD
(Secretary).

60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, N.W.
September 1st.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MRS. L. TAVENER.

A LARGE circle of friends have heard with profound regret of the death, on August 19th, of the accomplished wife of the Rev. L. Tavenor, formerly of Ipswich and Lydgate, and since April, 1911, minister of the Aberdeen Unitarian Church. Mrs. Tavenor was the second daughter of the late William Malcolm, of Holywood, co. Down. The name of Malcolm is justly honoured in the history of the non-subscribing churches in the north of Ireland; and for many years Miss J. H. Malcolm was a valued worker in the first Presbyterian church (non-subscribing) of Holywood, of which her father, at the time of his death, was one of the oldest surviving members. On her marriage with Mr. Tavenor in January, 1907, she entered with zeal into church work at Ipswich; and after her removal to Lydgate, near Huddersfield, she took up the work of raising funds for the erection of a new school. Before she left, the building was completed and the greater part of the cost secured. She also threw herself into the work of forming a Nursing Association for the surrounding villages, in order to provide a permanent sick nurse for the district. In this enterprise members of all denominations helped; the Vicar was President of the Association, and Mrs. Tavenor its first Secretary. In Aberdeen her personal gift of attracting and influencing young people had further scope, until increasing weakness forced her to relinquish her duties in connection with the Sunday School and its various societies. She also took part with her husband in his work among the blind in Aberdeen. Her last public appearance was on April 23rd, when she gave a lecture to the blind on Irish poetry. She was not able to stand on this occasion, but gave the lecture seated.

The funeral service was held in Aberdeen Unitarian Church on Saturday, August 21st, and was largely attended. It was conducted by the Rev. Dr.

Mellone of the Home Missionary College, Manchester, and formerly of Holywood, co. Down. Dr. Mellone also officiated at the graveside, and preached in the church at both services on the following day.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

33RD LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,728	13	1
Mrs. Thorneley (fourth donation)	3	3	0
Miss E. Hibbert (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Miss E. Dowell (seventh donation)	5	0
Mrs. Charles H. Allen (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss L. Paton (second donation)	3	0	0
Mr. H. Twelvetees	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Chitty (fifth donation)	4	0	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (fourth donation)	25	0	0
Miss Lalor and Miss Bowring (third donation)	5	0	0
Anon.	5	0	0
Mrs. Jolly (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. J. Houghton Hague	1	1	0
Miss E. Houghton Hague	1	1	0
Wimbledon Unitarian Church, per Mr. W. N. Martin (sixth donation)	1	8	6
Mr. C. Lewis Suelson	5	0
Mr. J. F. Johnson (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Enfield (fifth donation)	2	0	0
M. F. G. (third donation)	2	0	0
Miss Emma Tedder	2	6
Mrs. William Moggridge	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Allen (sixth donation)	50	0	0
Miss Warren (third donation)	10	0	0
Miss Harriet Taylor	1	0	0
Mrs. Manning Prentice	5	0
Mrs. Robins (third donation)	20	0	0
Mrs. Buckley	5	0	0
A. J. A., Deal, (sixth donation)	5	0
R. L. (third donation)	10	0
Mr. P. W. Shone	15	0
Mr. Ronald P. Jones (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Miss G. Martineau (fifth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. T. Palliser Young (second donation)	2	0	0
Miss Jane Deakin	5	0	0
Mr. J. Marsden, J.P. (twelfth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Worsley	3	3	0
Anon.	16	6
	£5,919	13	7

Parcels have been received from:—

Miss G. Martineau; Mrs. and Miss Grundy; Wandsworth Women's League (per Mrs. E. Jones); Miss F. M. Minns; Lady McClure; Mrs. Thornley; Sidmouth Old Meeting Sewing Society (per Miss Barmby); Mr. and Mrs. R. M.

Williamson; Drumaness Working Party (per Mrs. Hurst); Mrs. J. H. Green and Miss East; Miss Emma Kinder; Miss Jenkins; The Misses Tedder; Mrs. Manning Prentice; Miss K. F. Purdon; Miss Bruce; Miss Isaacs; Mrs. Narian; Miss Adela Baumann; Miss Dora Young; Miss Taylor and Miss Keswick; Mrs. Barry Castle; Bury Unitarian Women's League, per Miss Johnstone.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

For the hospitals:—

Money to buy hospital requisites of all kinds.

Shirts.

Socks.

Vests } woven or of natural coloured
Pants } flannel.

Cardigans.

Shoes with leather soles.

Towels.

Handkerchiefs.

Mufflers.

Playing cards.

For Refugees (civilians):—

Money to support the hospice for sick and aged.

Clothes for men, women, children, and babies' layettes.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

DR. CLIFFORD'S FAREWELL.

PERHAPS there never was a leave-taking which had in it less of the sadness of farewell than Dr. Clifford's on Sunday evening, when he brought to a close his long pastorate of fifty-seven years at Westbourne Park Chapel. A very large congregation had assembled to hear him preach for the last time before his successor, the Rev. S. W. Hughes, takes his place, and the presence on the platform of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd George, with their little daughter, was a tribute to the ardour and courage with which he has promoted civic liberties as well as to the personal influence he has wielded as an exponent of religion. But nobody could dwell long in the shadow of a regret which, nevertheless, all must have felt acutely as the familiar figure rose before them, and the familiar voice was heard once more in tender and urgent supplication to God. It seemed essentially an occasion for giving thanks, for turning hopeful faces towards the dawn of a new day; and the note of joyous anticipation, of eager looking forward to a fresh period of activity for the members of the church vibrated through every sentence of Dr. Clifford's discourse. So marvellously young and vigorous, indeed, did he seem in spirit, that it was difficult to realise that he was at the close not only of fifty-seven years as pastor of the congregation he was addressing, but of sixty-four years in the Baptist Ministry. Over and over again as his voice rang out with a passionate thrill of praise and gratitude, his hearers were made aware of the kindling power of a strong and tireless spirit which will ask but the wages of going on as it draws nearer to the end of its labours on earth. We needed to be renewed with this breath of the eternal life in an hour when the heart of the nation is sorely afflicted, and to be reminded by one who has fought unweariedly for the freedom we cherish as our dearest possession that no human power can enslave or kill the soul which knows itself united to the Father of all.

At the beginning of his ministry in Praed Street, Paddington, Dr. Clifford preached on the words, "Be ye reconciled to God," and the idea conveyed in them, embodied for us in the life of Jesus Christ, had been, he explained, the dominating thought behind everything he had tried to do for the service of man since that date. He wished to speak to them now on the "unique charm of Christ's personality," taking as his text the words "believed on in the world" (1 Tim. III, 16) and to proclaim once more his allegiance to the Master whom it had been his joy and privilege to follow—not without a deep sense of personal unworthiness—since the days of boyhood. That unique charm, so compelling and all-embracing, was the outcome of a pure and divine spirit which could only have come from God himself. It was the perfect expression of the love of the Father, and naturally drew to itself with irresistible force those who did not oppose its winning appeal. Renan had said that Jesus must have been adorable in order to make himself so adored, and it was noteworthy that he did not win adherents, like a Napoleon, by acts of supreme, generalship and commanding power. His influence was exerted in passive ways, for he shrank from notoriety and the praise of men; he was gentle and submissive in the presence of authority, and those who were amazed at the signs of his kinship with God were admonished not to talk of what they had seen and heard. Yet it must be always remembered that Jesus never compromised or made terms with evil, and that he opposed unrighteousness and injustice with absolute fearlessness and disregard of consequences. He forced men to think, and made it by no means easy for them to be his disciples. No leader in the world's history had ever been so exacting in the demands made upon his followers, yet he drew the people after him—even criminals, and the most sordid denizens of the ghetto; and his influence on their lives was so great that thousands who had heard his message gladly suffered unto death rather than give up their allegiance to their Lord.

Discussing the question whether this compelling power of Christ was felt in our own day as it was in those distant times, whether it still drew men nearer to God, threw a light upon the perplexities of existence, and helped the human soul in the hour of death—Dr. Clifford said that he believed it did, and that it was destined to do so more and more in the future. Men were learning that they could not live without God, and, as it always seemed to him, God could not be understood save through the message and personality of Jesus, who revealed Him to us, not as the great and mighty judge, but as the tender and loving Father sharing the sorrows of his children and seeking to win them back to the way of truth. This faith could inspire men to give their best days in the attempt to alleviate pain or cure disease; it could make them fearless in their championship of justice as statesmen and politicians; it could raise the shattered and ruined life from the dust and clothe it with honour and righteousness; it could call forth the spirit of self-sacrifice for the defence of the weak, and, as numerous stories from the trenches had proved, it could bring peace to the eyes of the dying even amid the horrors of battle.

With this central thought always before him, speaking with intense feeling, and sometimes using phraseology which recalled a style of exhortation now somewhat out of vogue, Dr. Clifford summed up the long and fruitful period of his ministry at Westbourne Park Chapel, characteristically taking no praise to himself for the success of the work done there, but giving generous thanks to all who have laboured so loyally under his leadership. As he recently wrote to his congregation, although he is retiring he is not weary of life, which is still supremely good, and he looks forward to remaining in fellowship with them as a member of the Church and its Honorary Pastor. Westbourne Park Chapel has been, he says, "the home of my soul, the central sphere of my service, the solace and stay of my spirit amid the buffetings of warfare on behalf of high and holy movements for the extension of the Kingdom of God—the kingdom of righteousness and freedom and public right and peace," and as long as he lives the love which he has won from those who worship within its walls will be as a hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Astley.—The congregation has sustained a great loss in the death of Mrs. James Grundy, which took place, August 23rd, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. S. Yates, Bolton, where she had gone to be near her medical attendant. Mrs. Grundy survived her husband, who for forty years was Superintendent of the Sunday School, nearly twenty years, and like him, she always evinced the greatest interest in the work of the school and chapel, and in the welfare of the neighbourhood. The great respect in which she was held was witnessed to by the very large attendance at the funeral service which was held in the chapel previous to interment at Leigh Cemetery, and again on Sunday at a Memorial Service conducted by the Rev. Peter Holt.

Blackpool.—The Rev. B. C. Constable began his ministry at the Unitarian Free Church, South Shore, on Sunday August 29th.

London Lay Preachers' Union.—We regret to learn that Mr. E. Wilkes Smith, senior member of the London Lay Preachers' Union, is suffering from a paralytic seizure which attacked him during a recent visit to Margate. Much sympathy will be felt for him in his illness.

North Midland Association.—At the unanimous request of the two congregations the Association invited the Rev. E. T. Lang Buckland to be minister of Christ Church, Nottingham, and the Unitarian Chapel, Ilkeston, for six months. He accepted the invitation, and began his ministry on July 4th. He resides at Nottingham. A meeting was held at Christ Church on August 17th to welcome him. Among those present were Mr. Wilford, Mr. J. C. Warren, Mr. J. T. Perry, the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, and other friends, representing the High Pavement Chapel and the Association. The attendance was good and all are looking forward to united and successful work.

Scarborough.—The thirty-eighth anniversary of the opening of the Unitarian Church was held on Sunday, August 29th, when the sermons were preached by the minister, the Rev. J. Wain, and special music was rendered by the choir. In the midst of much general discouragement owing to the fact that Scarborough is suffering from a lack of visitors, while large numbers of residents have left the town, the Church is continuing its work, and Mr. Wain, as a member of the Executive of the Council of Social Welfare, is helping to alleviate the distress which threatens to become serious as winter advances. All the young men of the Bible Class, upwards of twenty in number, have joined the colours.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

WAR ECONOMY.

There is much sense in what Miss Mary Dendy says in a letter to the Times explaining why she does not join a certain society which aims at promoting economy and which she has been asked to support. The subscription is only 2s., which includes the cost of a badge, and anything there may be to spare will go to the Red Cross Fund. "I fail to see why my 2s. may not be sent to the Red Cross Society whole," Miss Dendy says, "without the greater part of it being wasted on printing, postage, stationery, and office expenses. I cannot think of any way in which I can more foolishly squander money than in joining a society to advertise to the world at large that I am practising an economy which is merely the obvious duty of everybody. In ordinary times it is a harmless craze that makes people think they must join societies, as for 'Getting up early,' 'Reading half an hour a day,' 'Speaking one kind word,' 'putting no sugar in tea,' 'Walking a mile before breakfast,' &c. Now, during war, when all our energy and all our money ought to be expended for useful purposes, surely one of the sacrifices women might make is the abstaining from joining societies and the wearing of useless badges." Miss Dendy's frank words have evoked a dignified retort, but many people—especially those to whom the practice of economy is no new thing—will agree with her in thinking that the less ostentation and fussiness there is about our saving at the present time the better.

BOOKS FOR RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

There will, we hope, be a warm response to the appeal on behalf of the needs of Russian prisoners in German and Austrian camp, signed by Prof. P. Vinogradoff, Mr. Hagberg Wright, and others, which has appeared in the press this week. Apart from the necessities of food and clothing, these unfortunate men keenly feel the need of spiritual assistance, and letters from them emphasise again and again an ardent wish to read and learn. A small committee has been formed with the object of providing instructive books for the camps, and a number of volumes have already been received at the London Library for this purpose; but many more are wanted. Russian books in the nature of primers, dictionaries, grammars, elementary works on science and history, and standard literary productions are, of course, especially in request. These must come chiefly from Russia, but English friends of the prisoners might greatly help by means of donations in money. All such donations will be gladly received by Mr. C. Hagberg Wright, at the London Library, St. James's Square, S.W.

RESTORING VILLAGE LIFE IN THE WAR ZONE.

The Paris correspondent of The Times has given some details of the Secrétariat Français, a committee of ladies chiefly concerned in the reconstruction of village life in the devastated districts of France. This Association has joined hands with the French Agricultural Society and the Society of Friends, and with the help of the latter they have founded a home for old men and women who were forced to leave their cottages when the Germans came. Through the inevitable mistakes of hastily improvised administration many of these poor people were separated from their own families, and they have now fallen into a pitiable state of disease and demoralisation. They need prompt attention, and this the Secrétariat Français has been able to get for them by its combined efforts with the Friends and private helpers. The committee is also turning its attention to the larger problem of preparing the ruined districts for the return of the expelled populations. The Friends have done much already to provide necessities, the State will do more, but there is still a wide field of activity to cover, and in order to work successfully in this sphere the Secrétariat Français is linking itself up with all the philanthropic societies which can help their cause.

THE STORY OF BRONSON ALCOTT'S "NEW EDEN."

A book has just been published in the United States which purports to give the first real and complete account of the experiment in communism at "Fruitlands" with which the name of Louisa Alcott's father will always be associated. The topic is a delightful one both for those who find in the extravagances of "cranks" a source of perpetual mirth, and for others who see in their pathetic attempts to simplify life, and keep their garments unspotted from the world, the efforts of the idealist in every age to make an environment in which it may be possible to achieve perfection. The disciples of "The Newness," as they called themselves, were very thorough-going in their methods of disciplining the lower nature, but hardly so successful in making their farming operations pay, and the experiment was destined to failure from the first. As Emerson said, "they look well in July; we will see them in December," and December found Fruitlands deserted by all save the Alcotts, "who were starving and shivering on a diet of fallen hopes and scarce barley." Alcott nearly died of his disappointment, and for three days and nights his wife—a remarkable woman with the practical mind and philosophical temper combined—sat by his bedside waiting for him to take food, and come back to the world he had so much despised. The famous Brook Farm experiment which was started in 1841 fulfilled its purpose far more effectually than Fruitlands, and not a single member of that community was ever known to admit that it was not a success. Charles Lane, one of the New Edenites, was a frequent visitor, and Mr. Alcott sometimes dreamily wended his way thither, though he was too sore over his own failure to be quite happy there.

A THEISTIC MOVEMENT IN MADRAS.

The latest report of the Theistic Endeavour Society of Madras is a record of patient and progressive work undertaken in the face of much discouragement and rendered extremely difficult by reason of the conservative tendencies against which it has to struggle. The Society has now been in existence three years. The members have chosen to call themselves an "Endeavour" Society not so much because they want to be humble in name, but because it is their greatest ambition to make real efforts in the direction of spreading liberal ideas and creating a meeting place for young social workers. There are about 150 members, and a number of these meet weekly for the worship of God. The Reading Circle also holds weekly classes for the discussion of books on ethical, philosophical, or religious topics, and certain anniversaries are commemorated every year. The Reading Room and Library are much appreciated, and an appeal is made to members and friends to contribute suitable volumes to the latter which at present, contains about 400 books. A Home is maintained for such members as desire to share a common life; but it is not always easy to secure the desired number of inmates, chiefly for the reason given in a significant sentence:—"We of this presidency are, perhaps, a bit more conservative than the rest, but even the few that have outgrown narrow sentiments find it not very easy to join a home that makes an open declaration of equality." The report contains details of mission work, the publication of tracts, and the distribution of charity undertakings which, although of a modest character, give promise of more fruitful achievements when the movement has had time to grow.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

A N IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

TENTERDEN.—FURNISHED HOUSE To Let—Autumn and Winter Months. 2 Reception, 3 Bedrooms, usual offices, hot and cold water, geyser, radiators. Dogs, children, and smokers objected to.—Address B., INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

H ANDKERCHIEFS FROM IRELAND! Slightly imperfect Irish linen hemstitched Ladies' Handkerchiefs. Bundle of six for 1s. 5d. Postage 1d. extra. Bundle of twelve 2s. 9d. Postage 2d. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larnie, Ireland.

A RTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

A RTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, September 4, 1915.
* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3819.
NEW SERIES, No. 922.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.
Communion of Man with God.
New Handbook of Religion.
By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.
Handbook for Ministers of Religion.
Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.
AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.
Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.
Theology in Scotland.
By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.
Hymns in Times of National Crisis.
1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.
Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL,
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen. Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Now Ready for September.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other
Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JONAH:—
The Story of the Gourd.

LESSONS ON THRIFT—
The Sinfulness of Waste.
Thrift a Solemn Duty.
The Need for Thrift.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Douglas W. Robson, B.D.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.—THE RICH FOOL.—UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS.—THE FRIEND AT MIDNIGHT.

Junior Department—Alice L. Colfox.
BY THE WAY.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

UNITY CHURCH, SHEFFIELD.

The Opening Ceremony will take place on Thursday, SEPTEMBER 16th, at 3.30 P.M.

Doors opened by CHAS. HAWKSLEY, Esq., followed by a Dedictory Service, conducted by Revs. A. H. DOLPHIN and CHAS. HARGROVE,
M.A., Litt.D.

Tea at 5 o'clock. Public Meeting at 6 o'clock, presided over by Alderman A. J. HOBSON, J.P.

Service in the Church, 7.30 P.M. Preacher
Rev. CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A., Litt.D.

Collection at both Services in aid of the Building Fund. The Congregation appeal for Assistance in raising the sum of £2,000 to enable them to complete the Building Fund.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,466,000

Claims Paid exceed £16,000,000

Additional Representatives wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing Directors,
G. SHRUBSALL }

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

MISS ISABEL COLE, L.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE—Theory of Music and Aural
Training. Visiting Music Mistress. Public
School Experience. Registered Examinations.
Receives Private Pupils—Curwen Method.—
9, Holmewood Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

Mrs. LUCAN-DAVIES, M.A.

(Diploma in Education, Liverpool University)
has vacancies for Two Boarders. Thorough
Education. Individual Attention. Healthy
Situation. Fees Moderate.—“Parkhurst,” Fields
Road, Newport, Mon.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 26, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, September 12.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11 and 7, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. PIPKIN.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. LAMBLEY, M.A.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. G. COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. W. R. MARSHALL.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.—Closed. Services will be resumed on September 19th.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worples Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. BALLANTYNE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN LEE.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HIGGS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DONALD B. FRASER.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN MOORE.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College.—Closed during September.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Figgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

BIGGS.—On September 3rd, at 49, Norfolk Road, Seven Kings, Essex, the wife of Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

ARMSTRONG—FOUTA.—On September 4th, at Barcelona, Charles Wicksteed Armstrong, second son of the late Rev. R. A. Armstrong, of Liverpool, to Enriqueta, eldest daughter of Juan Fouta, Barcelona.

REDFERN—RHODES.—On Thursday, September 2nd, at the Old Chapel, Great Hucklow, the Rev. Lawrence Redfern, youngest son of the Rev. R. S. Redfern, to Eleanor, only daughter of Mr. J. Rhodes, of Rochdale.

DEATH.

TAGART.—On September 5th, at Bath, after a long illness, Anna Maria, wife of W. H. Tagart, aged 65, and daughter of the late S. T. Peters, of New York.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted

20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	443	CIVILIAN WORK IN CALAIS	447	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	450
KEEPING THE WATERS PURE	445	RUSSIA AND DEMOCRACY.	448	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	446	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Belgian Hospital Fund	450
CALAIS HOSPITALS, OCT. 1914 TO AUG. 1915	447	A New Translation of the 'Paradiso'	449	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	451
		Idealism and Religion	450	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	452

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE response to the appeal for help for the Belgian Hospital Fund last week has been very generous, and we have received £474 in money and several valuable gifts in kind. This goes some way to relieve anxieties for the moment, and we firmly believe the rest of the £1,000 asked for will be forthcoming. The first consignment of 150 beds and bedding has already reached its destination, and 300 more are on their way to a second convalescent depot. Moreover, through the kindness of a generous donor we are able to send a large consignment of Benger's Food to the typhoid convalescents for whom an appeal was made last week.

SOME people fear a drying up of the streams of charity this autumn. The efforts which were made a year ago were quite abnormal, and there has been a good deal of uneasy misgiving that they were not always wisely directed. What for instance has become of the Prince of Wales's Fund with its millions? It was got together almost in a mood of panic, when it was feared that there would be widespread unemployment in consequence of the war. As a matter of fact there has been a temporary boom in trade, and the distress committees have had less to do than in ordinary times. But there is no sign that they have taken the sensible step of using their machinery and resources for other purposes. If there is little suffering in our own country there is widespread misery elsewhere. It is in many ways lamentable that while our own funds of various kinds are richly supplied, there should be a fatal shortage elsewhere. In matters of charity, where the strong can help the weak, we ought to put our Allies on an equality with our own people. There would be a widespread feeling of satisfaction if some of the resources which are not needed at home could be unlocked for their use.

WE do not anticipate any reaction into prudent selfishness where a good case can be made out for generosity. Some appeals, no doubt, have spent their force, and many people are a little tired of endless requests for chocolate and cigarettes. But where there is terrible suffering to be relieved or there is a real shortage of necessities for dealing with wounds and disease, there is still plenty of money to be had. In this way we hope that many efforts for sending help abroad like our own Belgian Hospital Fund will come into their own this autumn. They must, of course, be devoted not to fanciful objects, but to urgent needs, before they can command public support, and they must be able to show that they are well organised with adequate machinery for the prompt distribution of help. We would only ask the public to take this lesson to heart, that our object is to bring the equipment of our friends a little nearer to our own standard. We have never dared to hope that we might be able to make the Belgian Hospitals rival our own in comfort and convenience. If we can only bridge a little of the difference, and make the doctors and patients feel that we do care greatly about their welfare, and that their needs are constantly in our thoughts, we shall at least have done part of our duty.

FOR this and for similar efforts there must still be large untapped sources in the country. Will our readers help us not only to discover them, but also use their own arts of persuasion in the good cause. As a people we have still all the visible marks of well-being. We lie softly; we feed delicately; the country roads are alive with luxurious motors; we talk more of war-profits than of the discipline of poverty. The reflective mind knows, of course, that this cannot last. There must be a drastic increase in taxation, and the startling growth of imports over exports will soon have a far-reaching economic effect upon all grades of the population. Then will come the real testing of character. Which do we care most about, our luxuries or our charities? Probably few of us will have means sufficient for both; but there will still be ample resources for helping one another and doing good, if we have enough common sense and simple Christianity neither to set our hearts upon riches nor to be distressed at the thought of poverty, because our love of the brotherhood is stronger than our anxiety for ourselves.

THE note of caution which we used last week in discussing Germany's apparent concession to America in the use of submarines has been amply justified. The whole thing has been neutralised and rendered more than a little ridiculous by the anxiety of Berlin to exploit pacifist sentiment at Washington for its own purposes. The kite-flying which followed post-haste after the announcement of the new policy was, of course, unofficial, but it was clearly inspired. Once again German diplomacy has blundered badly. With a little tactful delay it might possibly have succeeded in imposing upon certain sections of American opinion. As it is nobody is deceived. The American press has become sceptical and derisive, refusing to be the catspaw of such clumsy designs; while the Allies will only stiffen their backs and redouble their efforts at the first hint that Germany desires to consider terms of peace. For there can be no thought of peace till Germany is crippled by defeat and accepts the terms which are imposed upon her, or comes forward, humbled and repentant, with a promise of full reparation for her crimes.

* * *

How little sincerity there is in her promises was brought home to us with callous brutality last Saturday, when the Hesperian, an outward bound passenger ship with 600 people on board, was torpedoed off the Irish coast without warning. Fortunately the loss of life was comparatively small, but that does not lessen the villainy of the crime, nor is it likely to stop the revulsion of feeling in America. No doubt Germany will be fertile in excuses. It may be said that there had been no time to warn the submarine commander of the new policy, and in any case there were no American citizens on board. But it will be remembered that Count Bernstorff informed Mr. Lansing that the new policy had been adopted before the attack on the Arabic, and last Saturday it was a fortnight since the Arabic was destroyed. For us an official statement, which was issued by Mr. Balfour on Monday, is of far more importance than illusory German promises of better behaviour. He gives us the welcome information that the British fighting fleet has become relatively stronger than it was thirteen months ago, and that in the judgment of our Admiralty the submarine menace has broken down. Germany hoped to achieve a decisive success with this new weapon and for that reason was willing to inflict a new stain upon her own honour, but a decisive success has not been attained, and does not seem to be in sight.

* * *

NOT for the first time a great nation is revealing to the world her true nobility of mind in the hour of misfortune. When the Russian historians of the future are able to look back upon the events of this summer and to interpret them in the light of the stronger national consciousness, which they have done so much to evoke, it may be that they will almost come to view the German peril as a blessing in disguise. Certainly no country at the present moment is showing such remarkable signs of newness of life as Russia. It is not to the Germanised cliques among the nobility, which have so often betrayed her best interests in the past, that she is turning in the hour of peril, but to the best elements among the people. On Saturday two councils for the organisation of national defence, so constituted as to be representative of all that is most vigorous and competent in the public life of the country, were formally opened in Petrograd by the Tsar. To his patriotic address, which vibrated with the note "war till full victory is attained," the following reply was made by M. Rodzianko, the President of the Duma:—

Heavy trials have fallen to the lot of holy Russia, but not one of us is dismayed by them. All your subjects are absolutely at one in the unshakable determination, loudly proclaimed by all, that there must be no peace till the foe has been fully and finally defeated. The spirit of the people has not been broken by martial unsuccess. It is hard and steadfast, and all, both great and small, combine in efforts to build the roads to final victory. Summon, Gos Sdar, to share in this holy work all your faithful Russian people.

Under the steadfast and able guidance of the authorities, strong in your confidence and that of the public, your people, closing round its Tsar as an insuperable rock, is capable of deeds of boundless self-denial. It will spare neither labour, nor strength, nor property in the interests of the liberation of the Fatherland from the insolent attempts of the foe.

* * *

A GOOD deal of interesting information continues to reach us, describing the moral revolution which has been worked in Russia by the abolition of vodka. Cautious people with an ingrained tendency to belittle every improvement which is due to restrictive legislation, will no doubt warn us that the period which has elapsed is much too short for any general conclusions. We are also alive to the possibility of reaction, when the popular mind is less pre-occupied with the war, and life becomes normal again. All the same we are witnessing one of the most interesting and salutary experiments in temperance legislation, and we are filled with regret that we in England are so slow to protect ourselves against our most insidious domestic foe in the same way.

* * *

THE Trade Union Congress has been in annual session at Bristol this week.

The vast upheaval of the war will bring many economic and industrial questions into prominence, but it is impossible to view them yet in true perspective and proportion. For this reason, while caution and watchfulness are much needed, dogmatism about the future is entirely out of place. Trade Unionists, like the rest of their fellow countrymen, have much to learn from the discipline of the war. Its financial burdens and its closely-knit sympathies ought to change them in many ways. Under wise leadership industrialism may become less of a sect than it has been in the past, feeling that it exists for the whole nation, and not the nation for its limited ends. On the subject of Conscription the Congress has a right to make itself heard, and it is well that it should do so. Anybody endowed with a grain of political prudence knows that it is a subject which cannot be rushed in face of the opposition of organised labour. At the same time the Congress would do well to dissociate itself publicly from the intransigent attitude of some members of the Independent Labour Party. It is possible that in six month's time the Government may have to adopt compulsory military service as a measure of public safety. In face of this fact no prudent and patriotic man will foreclose the future. He may set his face as a flint against attempts to capture the press and to rush the Government, but he knows that in present circumstances it is only the political charlatan who exclaims, "In no circumstances will we accept conscription."

* * *

THE British Association stands for the advance of knowledge. Its aim is the discovery of truth and the application of truth to life. Its meeting in Manchester this week, though of necessity with maimed rites and many vacant places, is a fine illustration of mental collectedness. The noisy attack upon its distinguished President, Professor Schuster, has only resulted in the discomfiture of the newspaper patriots. For more than 40 years his name has been closely associated with the intellectual life of Manchester. The fact that he graduated at Heidelberg and studied under Helmholtz at Berlin, and has been aptly called "an international medium in scientific matters," is a welcome reminder of reciprocal influences which the war may limit for a season but can never annul. There is no such thing as French mathematics, or English physics, or German chemistry, or Russian biology. In the pursuit of knowledge the world is one, and we must all strive to keep the international mind.

KEEPING THE WATERS PURE.

"HE showed me a River of Water of Life, bright as crystal"—that is the secret of the blessed and beautiful Holy City seen by the Great Dreamer, the heavenly city that is yet to descend to earth. "In the midst of the street thereof" flowed this river—"a pure river" some of the old copyists made it, as our old English translation shows. Their instinct was right, the waters must be pure if they are to be Waters of Life.

In these days when some of us wistfully recall our walks among the mountains and scenes which we visited in happier days and long to re-visit, we may, at least take pleasure in memory's pictures. Among them is the picture of the mountain stream, gathering its first supply one hardly sees how; here, perhaps, is an obvious spring, there the mere dropping from mossy rock-sides; but, at last, there is a distinct flow in a little channel, and so the river is started. Pure, "bright as crystal," the stream at once adds new beauty to the world; its way even among the lifeless stones brings out their colours, the veins of quartz gleam among the slate, the mottled grain of the granite glows and sparkles, the homely sandstone flushes beneath its touch, and the very pebbles are a shining joy which the boy, not seeing the river's secret, thinks to carry home in his pocket. By and by come smoother reaches, with fringes of green and flowers, pools where fish and other creatures enjoy a happy life, shoals where cattle stand, stretches along meadowland by farm and village; and so the wondrous thing flows on, ministering to man and beast, broadening and deepening till it bears along ships to the sea.

But it is not so with every stream. One need not be a fanatical follower of Ruskin to lament the pollution of the mountain brooks. No doubt, industry has its profits, but look at the losses when foul and nasty tributaries mingle with the waters, making them into a river of death. I have such a stream in mind now; high up near the sources it is already an eye-sore; the stones in its bed and on its banks are slimy and discoloured, no happy border of tender grass is there, no sweet shade of over-hanging bushes, no gleam of fish or flash of swallow's wing; it is a bringer of death to animal and plant, death to beauty, discredit to man—and a warning!

There can be nothing blessed and beautiful in a man's life if the stream of his thought is defiled, whether from without or within; but let it be pure, and there is no scene so stony but may be glorified by its presence in "the midst thereof." An honest mind will admit that just now it is hard to keep the waters pure. The ancient story of Isaac and the wells of Gerar tells that the Philistines had been busy with their bad work, choking them with rubbish. Such Philistines are far from extinct. While some abroad have been literally guilty of the frightful crime of poisoning the wells, others at home have been doing their best to poison the minds of the people, diffusing suspicions, insinuations, false reports, injurious moods. So dexterous are these muddiers of the waters, and, unfortunately, so well placed for their dirty work, that I fear a sample of popular feeling taken at random to-day would show but too surely how successful they have been. Perhaps even some of our very elect have been thus corrupted; let each man examine himself and test the stream of his thinking, reminding himself of the certainty that healthful and fruitful life cannot possibly abound where a man's, or a people's, thinking is base and turbid.

What are we to do in such circumstances? I turn to that story of Isaac and the wells of Gerar, and observe his action. If he and his herdsmen had sat them down and protested, and denounced, and anathematised the Philistines all day and all night it would have been no gain to them and their cattle. If you and I, deploring the bad spirit to be seen here and there, content ourselves with denouncing the poisonous press which is responsible for so much of the mischief to-day, what good will it be? Let us rather imitate the simply wise ancients, and just do what we can to clear away the rubbish that chokes the well-springs, and give the Waters of Life a chance—at least, with ourselves.

May I suggest two or three ways of digging down to the good old sources, the inexhaustible sources of all that is best in our daily moods and thoughts and efforts?

First, let a man clear away the rubbish—a terrible heap in some cases—that has accumulated over his Youthful Nobilities. The casual observer, indeed, might conjecture that the man never had any, so unpromising is the spectacle his life presents now. But he knows, every man knows, that he was not always the worldly, calculating, somewhat mean, and much doubting thing he now is. You also my friend had your days of high hope, of splendid courage, of great admirations, of "natural piety." If what you call "experience" has left you weakly inert where you were prompt and energetic, if it has left you drearily doleful where you were stoutly resolute, if it has left you coldly cynical and mistrustful where you used to be warm-hearted and affectionate—surely the Philistines have been at work in your neighbourhood! If such exchanges are all that "experience" has brought, they may well be esteemed rubbish—and worse.

It is good to let the mind ascend the heights again, to seek the springs of those early loves, pure joys, and innocent ambitions. It is good to listen again for the old voices of beloved teachers and friends, to kindle again the ardours of the hours when youth's companions made chorus of brave battle-cries against the worst this world could bring, to feel once more the hush of solemn moments, alike of joy and grief, when all things took on a light of sacredness and the heart made its vows in secret. Great philosophers tell us that such past things are never wholly past; they tell us that when most forgotten these things are still subconsciously there, affecting things at the surface of action much more than we are aware. Be it so, and yet there is more resource for him who consciously ascends the heights, as I suggest. His memory opens the sluices of many a hidden reservoir from which pure and happy and wholesome feelings flow through his being, cleansing the channels with a welcome freshet as often as he will.

In one way, my friend, I shall readily agree with you that "experience" claims regard; it assuredly is not given you or me for nothing, or for that less than nothing which you and I have been tempted to take in exchange for youth's nobilities. But what is it that true experience most emphasises? Where is it that the child, often the youth, is most lacking? Is it not in regard to what we call Taking Long Views? In those earlier days we found it hard to be patient; every present loss was a calamity, every defeat irretrievable disaster. Hence childish petulances, and passions, and needless fears; but experience has taught us since then that a season is longer than one rainy day, and a year has more possibilities than can be shown in a month. If our life's travelling has been to any purpose, it has shown us that the earth is wide and time is long, and harvests have to be waited for; and if our thinking has not wholly gone astray we have discerned a steady and unswerving current in the ocean of human affairs—one purpose running through the long and varied ages. Here is something, indeed, for which experience may be thanked. Isn't it a pity if a mind that has learned the value, the wisdom, the necessity of Long Views, should let itself be muddled by things which "are but for a moment"?

Thus far, I hope, a useful little of the way is discerned by him who would keep the stream of his mind's life pure and fresh so as to be purifying and freshening as it goes through the world. But, in sober earnest, I believe another help remains which is of far greater and more immediate use. We read that St. Paul used to tell his people what happened at the last meal his Lord had with the disciples, how "in the night in which he was betrayed" (note that), he took bread and gave thanks. It is a good thing to Give Thanks.

"Quite honestly, I don't feel like it." Well, granted you have trouble enough just now; but, quite honestly, if you never had one joy more in this life have you not already had enough to thank God for, a thousand times more than you have ever taken trouble to make any mention of, let alone to be really and happily grateful for? Settle the account for yourself, and as you do so look back at that familiar scene once more. There stands One "giving thanks," upon whose path has fallen the shadow of defeat and death, of betrayal by one of his own, of solitariness of soul as the dread hours are faced; around him are those who have been with him in hopes and triumphs, and in storms and anxieties, and on whom surely the shadow fell also. But the record declares that before they went out into the night they sang "a hymn"—by wisest conjecture of scholars a selection of one or two psalms—not dirges and laments, but "a hymn" flowering thus into praise:—

Who is like unto the Lord our God,
That hath His seat on high,
Yet humbleth Himself to behold
Things in heaven and in earth;
He raiseth up the poor out of the dust,
And setteth the needy with princes!
Praise ye the Lord!

"Shadow of defeat and death" did I say? What gleam is this that breaks through the worst that can befall us men on the earth, and flashes through all years and into all souls with a beauty and splendour of victory beside which all other victories are dimmed? That thing took place long ago, far away; but when I see one who, in spite of all his troubles keeps a thankful mind, I think the world has assurance of a man in him. To look up, to recognise the Giver of so many quite priceless gifts, to be humbly bold enough to believe that the Giver of such good will not disdain the gratitude of one who has found good in his life these many days—this surely will go far to make clean a man's thoughts and to sweep away the noxious stuff that breeds evil moods and shameful fears.

Frank and hearty return to the Youthful Nobilities, resolved to be ever young for them; firm abiding by that wisdom of Long Views taught by experience, and the sweet grace of Thankfulness—here, as it seems to me, is real help toward "keeping the waters pure." It might be worth trying. According to the Great Dreamer, that "River of Water of Life, bright as crystal," which he saw, nourished the roots of a "Tree of Life" abounding in good fruits. By all that one can learn, the best fruits of human life—highest valour, duty, generous sympathy, faithfulness, honour, upright manliness, genuine citizenship—grow best where men are best minded; can we possibly expect individual or national worth elsewhere? If each one of us went to his duty, you to yours, I to mine, with a full stream of noble thought and feeling pulsing through us, unmixed with greed, meanness, and malice, the "fruits" would soon be evident. If it were only so with all men! There is suggestiveness—may there not be prophecy?—in the added words, "The leaves of the Tree were for the healing of the nations."

Is it not worth trying?

W. G. TARRANT.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

FOREWORD.

O THOU the last fulfilment of life,
Death, my death, come and whisper to me.

Day after day have I kept watch for thee; for thee have I borne the joys and pangs of life.

All that I am, that I have, that I hope, and all my love have ever flowed towards thee in depth of secrecy. One final glance from thine eyes and my life will be ever thine own.

The flowers have been woven and the garland is ready for the bridegroom. After the wedding the bride shall leave her home and meet her lord alone in the solitude of night.

* * *

I was not aware of the moment when I first crossed the threshold of this life.

What was the power that made me open out into this vast mystery like a bud in the forest at midnight?

When in the morning I looked upon the light I felt in a moment that I was no stranger in this world, that the inscrutable without name and form had taken me in its arms in the form of my own mother.

Even so, in death the same unknown will appear as ever known to me. And because I love this life, I know I shall love death as well.

The child cries out when from the right breast the mother takes it away, in the very next moment to find in the left one its consolation.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE.

IN one form or another an ineradicable instinct has prompted Christians in all times to free themselves from luxurious and self-indulgent ways of living; to walk as disciples of him who "had not where to lay his head," to lay aside, not only every sin, but every weight, that so they may run the race set before them, not as beating the air, but as those that strive for the victory. It is, indeed, not easy to define the precise kind or amount of luxury which is compatible with Christian simplicity; or rather, it must of necessity vary. But the principle is, I think, clear. In life, in art, whatever does not help, hinders. All that is superfluous to the main object of life must be cleared away, if that object is to be fully attained. In all kinds of effort, whether moral, intellectual, or physical, the essential condition of vigour is a severe pruning away of redundancy. Is it likely that the highest life, the life of the Christian body, can be carried on upon easier terms?

CAROLINE EMELIA STEPHEN.

ALMIGHTY and ever-living God, whose nature it is to purify and to bless, in every age our fathers have experienced thy mercies and borne witness of thy power to save. To us also may the might of thy Spirit be given and the excellence of thy glory be made manifest, that, following in the steps of thy faithful servants, and finding our blessedness in the doing of thy will, we may cast our burden on thee and joyfully minister to the needs of our generation, until the work be finished which thou hast given us to do. AMEN.

[From Two Orders of Public Worship for use in the Chapel of Manchester College, Oxford.]

CALAIS HOSPITALS.

OCT. 1914 TO AUG. 1915.

THE Belgian military hospitals in Calais still, as a year ago, need help. How could it be otherwise? I well remember how last November I first made the acquaintance of the Belgian wounded. They were being brought in by train, by ambulance, by carts, and through the rain and the mud and the cold a resting-place was being found for them. Some preparations had been made, but many a wounded man was carried on a stretcher through the streets, or hobbled about himself, seeking some place where he could pass the night. The first hospital I visited was the English Church in the rue du Temple; here the men were laid on the floor, and French and English residents did their best to relieve their sufferings and supply their wants until medical assistance was available. It was a heart-rending task.

I was in the same Church on Sunday last (29th August), and although it is far from what a hospital should be, at least the men are comfortable. They nearly all have good beds with mattresses, pillows, sheets, and coverlets, and are well clad in pyjamas or bed jackets; to each bed is affixed a bag containing their belongings; the medical service is excellent and the doctor has the instruments and dressings he needs; a devoted "infirmière" as well as orderlies are in constant attendance, and there are a few books and games for those who are nearly ready to be sent on to the base hospitals in the west. The greater part of this equipment has been supplied by the Belgian Hospital Fund.

The same help, in a greater or lesser degree, has been given to all the other hospitals in Calais, save only to those that are under the ægis of the Belgian Red Cross. These are well supplied and appear to lack nothing. But they are only three in number, whereas the total is 23. One other is well supported by the Union des Femmes de France and a private donor, but the other 19 have depended mainly on the Hospital Fund for things which we English consider absolute necessities, but which, being outside the limits of "le stricte nécessaire," it has not been possible for the authority to supply, save in very small degree.

And now another change is being made. The school children of Calais must not be neglected, and the time has come for some of the school buildings to be again devoted to their original purpose. And so four of the hospitals are to move before October 1, and a fifth later on, as soon as more hospital accommodation can be found. This will be done by building a new one, to consist of wooden "baraquas" similar to the Anglo-Belge typhoid hospital (now used for wounded) erected by the British Red Cross near the Institut Sophie Berthelot. It will contain from 300 to 350 beds and be in many respects superior to the existing buildings. One advantage of such constructions is that they are made in parts and can be easily taken to pieces and erected elsewhere. They can thus be used later as lodging places for the refugees while their devastated homes are being rebuilt. May that time soon come!

This new hospital will soon require our help, and I am sure the supporters of the Fund will readily accord it.

In all the hospitals the wear and tear of instruments, dressings, &c., goes on unceasingly, and the need for garments is possibly greater than before. The men now stay in these hospitals but a short time; as soon as ever possible they are sent their two-day journey to Brittany in order that always there may be vacant beds, beds ready for the advance which all so ardently look for, but which will exact so heavy a toll of dead and fill the hospitals again and again with wounded and broken men. And each one we would like to send away, not only with his wounds well dressed (this is assured) but also properly clad, the torn and worn-out clothing replaced by new and comfortable garments. So there is a constant drain on the supply of clothes.

One hospital, too, requires a new operating table and many instruments. These have so far been generously lent by a French surgeon, but he is about to re-open his own clinique and needs his apparatus. We have been asked to supply these needs, and I am sure we shall not fail. A new laboratory, also, is to be opened, in which it is hoped some original research work will take place; valuable instruments are needed. Who will help?

It will thus be seen, as I said at the beginning, that the Calais hospitals still need assistance. The work is most valuable. It has the full approval of the military authorities. Our Belgian allies risked their all in the fight for freedom from a devastating militarism; it is our fight too. Shall we not show our admiration for glorious Belgium by helping her wounded and broken sons?

W. W. KELLAND.

CIVILIAN WORK IN CALAIS.

THE following is from Madame Lageot, wife of Commandant Lageot, who is the principal X-ray operator for the Belgian hospitals. Madame Lageot organised and is responsible for the little hospice which we support in Calais.

The "Refuge" to which reference is made is a large building where 800 refugees can be lodged for a few nights until they are sent on further from the front. Madame Lageot has devoted herself to this work unreservedly for many months.

As regards the school, some friends connected with education have the matter in hand, and hope to get the children in some of our English schools to give the help needed to feed and clothe the little Belgian refugees in the Calais school.

Calais, August 18, 1915.

DEAR MRS. ALLEN—I am again writing to express my gratitude and thankfulness to you for having given me the means of alleviating so much suffering. The little "hospice," thanks to the great generosity of the British people, has already sheltered about one hundred persons.

Since your visit I have completed my arrangements by installing some cradles for the new-born babies. These poor little souls stay all day in my little refuge, and their mothers tend them there under the supervision of my two good Sisters.

Amongst our latest arrivals there were two young women whom I took to the Maternity Home. When they left it they came on to us with their babies for a week, during which time we had the pleasure of seeing the poor little things baptised. Monseigneur le Duc de Vendôme kindly consented to be godfather of one of them. I was the godmother, and so the baby boy was named Emmanuel Hélène. The second, a little girl, had for godparents the Vicomte de Kalan and my sister, and was named Victoire-Marie-Madeleine. It was quite a little function, although very simple; it was really touching, and the two poor young women were very much moved. Monseigneur le Duc de Vendôme, with his usual generosity, put a hundred franc note into the baby's swaddling clothes.

So you see, dear Madame, how, thanks to this little "hospice," we are enabled to complete our work of charity for all these unfortunate refugees who have been driven from their own hearth and home. They have sent many letters of thanks and gratitude, and these have been our greatest strength and support in our difficult work.

At this moment, dear Madame, we are hoping to extend still further the range of our activities by starting a Flemish school for all those children of our Belgian fisherfolk and artisans who are here in Calais. There are a great many of these children, all of them belonging to the working class, and it is very important to make some provision for them, so that they may not fall into the bad habits which they would contract if left to run wild about the streets.

We have found quarters in a lace factory, where we have three large rooms, a class room, refectory (dining-room) and recreation room. The services of two Belgian soldiers, who are schoolmasters, have been placed at my disposal, and I am also going to engage a woman for the house work.

I should like to keep the children all day, from eight in the morning until six in the evening, giving them their mid-day meal, and another one at four o'clock, so as to relieve their poor parents in this time of trial. There is an urgent need for this work, as there was for our former work, and so I beg you, dear Madame, to mention it to your numerous friends, in the hope that your generosity may extend to a monthly grant for helping me in this new undertaking.

I hope to report to you again before long, dear Madame, as to how things are going on here. In the meantime, I am, with thanks and gratitude,

Yours most sincerely,

HÉLÈNE LAGEOT.

RUSSIA AND DEMOCRACY.

EVERY one who wishes to understand what is happening in Europe to-day should read Mr. de Wesselitsky's little book of ninety-two pages on 'Russia and Democracy.' It is frankly a presentation of one side of the case. The brief but fascinating history of Russia from A.D. 862 to the present moment deliberately selects those episodes and features of Russian life and politics which show Germany and German influence as the evil genius of Russian history. As we read we sometimes seem to be required to believe that the natural Slav has no faults of his own, and that all the black chapters in Russian foreign and domestic policy are to be accredited to the poisonous influence of the ever-present Teuton. But this appearance is only to be attributed to the eager desire of the author to present a case of which it has never been possible to speak openly to Englishmen before.

The jealousy with which Germany watched any signs of an approaching improvement in the sentiments of Russians and Englishmen is witnessed in the following passage: "In 1910, when a lecture on 'Anglo-Russian Relations' was to be delivered at the Political Club in St. Petersburg, though it had no reference to Germany, the German Ambassador tried to have it forbidden, and not attaining that object, warned the Russian Foreign Minister and his Under-Secretary against their attending that lecture. Both statesmen, who intended to be present, found it more prudent to keep away" (p. 66). A still more sinister fact is revealed on the following page. Propaganda among the Russian Conservatives, enforcing the "necessity to uphold the traditional Russo-German friendship, in order to save the monarchy," was pushed forward in conjunction with secret plots instigating the revolutionaries to insurrection. The evidence of this latter is said to have been discovered in the German Embassy after the declaration of war.

It is, of course, impossible for most of us to judge the rights and wrongs of a case, the evidence for which belongs to several centuries, and must still be largely in the secret possession of a few officials. But it is right that we should, at all events, listen very seriously to a point of view which is almost entirely new to English readers. Moreover, with all his indignation against the "German canker," Mr. de Wesselitsky is not to be regarded as an irrational Teutophobe. He refers more than once to the many loyal Teutons fighting in the Russian armies (pp. 58 and 65), and clearly shows that it is fundamentally a strife of cultures, and not of races, which is now being fought out on the plains of Poland.

And here it is more possible for the layman to form an opinion. In my recent visit to Russia, where I had the privilege of spending the latter part of June and most of July, and of seeing many public and private persons, I was continually finding myself surprised and even startled to discover the likeness of the Russian people to the English, and especially to our North countrymen. The people one meets in the streets of Petrograd and Moscow, and the peasants of the Upper Volga, are more profoundly like ourselves than the French, or even the Dutch, as I saw these peoples last winter. Indeed, with the possible exception of Norway, I have been in no country where one is so conscious of a mysterious sense of kinship and familiarity. In America one perhaps takes the likenesses for granted and is struck by the differences, but in some ways Petrograd is much more like home to an Englishman than New York. In this connection we may refer to a revealing passage in Mr. de Wesselitsky's book describing the error of Nicholas I. (1825-1855): "He considered his chief task was to give Russia the solid Prussian organisation, with Prussian rigid discipline and systematic order. Apparently not knowing or understanding enough of his own people, he overlooked the discrepancy between the free and easy-going Russian national disposition and the Prusso-German methods which, excellent in their own place, were on the Russian soil quickly degenerating into soulless formalism" (p. 27). This is the core of the matter. Russia through her geographical position has been slower in her development than any of the great Western Powers of the Atlantic seaboard. Yet it has been her inevitable misfortune to come under the tutelage of the one race which was intrinsically incapable of understanding her true genius. Could her various efforts to assimilate French culture have succeeded, she might have been able to hold Germanism at bay. But a French Russia is as unthinkable as a French England, and, deeply as we are all indebted to France, her cultural ascendancy will never be one of domination. In many respects it is to England more than to any country that Russia will now look for fellowship and guidance. A land such as ours, that has been able to reach so great a height of advanced civilisation without ever losing its boyishness and power of adaptation to every crisis as it arises, is the land that Russia can best understand and can learn most from. And yet Russia is not going to be Anglicised as a result of this struggle, but Russianised. "We are still living in Russlandia," said a friend recently to our author; "Rossia (Russia) is yet to be created" (p. 79). And it will not be many generations or even decades after that creation before it is England and France who go to learn of Russia. Already she has shown us a lead in the matter of temperance reform which it will tax our highest powers to emulate.

In conclusion, I would invite the reader to judge the book in this way. Let us for the moment waive the question of responsibility, and express no opinion as to the origin (Teuton, Slav, or Tartar) of the sins and sorrows of Russia in the past. Let us simply ask whether the canker that Mr. de Wesselitsky discovers is the real canker, whatever its cause. Are the evils he attributes to Germanism the things we, too, have abhorred and lamented in our great neighbour? If so, it is surely a sign of greatest hope that a Russian patriot, an unqualified defender of the autocracy and of the policy of the present Czar, should so ruthlessly expose them one after another, and should attribute them (rightly or wrongly) to the enemy which the whole nation from top to bottom is now resolutely set against. If all the evils of the country are once successfully labelled "German," it will put a tremendous engine into the hands of those who are determined to eradicate them.

Nor need we fear that the Teuton and Slav must remain irreconcilable for all time—a permanent source of danger to the world's peace. Germany's fault has been that she has been incapable of a genuine respect for the Slav. The defects of character which offend her are indeed real defects, but it is part of Germany's psychological ineptitude to be unable to appreciate the noble and beautiful characteristics with which these defects are associated, and which will ultimately make the Russian the very type of the white races of the earth. If this war results in no other good thing than the awakening of the world to a profound love and respect for the fundamental Slav, its blood and tears will not have been in vain.

JOSEPH H. WICKSTEED.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE 'PARADISO.'

THE PARADISE OF DANTE ALIGHIERI: AN EXPERIMENT IN LITERAL VERSE TRANSLATION. By Charles Lancelot Shadwell. With an Introduction by J. W. Mackail. London: Macmillan & Co., 1915.

It is now more than twenty years since Dr. Shadwell published the first instalment of his translation of the 'Purgatorio' under the auspices of Walter Pater, in the metre of Andrew Marvell's Horatian 'Ode to Cromwell.' He characterises his own work as "an experiment in literal verse translation." Indeed, every attempt to reproduce the 'Divina Commedia' in English poetry has been no more than "an experiment," and we take it that no one would claim for any such translation more than a very partial and limited success. Something more may, perhaps, be asserted of the now standard versions by Cary and Longfellow; but this is mainly due to accidental circumstances, not to any superiority which they possess over their successors.

The terza rima of the Sacred Poem was no doubt essentially a development of the early Italian serventese, but in Dante's hands it became so completely transfigured that he might well have applied to it the phrase he places on the lips of Adam to indicate the language of the Garden of Eden: "l'idioma ch'usai e ch'io fei." Its closely interlinked stanzas, with their inimitable cadences of polysyllabic rhymes, present peculiar difficulties for English prosody. Two fragments by Chaucer are our initial essays in this measure; several Tudor and Elizabethan poets followed suit in short pieces, and Milton in one of his paraphrases of the Psalms. Shelley's 'Prince Athanase' (1817) is the earliest attempt at a long English poem in terza rima. Between it and the poetic splendours of the 'Triumph of Life' (1822) came Byron's 'Prophecy of Dante' (1819). The latter poet's description of his own attempt—"Harsh Runic copy of the South's sublime"—may be applied in general to the renderings of the 'Divina Commedia' in the original metre, from the three cantos of the 'Inferno' published by William Hayley in 1782 onwards. This is not to deny the very noteworthy achievement of Mr. Haselfoot, or the substantial merits of the more recent versions of Mr. Edward Wilberforce and Dr. Wheeler.

It may then be that the translator is wise who sets out to transfer what he can of Dante's poem into a more thoroughly English medium. Cary chose Miltonic blank verse; Parsons a verse of five feet with alternate rhymes. Mr. George Musgrave, with singular success, has turned the 'Inferno' into an English poem in Spenserian stanzas which at times have a Shelleyan intonation recalling the 'Revolt of Islam.' We should place Dr. Shadwell in this class of translators, and assign him an honourable position therein; it is difficult to follow Prof. Mackail in claiming that the English quatrain adopted is "a near equivalent in its total effect to Dante's terzina," and gives "a striking approximation to the colour and movement of the original." It is true that the terzina is the metrical unit in the one case, the quatrain in the other; but there the resemblance ceases. The system of terzine of hendecasyllabic lines with alternate rhymes, by which stanza is closely linked to stanza until the close of the canto, has a totally different effect from that of this series of metrically independent quatrains of shorter verses and rhyming couplets. Dante himself has told us his view of the carmen endecasillabum, in the 'De Vulgari Eloquentia'; the change in the length of the line (the heroic verse of Italian poetry) is itself a complete modification of the intonation of the 'Divina Commedia.'

Let us take for example the passage (xxxiii. 127-132) where Dante describes how, in the intelligible light of the Godhead, the mystery of the union of the Divine with the Human dawns upon his vision:—

Quella circolazione, che sì concetta
Pareva in te come lume riflesso,
Dagli occhi miei alquanto circospetta,
Dentro da sè del suo colore stesso
Mi parve pinta della nostra effige,
Per che il mio viso in lei tutto era messo.

This is rendered by Dr. Shadwell:—

That Ring by Thee conceived and made,
As in reflected light displayed,
At first my eyes had won,
Thyself to look upon:
But soon within Itself It grew,
And to our image changed Its hue;
Wherefore with fixed intent
My gaze thereon was bent.

Apart from the question of the metre, this illustrates a serious defect which is occasionally observable in Dr. Shadwell's version; it does not always reproduce with sufficient exactness the theological thought and phraseology of the original. The present instance is particularly unfortunate, as, for the sake of a rhyme, it represents Dante falling into what he would have regarded as open heresy. The Second Person of the Trinity is not "conceived and made"; the poet still accepted the Nicaean symbol: "Genitum, non factum."

The above, perhaps, is hardly a fair sample of the translator's quality. We will quote the episode, both happily and faithfully rendered, of the appearance of the mysterious third garland of spirits in the Heaven of the Sun (xiv. 67-78):—

And lo! all round with equal flame
Beyond the first another came,
As when the horizon's ray
Brightens before the day.
And as at rise of early eve,
New lights in th' Heavens we perceive,
And now the stars are plain,
And now are lost again:
Even so methought upon my sight
New substances began to light,
Forming a ring around,
Those other twain to bound.
How suddenly upon me grew
The Holy Spirit's radiance true,
And on my eyes so wrought,
That they endured it not.

There are many other passages equally satisfactory. Those who have most closely studied the 'Paradiso' will realise the magnitude of the translator's task, and recognise the very appreciable success that the Provost of Oriel has attained in an undertaking of exceptional difficulty, which has been unmistakably a labour of love.

We will conclude with a word on the mystical psychology involved in the famous line near the close of the poem (xxxiii. 142): "All' alta fantasia qui mancò possa"; "To the high phantasy here power failed." Dr. Shadwell sums up its general meaning by rendering: "Here failed the vision." Fantasia is clearly to be understood as the imaginative faculty, or phantasy, for which Dante elsewhere ('Purg.' xvii. 13) uses imaginativa as a synonym. It will, of course, be remembered that scholastic philosophy normally regards imagination as a sensuous faculty, an internal sense having its objects offered to it by the senses—the representations thus formed being called phantasms. It is thus, in 'Par.' x. 46, that Dante speaks of our imaginations, "le fantasie nostre," being too lowly for him to express what he sees in the Sphere of the Sun, "for never was there eye that could go beyond the sun." But there is a higher kind of imagination, the imagination of the mystic, in which phantasms are formed which are not derived from the senses. Thus Dante himself ('Purg.' xvii. 13-18): "O imagination, that dost snatch us at times so outside ourselves, that man perceives it not though a thousand trumpets are sounding round him—who moves thee, if sense offers thee nought? A light that is formed in heaven moves thee, of itself, or by Will that guides it down." As Aquinas puts it: "The natural light of understanding is strengthened by the infusion of light freely given; and sometimes, too, phantasms are formed in the imagination of man by divine aid which express divine things better than do those which we receive naturally from the senses, as appears in prophetic visions" ('Summa Theologica,' I., q. 12, a. 13). And this is surely the meaning of fantasia in the line we are considering; it does not imply that the 'Paradiso' is a "work of imagination," but rather a "prophetic vision" as understood by the Angelical Doctor.

EDMUND G. GARDNER.

IDEALISM AND RELIGION.

COMMUNION OF MAN WITH GOD. By R. Nicol Cross, M.A. London: the Lindsey Press. 2s. net.

NOT only the Bibliography, at the end of this handbook to religion which Mr. Cross has given us, but every page of the book, bears witness to wide reading and an alert outlook over the whole subject. Every age will have its own favourite method of recommending religion, and if a group of friends meeting for study were to take this book for their basis (as they might do with profit) they would find for themselves the constant closeness of touch which is maintained with modern interests and leanings. Exactly how far the idealist argument here employed to prove the spiritual nature of Reality will take us, is a matter that may profitably engage a reader's attention. To say that an apple is red to me only because I can perceive colour; and that similarly the universe only exists for a conscious subject; and that the universe existed before I came to be; and that, therefore, the universe is nothing other than the experience of an Infinite and Absolute Spirit—this may be a short and easy method from which our author "sees no escape," but many minds are not convinced by it. At the utmost it can only show that the universe, in all its extension and duration, as I at this moment think of it, is relative to my thought of it. But it must be allowed that the argument has often an awakening and stimulating character for a mind that has been surprised by it, as Mr. Cross manifestly has been, for he speaks of it as giving the impression that "a new world swims into his ken": and it has undoubtedly in recent days acted for many people as the first awakener from the slumbers of a dogmatic materialism. Much the same has to be said of the idea of the Unity or Oneness of the universe as a means of arriving at the Absolute Spirit. That the physical world is in some sense One, is too obvious to be doubted, but it is often a painful sense, and not one that necessarily leads to Theism. As to the other sense of Oneness, of which Mr. Cross would assure us, the Oneness of the world with our own highest moral and spiritual ideals, something more than the idealist argument is required "to show us that the world is wholly fair." Indeed, the monistic and unifying tendencies of our time have a way of taking a bitter revenge when they are pressed too far. Prof. William James began as a Unitarian and ended as a protagonist of Pluralism. And it is safe to predict that as long as there are Unitarians, so long will there be Trinitarians (and even Poly-unitarians), and vice versa. Unity may be a religious idea if you make it so (e.g., love is unity), but it need not be so. Religion is a far deeper and more complex thing than any monism.

Another most fascinating idea which we meet in these pages is the Immanence of God—an all-too-fascinating conception for most discussions of religion. Mr. Cross evidently means, by the immanence of God in nature, rather the revelation of God through nature to us. Thus he very truly remarks: "Natural things can only reveal Deity and share his life to the limits of their own nature." There are, therefore, degrees in this revelation, and this seems to be what Mr. Cross means when he says there are "degrees of immanence." But immanence, in any proper sense of the word, is really another matter. It is what Tennyson finds in his "Flower in the crannied wall," what Emerson finds in "every moss and cobweb." It is difficult to see how the idea has any place except as standing in contrast to that of transcendence—and we should not readily think of degrees in God's infinite transcendence of his creatures. There are not many more serious errors in theology than that of identifying God's self-revelation with His immanence—notably, the failure of the recent "new theology" was due to this. It is when Mr. Cross comes, at the end, to speak of the vital things of personal religious experience, that he helps us most. What he says about conversion strikes a note that is too rarely heard. May we hope that some words in the preface indicate that he contemplates a book on this more valuable, and more neglected, side of religious discussion? W. WHITAKER.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

CAMBRIDGE PRESS:—Miscellanea Evangelica (II): Christ's Miracle of Feeding: Edwin A. Abbott. 3s. net.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co.:—War and Christianity. Vladimir Solovyov. 4s. 6d. net. Ralph Waldo Emerson: O. W. Firkins. 7s. 6d. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Kaiser; his Personality and Career: Joseph McCabe. 5s. net.

AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION:—The Little Child at the Breakfast Table. 50 c.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Cornhill.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

34TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	5,919	13	7
Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Hall (fourth donation) ..	1	0	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per Rev. E. H. Pickering (fourth donation) ..	2	7	3
Miss C. Harrold (third donation) ..	10	0	0
Mr. J. E. Mace (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Roscoe (fifth donation) ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Helsby (third donation) ..	0	2	6
Proceeds of Children's Play at Adelaide, South Australia, per Mrs. J. Crompton ..	5	15	0
The Rev. and Mrs. H. Dawtrey ..	0	10	0
Mrs. Sim Harris (second donation) ..	2	10	0
Mr. George Banks (eighth donation) ..	1	0	0

	£	s.	d.
L.C.C. Children's Care Committee Organisers, per Miss H. G. Nussey (for July and August) ..	2	2	8
Mr. W. A. T. Price ..	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Lupton (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison (fifth donation) ..	0	10	0
Dr. Blake Odgers (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Dr. and Mrs. Piggott ..	2	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Healey ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Walter Duckworth ..	5	0	0
Mr. Chas. W. Chitty (sixth donation) ..	20	0	0
Miss Emmeline Rawson (fourth donation) ..	2	2	0
Miss Roscoe (second donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss F. Jones (second donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss L. Jones (second donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss J. F. Cox (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Aspland (third donation) ..	5	5	0
Miss Handley ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (sixth monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Compayne Gardens Belgian Hostel Fund, per Mrs. Jolowicz (four weeks' subscription) ..	7	0	0
Miss Rose Evers (second donation) ..	3	0	0
Miss Mary Dendy (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. H. D. Roberts (fourth donation) ..	1	0	0
Miss Gairdner (third donation) ..	2	0	0
Mrs. A. J. Gimson (second donation) ..	2	0	0
Miss K. A. Freeston ..	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Maurice (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss A. Fricker (second donation) ..	2	15	0
Mr. W. A. Jolly ..	2	2	0
Mrs. E. W. Shannon (second donation) ..	3	0	0
Mrs. Cecil Crosskey ..	1	0	0
Miss Mary D. Shannon (fifth donation) ..	2	0	0
Miss E. W. Shannon (third donation) ..	2	0	0
Miss Phipson (second donation) ..	0	10	0
"W. B. B." Liverpool (fourth donation) ..	20	0	0
Mrs. Grundy, Sen. (third donation) ..	0	10	0
Mr. Geo. H. Cox (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss Mary E. Swaine (eighth donation) ..	5	0	0
"S. H. B." (second donation) ..	0	5	0
Miss Alison Hall (third donation) ..	0	5	0
Mrs. Leese (third donation) ..	1	0	0
"D. C." ..	0	10	0
Miss Florence Blake (fifth donation) ..	2	0	0
Mrs. M. Crosskey ..	0	10	6
Mrs. J. C. Odgers (second donation) ..	2	2	0
Mr. R. G. Lawson (second donation) ..	1	1	0
Mrs. Thorneley (second donation) ..	20	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. and Miss Carter (second donation)	1	5	0
Miss F. A. Short (eighth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Susan H. Holland	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. Nanson (third donation)	10	0	0
Miss Margaret A. Nanson	1	0	0
Miss Mabel Thomas (second donation)	1	1	0
"W. M. H."	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Tait	2	0	0
The Misses Fullagar (third donation)	3	0	0
Mrs. Russell Martineau (fourth donation)	20	0	0
Miss Gairdner	0	10	0
"H." (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Mr. C. H. Boyle	35	0	0
Mr. J. Boyle	35	0	0
Mr. P. Boyle	35	0	0
Mrs. B. Dowson (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. C. E. B. Russell (second donation)	1	1	0
Miss Isabel M. Hervey (fifth donation)	3	0	0
Mrs. Hanna	1	0	0
Miss B. Woolfenden	0	2	6
Mr. and Mrs. Green (second donation)	1	0	0
The Rev. C. J. Street	1	1	0
The Misses Wetherman	1	1	0
"L. O. R. J."	0	10	0
Miss Potter	1	1	0
Miss Cecilia Jevons (second donation)	2	0	0
"X." (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Frederick Schwann (third donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Notcutt	3	3	0
Miss E. E. Bullock (third donation)	0	10	0
Mr. Walter Coventry	0	10	0
"M. A. P.", Bournemouth (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Miss E. M. Greg	5	0	0
Mr. Herbert Marnham	5	0	0
Mr. J. T. Perry (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Howard Martineau (second donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. E. T. Crook (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Smithells (third donation)	2	2	0
Mr. Frank B. Dunkerley	10	10	0
M. A. B. (third donation)	25	0	0
Sir Henry Roscoe	5	0	0
"J." Leicester (second donation)	1	0	0
Sale Unitarian Church Ladies' Society, per Mrs. Megson	2	0	0
Mr. Barry Castle (second donation)	0	5	0
Mr. Rycroft (second donation)	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Tingley (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Jackson and Miss Erskine Jackson	2	0	0
	£6,404	13	0

Parcels have been received from:—

Mrs. Titterton; The Misses Crafer; The Misses J. and C. Badland; Miss F. A. Short; Miss A. E. Shaen; Mr. G. S. Woolley; Mrs. Addison Green; Mrs. Piggott; Miss E. Higginson; Mr. A. D. Tyssen; Mrs. Booth; Mrs. Wm. Healey; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Mrs.

Droop; Mrs. H. Whittier; The Misses Bennett; Mrs. W. H. Evans; The Misses Murray; Mrs. Grosvenor Talbot; The Misses Badland; Miss E. J. Bennett; Mrs. Thomas; Ullet Road Church Sewing Circle, Liverpool (per Mrs. Odgers); The Misses Wetherman; Miss Leigh; Mrs. James Milne; Mrs. Russell Martineau; Mrs. Notcutt; Mrs. Prewett; Mr. W. A. Jolly; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee; Miss Handley; Mrs. M. L. Helsby; Old Meeting Church Sewing Circle, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss Norah Furber; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Miss Rawson; Association of Men of Kent and Kentish Men (per Mr. C. W. Chitty); Miss Beard; Mrs. Green; Mrs. Arthur J. Gimson; Mrs. C. Taylor; Miss Florence Blake and maids; Miss Swaine; Miss H. Mottram.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

For the Hospitals:—

Money to buy hospital requisites of all kinds.
Shirts.
Socks.
Vests | woven or of a natural coloured
Pants | flannel.
Cardigans.
Shoes with leather soles.
Towels.
Handkerchiefs.
Mufflers.
Playing cards.

For Refugees (civilians):—

Money to support the hospice for sick and aged.
Clothes for men, women, children, and babies' layettes.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Great Hucklow.—The marriage of the Rev. L. Redfern, M.A. B.D., minister of the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, and Miss Rhodes, M.A., was quietly celebrated in the Old Chapel, Great Hucklow, on September 2nd. The Rev. R. S. Redfern, father of the bridegroom, who should have taken the chief part in the ceremony, was unfortunately prevented by sudden illness, and in his absence the Rev. Charles Peach officiated. Mr. Redfern was born in Great Hucklow where his father commenced his ministry. He has kept in close touch with the village ever since, and there was consequently considerable kindly interest shown in the event. Many congratulatory messages were received including an illuminated address and cheque from the Octagon Chapel congregation, Norwich.

Liscard.—The Memorial Church has lost a valued member in Mr. John Fleetwood, who died on August 7, aged 64. Mr. Fleetwood had served on the Church Committee for many years, and was President for seven years. He was held in deep respect for his sincerity, loyalty in friendship, deep religious spirit, and the interest which he took in the church and all its institutions. Before the interment in Rake Lane Cemetery a service was held in the church conducted by the minister, the Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

London: Essex Church.—A Memorial Service was held last Sunday night for Private James R. Ridley, 10th Middlesex Regiment, who was killed at Gallipoli on August 18th three days after his arrival there. He was a Scholar in the Sunday School for nine years, and a singer in the church choir for six years. He was only 18 years of age.

London, Islington.—Dr. and Mrs. Tudor Jones, who have just left Islington, were the recipients of a number of presents at a reception given by Mrs. Charles Phillips, Aberdeen Park, N. Mrs. Titford, one of the oldest members of Unity Church, Islington, on behalf of members of the church and friends presented Dr. and Mrs. Jones with a cheque for £85, and other gifts, while Mrs. Tudor Jones also received a cheque from a personal friend. Mrs. Titford referred in appreciative terms to Dr. Jones' valuable services at Unity Church, his untiring help, and his constant care of the sick and distressed. Mention was made of his taking over the Pioneer Preachers at the invitation of the Rev. R. J. Campbell, and bringing them into the Unitarian ministry, and also of his literary work and interdenominational activities, with especial reference to his courses of lectures at Dr. Clifford's Church, the Ethical Church, Kensington, King's College (for the West London Clergy), and the City Temple. People had been drawn to the church from all parts of the Colonies and America, besides prominent men and women in London. Reference was also made to Dr. and Mrs. Jones' energetic work in collecting a large sum to constitute the Jubilee Fund, 1912, for Unity Church, thus making possible the renovation of the building and the installation of the electric light. Mrs. Titford said it was with the greatest regret they were saying good-bye to them, and they all wished them a continuation of the prosperity which had attended their efforts during nearly seventeen years in the Unitarian body. Dr. Jones, in responding on behalf of Mrs. Jones and himself, said that his object during his ministry in the North of London had been to appeal to people who had either lost or not found a religious anchorage. He was pleased with the response that had attended these efforts. Many heartfelt letters from young men in the army (some received direct from the trenches) had deeply touched him, and given them both hope and courage to continue in the service of liberal Christianity.

Manchester, Oldham Road.—On Saturday, September 4, the Rev. Herbert Barnes, who has just completed his studies at the Home Missionary College, was welcomed by the congregation of Oldham Road Church, of which he has become the minister. For twelve months past the church had been served by a student ministry in which Mr. Barnes had taken a prominent part, and he has now accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit. The Rev. J. J. Wright conducted the service, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., of Todmorden, who pointed out the part our churches could take, and the message they could deliver in helping to establish the New Heavens and the New Earth which is yet the dream of every earnest Christian and the need of the world. Dr. Mellone, Principal of the Home Missionary College, delivered the charge to the congregation, and the Rev. Thomas Munn, of Padiham, gave the charge to the minister. The Rev. H. Barnes in responding said he took up the work feeling that he had been called to it by God, and that he must reveal the truth as he knew it in this spirit.

Manchester, Pendleton.—On Sunday evening, September 5, at the Unitarian Church, special mention was made of the members of the church who have joined the army, and their life and work. There was a good congregation including the parents and relatives of the young men at the front or in camp. National hymns were sung, and the solo, 'Arm, Arm ye Brave,' was rendered by Mr. Ernest Robertson. The minister, the Rev. Arnold H. Lewis, gave an appropriate address, and prior to the concluding prayer the roll of honour was called over.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE TOMB OF FRA ANGELICO.

The uncertainty which has long existed as to the burial place of Fra Angelico is at an end. All doubts have been solved, we learn from the Manchester Guardian, by the researches of Signor Rosadi, Under Secretary of State in the Ministry of Public Instruction, and of his friend the Dominican Father Ludovico Ferretti. According to the chronicles of the Church of Sta. Maria sopra Minerva in Rome, the body of the great artist had been placed in a marble sepulchre in the Chapel of St. Thomas, close by the Christ of Michael Angelo. In the jubilee year 1600, however, this chapel was demolished to create a fresh exit from the church. Excavations have recently been undertaken, and now the actual tomb of Fra Angelico has been found and identified. An official report has been published and signed, among others, by a Dominican friar from the convent of San Dominico at Fiesole, where for so many years the famous master lived and worked.

THE SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY.

The Shakespeare Tercentenary Association, which had arranged to celebrate the tercentenary next April in Manchester on a somewhat elaborate scale, has been obliged to curtail its programme owing to the war. A considerable part of the original scheme will, nevertheless, be carried out if circumstances are favourable, and in order to create a suitable atmosphere beforehand a series of lectures will be delivered in Manchester during the coming winter. If it is possible to obtain the loan of what is regarded by many as the finest Shakespeare collection in the world, owned by an American, an exhibition will be held later on, and arrangements have already been made for a series of dramatic performances during the period of the celebration. A model of the Globe theatre exactly as it was in Shakespeare's day is to be erected in Whitworth Park, surrounded by a garden containing specimens of all the flowers mentioned in the plays. It will please romantic minds to know that some of the roots to be planted therein are actually to be taken from the garden of Shakespeare's house at Stratford-on-Avon.

EDUCATION AND THE STATE.

The Teacher's World is devoting considerable attention to the peril of blind economy in regard to education which may be one of the most serious results of the war. A distinguished Australian said the other day, "we know that our schools and colleges are our most remunerative investment. I believe that the glorious display of bravery on the part of the Australian contingents at the Dardanelles is due in the main to the efficiency of the schools. Let any man dare to talk to us about impoverishing our system of education!" Professor Sadler, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Leeds, put the matter even more strongly when, in a recent article, he said that education had saved our nation from disaster. "The secret of the greatness of British education," he continued, "lies in its conviction that the final test of school and college training is trustworthiness of character. Be its shortcomings what they may, it has in this respect been true to its instinct and successful in its work," but "the education which makes the best sort of Englishman and Englishwoman can never be a cheap education. At this moment it is more necessary than ever to maintain and increase its thoroughness and many-sided efficiency. And after the war it will be the sheet-anchor of the national fortunes. Education, wisely planned, administered with sympathy and imagination, and generously aided from public and private funds, will, in the approaching test of social reconstruction—our next campaign—rebuild our resources and save the State."

THE FUNERAL OF MRS. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

It is eighteen months since Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson died at Santa-Barbara, California, but it was not until June 22 of this year that her ashes were finally placed in the tomb of her husband at Samoa. Mr. Clement Shorter has given some extracts in the Sphere from a letter describing the funeral received from Mr. Westbrook, of Apia, Samoa. The ascent to the top of the mountain, which is 1,400 feet above sea level, is very steep, but the track was always kept clear, it appears, by Dr. Schultz, the late Governor, who lived at Vailima, so that the way might be as easy as possible for those going thither on pilgrimage. A large number of native high chiefs and their wives had assembled on this occasion to do honour to the family of their beloved story-writer, among them being Tuatagaloa and Tofaeono, who had assisted in carrying up the remains of Robert Louis Stevenson in 1894: Mr. Field, the husband of Mrs. Stevenson's daughter, carried the ashes in an urn enveloped in fine mats. Mrs. Field and Vaaiga (the wife of Tamasese) came next, each carrying a fine mat, the same that had been presented to the family at the time of Stevenson's death. The Samoan chiefs, officers in uniform, and ladies in white dresses, their arms full of flowers and wreaths, followed, making a most picturesque procession. A feature of the ceremony was the presence of the new Governor of Samoa, Colonel Logan, who alluded in his address to the fact that the British flag is once more flying over "Tusitala's" old home. It will be remembered that Samoa was for a time a German colony, and that it was taken possession of recently by the Australians.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

TENTERDEN.—FURNISHED HOUSE To Let—Autumn and Winter Months. 2 Reception, 3 Bedrooms, usual offices, hot and cold water, geyser, radiators. Dogs, children, and smokers objected to.—Address B. INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two Sitting-rooms) TO BE LET. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, -50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

HUCKABACK TOWELLING of genuine Irish linen in bundles of remnants, sufficient to make six full-size Bedroom Towels. Price 4s. 6d. Postage 6d. extra. Catalogue free.—Write HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT, any condition.—Up to £2 per set on Vulcanite, £3 on Silver, £6 on Gold, £12 on Platinum. Strictly genuine. Immediate cash or offers. If not accepted goods returned post free.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105, Market Street, Manchester. The oldest and most reliable advertisers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, September 11, 1915.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3820.
NEW SERIES, No. 923.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God. New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges,
2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.

Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

September

19. Rev. LAWRENCE PEARSALL JACKS, M.A.,
LL.D. (of Manchester College, Oxford).
26. Rev. LAWRENCE PEARSALL JACKS, M.A.,
LL.D. (of Manchester College, Oxford).

October

3. Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A. (of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester).
10. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).
The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

DEPTFORD GENERAL BAPTIST (UNITARIAN) CHAPEL.

APPEAL.

We appeal on behalf of the Trustees and Congregation for donations to a fund being raised to save this Chapel from destruction.
The building was founded in 1674, and is of great historic interest. Of recent years there has been a marked revival in the work under the leadership of Mr. E. A. Carlier. Some idea of this may be gathered from the following list of activities which are at present being carried on under considerable difficulties:—

Sunday Services: evening attendances, 60 to 80.

Sunday School: 150 children and 14 teachers.
Monday: Mothers' Meeting and Winter Concerts.

Tuesday: Band of Hope and Boy Scouts.

Wednesday: Girls' Sewing Class and Women's League.

Thursday: Women's Devotional Hour; Girls'
Club; Choir Practice.

Friday: Boys' and Young Men's Clubs.

While those whom the Chapel serves are of the poorest class they are able, with the aid of a small endowment, to pay their way; but this is largely because Mr. Carlier receives no salary from the Congregation.

A few weeks ago the Trustees were served with a notice from the London County Council condemning the building as structurally unsafe, and requiring immediate and extensive repairs and rebuilding as an alternative to its being entirely demolished. We feel that the loss of this Chapel would be a disaster which the Unitarian public will desire to avert.

To meet the cost of absolutely necessary alterations a sum of £700 is required. The General Baptist Assembly and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association have each made a grant of £50. The Congregation, poor as they are, will raise £50. The London District
Unitarian Society warmly supports the appeal.
Nothing but the most urgent need could warrant its being made at the present juncture. That need exists, and we earnestly hope that you will see your way to assist in preserving this ancient Chapel for present-day services and work.

Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer to the Deptford Fund, Mr. F. C. Creak, Fernwood, North Hill,
Highgate, N., or by the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, 4, Ella Road, Crouch Hill, N. Mr. Pearson has had special opportunities of seeing the good work carried on by Mr. Carlier, and of assisting him in various ways.

C. HERBERT-SMITH President of the London
District Unitarian Society.

F. C. CREAK, Treasurer, The Deptford Chapel
Repair Fund.

July 31, 1915.

REPAIRS FUND.

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	...	408	10 0
Mrs. Mary L. Wood	...	0	10 0
Miss Tribe	...	0	10 0
Mrs. David Martineau	...	5	5 0
Mr. Edward Chitty, J.P.	...	5	0 0
Mr. J. Bredall	...	0	10 0
Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., D.D.	...	5	0 0
Mr. Alfred Wilson	...	10	0 0
Mr. T. B. Taylor	...	10	0 0
A. L. M.	...	0	10 0
Rev. Baart de la Faille, D.D.	...	1	0 0
Mrs. Bartram	...	1	0 0
Mr. Percival Hart	...	1	0 0
Rev. George Critchley, B.A.	...	0	5 0
Mrs. Storey	...	0	4 0
Mr. Victor Fox	...	0	5 0
Mr. Stanley Mossop	...	0	5 0
Mrs. Debeuham	...	2	0 0
Mrs. S. N. Aspland	...	3	3 0
Mrs. Barber	...	5	0 0

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

MISS ISABEL COLE, L.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE—Theory of Music and Aural
Training. Visiting Music Mistress. Public
School Experience. Registered Examinations.
Receives Private Pupils—Curwen Method.—
9, Holmewood Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

Mrs. LUCAN-DAVIES, M.A.

(Diploma in Education, Liverpool University)

has vacancies for Two Boarders. Thorough
Education. Individual Attention. Healthy
Situation. Fees Moderate.—"Parkhurst," Fields
Road, Newport, Mon.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses.
Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children
in residence.—For particulars apply to HON.
SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIA-
TION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street,
Liverpool.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, September 19.

LONDON.

Acton, Cressfield Road, 11, Mr. E. B. ATHAWES; 7, Mr. W. R. MARSHALL.
 BERNONDESEY, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. S. D. GREENFIELD.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. W. WAKE; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND. —Harvest Festival.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A., LL.D.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. OTTWEIL BINNS.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

{ DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Mr. H. W. STEPHENSON.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College. —Closed during September.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.

BARNES-HOLLAND.—On the 7th inst., at St. Faith's, Lincoln, Alexander Barnes, I.S.O., of 22, Park Hill, Ealing, to Ella Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Holland of Lincoln.

DEATH.

EACHUS.—On the 12th inst., at the Parsonage, Coseley, the Rev. Henry Eachus, aged 89 years, Minister of the Old Meeting House for 47 years. Funeral at the Old Meeting House, Coseley, on Saturday, the 18th inst., at 3.45.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

USEFUL COMPANION.—To elderly, aged, or partially invalid lady. Housekeeping, needlework, &c. Excellent references. Salary required.—B. E. T., 53, The Cliffe, Lewes.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

The Rev. B. C. Constable has removed to 4, Green Avenue, South Shore, Blackpool.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	455
WAR CHARITIES	457
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	458
CHILDREN AND THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND	458
THE HEAVEN OF BEING YOUNG	459
SMOKE	460

CORRESPONDENCE:—
War Charities	461
The Immanence of God	461
LITERARY NOTES	461
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Mr. Francis Taylor, J.P.	462

Mr. Alfred Henshall	462
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund	462
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	463
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	463

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE should be most ungrateful if we did not send a message of grateful thanks to our readers for their splendid response to our recent appeal for the Belgian Hospitals. We stated our needs quite plainly, and the result is that we have had two of the best weeks since the Fund started. It is a splendid beginning of the autumn campaign. We wish, however, that instead of sending our contributors a few cold words of print we could take them to the office of the Fund at Hampstead, and let them spend an hour over the files of letters of thanks which we have received. Then they would realise what it is that they are doing, and the blessing and glory of it all.

* * *

FOR instance, this week has brought us a fresh letter from the General who was responsible for the pleasant official arrangements of our recent tour among the hospitals. Once again he expresses his thanks in the most cordial terms, and his deep sense of the service which has been rendered by the Fund for the sick and wounded. Here, again, is a letter which has just arrived from the officer in charge of one of the large convalescent depôts which we visited last month.

He speaks with enthusiasm of the improvement which the 300 beds sent by the Fund will effect in his arrangements for the comfort of his men. "Thanks to you," he says, "I shall at last be able to point to a depôt truly worthy of the Belgian army, truly worthy of our soldiers. The name of the Belgian Hospital Fund and that of Madame Rose Allen will be inscribed in the place of honour in the recreation room of the depôt."

* * *

WE were able last week to bring the need of newspapers for the Belgian soldiers in hospital before one of the staff of the Indépendance Belge. The managers have generously promised to send copies of the paper daily to all the hospitals on our list. This will be a great boon, as dullness is one of the chief foes to a good recovery. It will also help to keep the fires of patriotism burning brightly. These men are proud of their country, and they hunger in their exile for every scrap of news. If any of our readers have French papers which they can spare will they communicate with Mrs. Allen on the subject. Mrs. Allen will then furnish an address to which they can be posted regularly. English illustrated papers will also be most welcome, for pictures speak a universal language. They can also be posted direct to the hospitals without passing through Mrs. Allen's hands.

* * *

PARLIAMENT reassembled on Tuesday, and already announcements of far-reaching importance have been made. On Wednesday, in a comprehensive speech packed with facts and figures, the Prime Minister told the House and the country that not far short of 3,000,000 men have offered themselves for service in the Army and Navy. He also stated that the war is costing the country a daily average of three and a half million pounds. The tendency of expenditure is upwards, and this is to be accounted for chiefly by the growth in our advances to our Allies. In asking for a Vote of Credit for £250,000,000 to carry us on to the third week in November, he pointed out that these huge figures throw some light on the contribution, measured in terms of money, which we in this country are making for the prosecution of the war.

* * *

LIKE all recent speakers Mr. Asquith spoke of the war as a war of mechanism, a war of organisation, and a war of endurance; but in view of the spectre of domestic strife which has been conjured up in some quarters he put in the wise caution that material calculations by no means exhaust the field.

The situation [he said], is a testing one. It calls, in my opinion, if we survey the conditions and the opportunities of the past year, both for satisfaction at unforseeable effort and sacrifice and for regret at some mistakes and miscalculations. At this moment, at any rate, it does not call for recrimination which, is of all forms of moral self-indulgence at once the cheapest and the least fruitful. Our business here and now is to deal with the present and to forecast and provide for the future. We have to satisfy so far as we can the legitimate hopes and requirements of our Allies, and what is even more important, we have to discharge the unique burden imposed upon a free people—I would rather say a family of free people—by our own traditions, by our own sense of responsibility, by our own standard of duty and of sacrifice.

* * *

MR. ASQUITH is too big a man to look back upon the past and pretend that he has learned nothing. In the following eloquent words he speaks for the great mass of his fellow-countrymen who have been consistent lovers of peace, slow to believe evil, and now that they have been roused by facts too dark and terrible for any sane mind to deny are implacable in their loyalty to honour and freedom.

We see to-day more clearly even than we did a year ago through the mists of sophistry and mendacity with which Berlin has sought to becloud and befoul the international atmosphere. We realise—when I say we I mean the people of this country and of this Empire, without distinction of party or of place—we realise with ever-growing clearness the sincerity of our own diplomacy, the persistent and even passionate love of peace with which we sought to avert the catastrophe of a world-wide conflict, but the Empire's call to an inevitable duty forced us, in the face of every selfish interest, to vindicate our national honour and to enlist our whole strength in the sacred cause of freedom. It was and it is a worthy issue. We have staked and shall continue to stake upon it everything we have—our wealth, our industry, our intelligence, the lives of our children, the existence of our Empire. I have never doubted for a single instant—which of us has?—either the wisdom of our choice or its ultimate triumph in the stricken field.

LORD KITCHENER'S speech in the House of Lords was a soldier's review of the operations of war over the entire field. In tone it was grave and cautious, but on the whole thoroughly encouraging and optimistic. His review of the Russian situation and of the German victories which may only prove to be "defeats in disguise," will carry weight, and Russia, in particular, will be grateful for his terse description of her army as "a powerful and undefeated unit." But attention will naturally be concentrated upon his tribute to the fine recruiting for the New Armies, and his call for more men.

The response [he said] of the country to calls for recruits to form these armies has been little short of marvellous, but it must be borne in mind that the provision of men to maintain the forces in the field depends in great degree on a large and continuous supply of recruits. The provision to keep up their strength during 1916 has caused us anxious thought, which has been accentuated and rendered more pressing by the recent falling off in the numbers coming forward to enlist, although every effort has been made to obtain our requirements under the present system. I am sure we all fully realise that the strength of the armies we are sending out to fight must be fully maintained to the very end. To fulfil this purpose we shall require a large addition to the numbers of recruits joining, and the problem of how to secure an adequate supply of men, and thus to ensure the field force being kept up to full strength, is engaging our close attention, and will, I hope, very soon receive a practical solution.

WE hope that Lord Kitchener's words will sink deeply into the public mind. To try to press forward our own nostrum and gain for it a fictitious importance is the device of men whose egotism or confidence in their own opinions has blinded them to the imperative demands of patriotism and good sense. The country is willing to accept any burden, however distasteful it may be to its ordinary habits or its political creed, if it is the way of safety in the opinion of men whose business it is to deal with the situation, and who know all the facts. At present we think the indications point to a solution of the difficulty by a far-reaching use of the information obtained by the Registration Act. This, as Lord Kitchener points out, will give us a basis on which to calculate the resources of the country, and to determine the numbers that will be available for the Army after providing for the necessary services of the country as well as those of the munition works.

IN a solution of this kind there would be an element of compromise deeply distasteful to the policy of "thorough"; but it would avoid the disasters of a conscriptionist agitation in the country, and preserve some of the elements of voluntarism and goodwill which have produced such magnificent results in the past. We believe that few men will refuse when they are told the particular way in which it is desirable for them to serve their country, and they will go all the more gladly to the army or the workshop because they feel there is in it an element of choice and of personal acceptance of duty. In any case the statesmen who have to find a solution which, so far as possible, will secure the enthusiastic support of all classes of the community, know that it is far more important to win the adhesion of the Trade Union Congress than to conciliate The Times.

THE revelations of far-reaching and disastrous German intrigues in Russia which have appeared in the press this week will arouse the keenest indignation among her Allies. There seems to be no limit to the depths of infamy to which Germany will stoop in order to compass her ends. The military secret of one cause of the long Russian retreat has been well kept, but silence is no longer necessary. It appears that the munition factory at Ocha near Petrograd, one of the chief arsenals of Russia, was blown up at the end of April, it is suspected, by the treachery of German agents. Many of the trained workmen were killed, and important munition plant was destroyed. Russia was crippled; she had to fight for time while her Allies came to her assistance, and all thought of a great spring offensive on the Western front had to be surrendered. A statement in the current issue of The Great War, which has been passed by the Censor, describes the result as it affects our own military situation in the following words:—"As our two armies were holding only a small section of the line, it was more convenient to the general interest of the Allies that we should, instead of employing our increased forces, postpone the entry into action of our national armies, and bend our chief energies to the task of supplying Russia with the munitions which had suddenly become to her a matter of life or death."

THOUGH the Press comments upon this story are not official, and doubt has been thrown upon them in some quarters, there seems to be no reason to doubt the main fact, and a good deal of fresh light is thus thrown upon our deferred hopes and the feverish activity over munitions. We had not miscalculated in the blundering fashion which some critics made out. We had suddenly to supply an unprecedented demand, and to postpone cherished military plans without a word of public explanation. We can only express our admiration of the tenacity and courage with which the Government turned this difficult corner, and our thankfulness that we were able to send generous help to Russia even at the cost of greater suffering for ourselves. The whole incident is an illuminating comment upon the folly of premature criticism, which forgets that secrecy on the part of strong and determined men has an important part to play in the art of war.

Punch has often produced the best commentary on the mind of the nation at war. It has ministered to cheerfulness and kept us alert to the humours of the situation. But it has excelled itself this week in its Ode 'To a Zeppelin,' by O. S., surely one of the most delicious parodies in the language.

Like a monstrous bird

Overseas thou comest;
Melodies unheard

Through the heavens thou hummest,
And bombing still dost soar, and soaring ever bombest.

And so on through its riot of fun and its peal of defiance to German frightfulness: "Then let me tell thee, London hasn't turned a hair." A people that can make and enjoy things like this amid all the hazards of war has in it unending treasures of vitality. It despises danger and looks the world in the face with laughter and courage. In many a tragic situation the humorist is our best philosopher.

WAR CHARITIES.

WE made some observations last week on the subject of 'War Charities,' and expressed the hope that there will not be any reaction into prudent selfishness where a good case can be made out for generosity. We print to-day a letter from a correspondent, who points out that a refusal to contribute may spring from a conviction that War Charities ought to be unnecessary and therefore should cease to exist. With part of his argument we are in cordial agreement. We pay our taxes in order that the Government may organise and finance the business of the nation for us. All the great enterprises of the State ought to be equipped on a scale which will ensure success. What the fighting forces require in time of war to maintain them in health and efficiency should be provided from the public purse and not by private charity. Accordingly the Government which goes cap in hand to the private citizen for the needs of its soldiers is only proclaiming its own weakness and inefficiency. The force of this argument will be generally admitted. No one expects army rations to be supplemented by private supplies, or appeals for generous donations of batteries and dreadnoughts. Why then, it may be asked with some show of reason, should War Charities exist at all in a well-organised world and the good citizen incur the reproach of selfishness if he does not contribute to them?

To this question commonsense will at once return a threefold answer. In the first place the needs of war may easily outrun the provision made to meet them. We cannot calculate beforehand the exact amount of strain which will be put upon our resources, the wastage in men and material, or foresee the sudden emergencies of suffering and disease, which rend our hearts and call for instant help. Second, it is our good English way to mingle public effort with private beneficence, without trying to fix scientific frontiers for them upon our map of life. It will take a long time to organise this logical inconsistency out of our blood, and if it ever goes it will be at the cost of our self-reliance, our sense of personal responsibility for doing good, and our obstinate preference for the voluntary activities of the Englishman to machine-made virtues of the German pattern. And thirdly, War Charities deal chiefly with the claims of suffering and poverty upon our sympathy, and this is a sphere where nothing can take the place of personal generosity and active personal help. In all ages Christian love has rightly claimed it for its own. The State may build and equip the most splendid military hospitals in the world. It may run them with the highest medical skill and perfect official routine. There may be in them no waste and no shortage of anything that is needed. But they will be lacking in some of the essential elements for the healing and comfort of their patients, if their only connection with the civilian world is the punctual payment of taxes. It is the human touch which goes with our gifts, the sense that we give because we care and not simply because we must, that justifies us in separating the work of the hospital from every other form of military enterprise and refusing to regard its constant dependence upon voluntary aid as a mark of official ineffectiveness.

But after all the unanswerable justification for War Charities is that the need for them exists. Later on, when the crisis is past, we may be able to study the situation and divide the blame between our own blunders and the capricious fortunes of war. But now the only thing for good men and women to do is to pour in the oil and wine, to give with a lavish hand where the need is greatest, and thus to accept the happy privilege of using the things which they call their own not for their own pleasure but for the help of others. In every war there are some people, who in the intensity of their misery seem to suffer vicariously for the rest. It is their plea which ought to be heard first, and to them should go not what we can spare when every call at home has been satisfied, but the freshness of our hearts and the undimmed eagerness of our sympathy.

Poland, Servia, and above all Belgium make this claim upon us now. Their need is our opportunity. There will not be any equality of suffering, for they have been smitten in ways which we can only dimly imagine; but we can do something to remove the glaring inequality in hospital accommodation for their wounded men. These Belgian soldiers, haunted by dark and hideous memories, are terribly lonely as they recover from their wounds. They are homeless till the war is over. Many of them have nothing to live for except vengeance, which is as a fire in their bones night and day, and the love of their country which is never so strong as among the dispossessed. Every gift we send them has in it some balm of healing pity. It tells them that they are not forgotten, that some one cares.

The War Charities that ignore national boundaries and seek eagerly for fresh opportunities of serving our Allies are in this way laying secure foundations for the friendships of the future. We deplore deeply the ties which have been broken by the war. But already we have formed others, which have in them a richer promise of security than any we have lost. At least in recent years there was always something a little artificial and self-conscious in the effort to cultivate friendship with Germany. It relied far too much upon fine phrases and the abstract sentiments of a small class of intellectuals. How different is our present experience. We are not pursuing friendship with deliberate aim. It is springing up on all sides as the natural result of generous and loving deeds. The Belgian hospitals in France, which we have often described to our readers, are becoming workshops of goodwill and mutual understanding. To these doctors and soldiers every gift is warm with the affection of English hearts. In many ways this intangible spiritual influence is as precious to them and to us as the physical blessings of surgical instruments and better equipment; but it is unnecessary to try to separate them even in thought, for here as always there is something sacramental in the humblest offering of love. These are things which we have seen for ourselves. The simple language of doing good has brought the dream of international friendship down to earth, while congresses and societies have only discussed it and seen it afar off. And the same thing is going on in countless other places, where men of different race are helping one another to bear their burdens bravely or bringing succour to those in greater trouble than themselves. No War Charity need seek for further justification, or attempt any apology for its existence, if it is a living channel of noble human intercourse and generous affection between nation and nation.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

A WAR SONG TO ENGLISHMEN.

PREPARE, prepare the iron helm of war,
Bring forth the lots, cast in the spacious orb;

Th' Angel of Fate turns them with mighty hands,
And casts them out upon the darkened
earth!

Prepare, prepare.

Prepare your hearts for Death's cold hand! Prepare

Your souls for flight, your bodies for the earth;

Prepare your arms for glorious victory!
Prepare your eyes to meet a holy God!

Prepare, prepare.

Whose fatal scroll is that? Methinks
'tis mine!

Why sinks my heart, why faltereth
my tongue?

Had I three lives, I'd die in such a cause,
And rise, with ghosts, over the well-fought field.

Prepare, prepare.

The arrows of Almighty God are drawn!
Angels of Death stand in the lowering heavens!

Thousands of souls must seek the realms of light,

And walk together on the clouds of heaven!

Prepare, prepare.

Soldiers, prepare! Our cause is Heaven's cause;

Soldiers, prepare! Be worthy of our cause.

Prepare to meet our fathers in the sky,
Prepare, O troops, that are to fall to-day!

Prepare, prepare.

Alfred shall smile, and make his harp
rejoice;

The Norman William, and the learned
Clerk,

And Lion Heart, and Black-browed
Edward, with

His loyal queen, shall rise, and welcome us!

Prepare, prepare.

WILLIAM BLAKE.

WE are, and must be, one and all, burdened with faults in this world; but the time will come soon when, I trust, we shall put them off in putting off our corruptible bodies; when debasement and sin will fall from us with this cumbrous frame of flesh, and only the spark of the spirit will remain—the impalpable principle of life and thought, pure as when it left the Creator to inspire the creature; whence it came it will return, perhaps again to be communicated to some being higher than man, perhaps to pass through gradations of glory, from the pale human soul to brighten to the seraph! Surely it will never, on the contrary, be suffered to degenerate from man to fiend? No; I cannot believe that: I hold another creed, which no one ever taught me, and which I seldom mention; but in which I delight, and to which I cling, for it extends hope to all: it makes Eternity a rest—a mighty home, not a terror and an abyss. Besides, with this creed, I can so clearly distinguish between the criminal and his crime; I can so sincerely forgive the first while I abhor the last: with this creed revenge never worries my heart, degradation never too deeply disgusts me, injustice never crushes me too low. I live in calm, looking to the end.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË
(from "Jane Eyre").

O GOD, the Sovereign Lord of kingdoms and of kings, who in chastising dost heal, and in forgiving save; show forth upon us thy mercy and restore to us the quiet times of peace, that we may make use of them to our amendment. Amen.

CHILDREN AND THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

THE following letters have been received by Mrs. Allen at different times, and show what children can do to help the Fund, and, perhaps, afford hints to other children to help in similar ways during the coming winter. It is impossible to give all the instances, some of them very touching, of the sympathy shown by children to this work; reference has been made before to the children of a very poor London elementary school who collected their farthings and sent them up, and a Sunday School in the North who gave up a treat and sent the money instead, and there are other such instances of self-denial. The first letter is from Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe who have organised work among a number of schools during the last few months.

I.

25, The Pryors,
Hampstead, N.W.

Sept. 13, 1915.

DEAR MRS. ALLEN,—We have great pleasure in sending you the enclosed cheque for £17 15s., being the sum sent by seven of the numerous girls' schools which, during the summer months, have been working for the Belgian Hospital Fund. One or two private contributions are included. We should like it to be devoted to paying for the installation of the bath-rooms at Chateaugiron. One contribution of £2 10s. 0d. came from the sixth form girls of one of the High Schools, raised by the sale of school photographs of their own taking. Our first term of work has been very encouraging, and we hope that in addition to an increase of goods during the winter we shall be able to contribute help towards feeding the little refugee school children in Calais. It is a work that should particularly appeal to our schools.

We are,

Yours sincerely,

EDITH TAYLOR and MARY ROWE.

II.

Norwich, June, 1915.

I am writing now to send you £5 as the result of the children's entertainment (Tiny Tots). Your kind letter was read to them all at Sunday School the next Sunday afternoon, and they were very delighted. I expect they will want to do another! It will be something for them to remember in after years that in this awful time they joined in helping those poor little children.

III.

Wallington, September, 1915.

DEAR MRS. ALLEN,—....I have just sent off....a box containing....also one chessboard and men, and fifty-one packs of cards, which my family and maid have collected from door to door. My boy, aged 8, has been a most enthusiastic collector. We shall probably be able to send some more before long.

Yours sincerely,

M. B. G.

IV.

Adelaide, S. Australia,

July 27, 1915.

DEAR MRS. ALLEN,—I am much pleased to be able to send you another cheque for your work among the Belgian Hospitals of £5 15s. I think you will like to know that this second instalment was raised by the children of our congregation. A little boy who will be 9 in September asked his mother if he might give a little concert in the drawing-room and sell 6d. tickets for admission. He said he wished to help the poor Belgians, and he thought he might get a little money in that way. His mother said he might on two conditions, that his elder brother helped him, and that they made all their own arrangements. She would provide tea and cake for the guests, but they must be responsible for everything else. They, assisted by three school-fellows, arranged a delightful little programme of songs and recitations given in unison, and some instrumental music by the promoters, who play the piano well for their age. The entertainment produced £6. A few weeks later it was repeated in our church schoolroom, followed by a little drama written and arranged by the young daughter of our minister, the Rev. Wilfrid Harris. It was a very pleasant evening, and a crowded house; the takings were divided between your Fund, the Red Cross, and, I think, our wounded soldiers. £21 was collected altogether. With my hearty good wishes for the success of your splendid work, believe me,

Yours sincerely,

S. M. CROMPTON.

THE HEAVEN OF BEING YOUNG.

OUT of a land where nobody gets old and godly and grave, wandered for a time into our saddened world a beautiful youth. You could see he had but missed his way in coming hither. The Latmian light lurking in his eyes, the long wavy hair crowning the head, by Hebe's hand perchance caressed, the strange speech, all proved it. Expecting always to meet beauty, he was doomed to many disappointments; and having no other interests than belonged to his adventure as a vassal of love, the cold day's doling of sterner facts not seldom made him ache, if sometimes it also gave him grim mirth. So, ere he returned to his own country, he wrote down quaint verses about his quest. These yodels of youth are to be found in two books left behind by Rupert Brooke, containing about eighty short poems.

These poems secure for their author a high place among the minor poets of our time for a number of beautiful things said beautifully, their faultless diction, their wistful cadence and their engaging incurable juvenility. Moreover, the early death of the singer at the age of 27, while serving with the British Expeditionary Force in the Mediterranean, and soon after contributing some notable patriotic sonnets, has endowed his work with a new worth. Of the victims of this war he said:—

There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But, dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away; poured out the red

Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be.

Of work and joy, and that unhopéd serene,

That men call age; and those who would have been,

Their sons, they gave, their immortality.

Among them, now he. All his pages are now empurpled by that dye, and the thought of the sacrifice of the sweet wine of youth must inevitably discolour criticism. Out of his dreaming and dallying, war awoke the poet. A new note was sounded, unheard in the poems of passion. The cynical vein, unmistakable before, disappears. The bugle blast, summoning to more strenuous strivings, blows away the vaporous ardours of the arbour, "all the little emptiness of love." It brings release from shame. The new cause brings Honour back, and through Pain the lover enters upon his heritage of holiness.

There is an easy and playful patriotism in the rollicking lines written to the poet's village home, Grantchester. But they were written in 1912 in a Berlin café before the deluge. The soldier is abroad again, but now stemming the tide of Berlin's brutality let loose, and the eyes close in death, longing for home. But that corner of alien territory where he falls the poet dedicates to be "for ever England."

There shall be

In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;

A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,

Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,

A body of England, breathing English air,

Washed by its rivers, blest by suns of home.

And in this glow of a new love of country, and the intense devotion it confirmed, it is plain that a firm faith was fiercely forged. He had legitimately made fun of the folk who create God after their own image and build up Heaven out of their own delights, by feigning the fishes' pious fancies for a world where land is no more, and the worm dieth not, in other way than the gospel promise. But he had sometimes questioned the idea of a creative purpose, and doubted whether there was any other abode for love than the material body. All these Pyrrhonic perplexities are burned away. He is thrallé to a certainty. He knows himself a pulse in the eternal mind. He has a safe passport through the domain of death. So with a chant of triumph he sets face against the indomitable destruction, safe though all safety's lost, and dying, safest of all.

There was something the poet dreaded more than death. It was old age. One recalls R. L. S.'s fear of dying at the top, of living on with the light of the intellect eclipsed. Rupert Brooke feared the living death when the heart had lost its passion, the limbs their grace, and love had died to kindliness, unthrilled, tempered and tamed.

The poet's own horror has found expression in passages the naked realism of which gives the impression of crudeness, if not worse. The after-years of Helen and Menelaus reunited after the fall of Troy and the embraces of dead men's love make one shudder. To sleep on the banks of the cool river with the slain Paris is decidedly preferable. And in the poet's early death, one of his own heart's desires was not denied. For his was a world where the one crime was to grow old, out of which all over thirty were cast to lie howling in darkness. So the good people of the ideal English hamlet conveniently up and shoot themselves at the first stiffening of the joints, and if the poet is angry at the loss to another of the Last One, he consoles himself by picturing her fifty years hence, or if jealous of that other, clothes him at once in decrepitude—"a scrap that life's flung by, and love's forgotten."

All this because the poet once identified life and its joys with youth. To the romantic temperament, tragedy lies in a life of settled prose. An existence without poetic sentiment is hell. The poet is unaware of a thousand movements initiated in our day to make life a fairer thing. They find no echo in his verse. The social note is entirely missing. The intense, personal emotion holds him in bond.

The dreadful Day of Judgment is the time when there is no stirring of the blood, when ordinary speech takes the place of singing trumpets, when wonder wanes, when all the gold fades into grey. Many of our young English poets have thus borne witness to the transiency of enthusiasm for that beauty that must die, and joy, whose hand is ever at his lips bidding adieu. The author of 'Blue Evening' also knows "the laugh dies with the lips, love with the lover." But he knows more than this, else he were no poet at all. He knows how in the common event resides the astonishing, occult, elusive glory, "in every touch more intimate meanings hide." This vision transfigures two poems especially. He is at an examination. The room is full of scribbling figures. Then the glory of the sun streams in, and he is made aware of a change in the atmosphere. A full tumultuous murmur of wings grows through the hall, and gyre on gyre, archangels and angels, adoring, bowing, and a Face unshaded in the white undying Fire.

So at an ordinary tea meeting comes a revelation of the immortal beauty of the person and the moment, and for an instant he sees as God sees and a million years are crowded into it:—

Freed from the mask of transiency
Triumphant in eternity,
Immote, immortal.

This, according to Blake, is the true sign of the poet. And for its sake one can pass over the over-sensuous imagery of some of the verses. One is struck by the preponderance of images derived from taste and touch and smell. He is weak in the sense of colour. Even the wealth of tropical tints fails to arouse it. In Samoa he is more concerned with the swaying gait and the Platonic archetypes than with the magic of the spectrum. He is most susceptible to movement and form. Hence, still radiant life like that of the flowers does not quicken him. The far whispering of a little lonely wind that creeps from tree to tree and distantly follows me—that recurs with almost Celtic persistence; but a flower has its place only as a general idea, nowhere apparently loved for its individual worth and wistful winningness. It is the spirit of the whole landscape that affects him. "This April twilight on the river, stirs anguish in the heart of me." Beneath the Cambridge skies, flower-lulled in sleepy grass, he "hears the cool lapse of hours pass until the centuries blend and burr." In this erasure of time bound up with his clairvoyant experiences as with his nature communions, one perceives the mystic touch. Here personality perishes. Something in the evening by the quiet willows lays a hush upon the wild heart of clamour, and where the quiet sky rains peace the sick lover forgets to play the lover, no longer yearns to die, and is glad in the mere large presence that fills the vast. And when exempt from the merely masculine point of view, he realises that the woman, too, shares these consolations of nature. In his company her heart may be all his, but once the strong down smiles her welcome, and the woods close conquering arms above her, he becomes less than a thought to her, alone with the hills and heaven. He recognises, in spite of his demand for her subjugation, that she has a value to herself, wants her own self-realisation, and only as he aids her evolution does he really matter to her. But where all high ambitions conspire together, and spiritual affinity is established, then comes the divine event chronicled in the poet's magnificent masterpiece 'The Call.' If some of the sonnets remind us of Rossetti, the language of 'The Call' reminds us of Francis Thompson:—

Out of the nothingness of sleep,
The slow dreams of Eternity,
There was a thunder on the deep:
I came, because you called to me

I broke the Night's primeval bars,
I dared the old abysmal curse,
And flashed thro' ranks of frightened stars
Suddenly on the universe!

And the sign he gives as a token that they have met at last is breaking and forging the stars anew, is shattering the heavens with a song. Thus to the grand finale where death has slunk away in fear of the glory on their faces, and the infinite goal finds them one alone above the night, above the dust of the dead gods, alone. It is a gorgeous pæan, star-splendid, Olympic. Everything common blazes here sub specie æternitatis. Here the idealist is crowned and triumphant. Here love broadens out into cosmic proportions. Here youth across the gulf of the years hails that which, reborn age after age, grows in the grace and grandeur of everlasting, ever-renewing youth.

If sometimes he doubted or forgot, he never wholly lost sight of the Face whose ghosts we are; the real, the never-setting star; and the Flower of which all we love are but fading shadows. He had the soul of the Greek faith that instead of lovely things there shall be found Loveliness itself, and instead of lovers, Love shall be. So most fittingly the Gods decreed that when he turned home again, it should be by way of the charmed isles of the Ægean Sea.

Possibly he always knew he was, as so many of his poems suggest, one of the predestined. A certain aimlessness so difficult to maintain in an insistently practical world, a certain avid eagerness for life as of one in a hurry and hearing the clamant beat of the hours, an intimacy with the mysterious land between birth and death, a remoteness from the compelling concerns of the world's necessities—these signs mark him out from his kind. More direct evidence is the constant preoccupation with the life beyond the veil. Sometimes it is merely due to tiredness:—

O infinite deep I never knew;
I would come back, come back to you,
And a long watch you would keep,
And I should sleep, and I should sleep!

What death means to those left behind is fixed in a perfectly chiselled image niched in one of the war poems. He looks down on the rank of recumbent figures. He reflects what they were a little while since. These hearts were woven of human joys and cares, washed marvellously with sorrow, swift to mirth. Earth had unrolled its majesties, a thousand joyous things had stirred and quickened them. Now all that is at a sharp end:—

There are waters blown by changing winds to laughter
And lit by the rich skies, all day. And after,
Frost, with a gesture, stays the waves that dance
And wandering loveliness. He leaves a white
Unbroken glory, a gathered radiance,
A width, a shining peace, under the night.

The deliberate choice of the words, fraught with symbolic associations, the stress on the long vowel sounds, the pauses, reveal a consummate art in the method of conveying an intense sustained emotion, of a heart chilled and speechless and over-weighted by an inexorable woe.

That symbolism is carried further in several poems. The 'Night-Journey' becomes a pilgrimage of the infinite, the strain of the long-limbed train a human effort after the far thing, and the signal-lights along the imperious mystery of the way, signs that the strength and splendour of our purpose swings. And the goal?—

Lost into God, . . .
Grown one with will, end-drunken huddled dreamers.

Psychical research hints to him that there will be liberation and expansion of faculty, acquisition of new knowledge,

And feel, who have laid our groping hands away;
And see, no longer blinded by our eyes.

Such flowers of hope did he entwine with stray buds broken from the old dust of misery before his early adventure into the Unknown. "The men among whom the Predestined dwell become the better for the knowledge of them, and the sadder, and the more gentle." So says Maeterlinck. To leave a fragrant memory is well, but Rupert Brooke did more. Ere with laughter he waved farewell, he flung a sheaf of precious leaves, brodered with beautiful fancies and running with runes eloquent of emotions emergent out of the red blood, and out of the heroic quartz where hides the rift of spiritual gold, and with these he dowered a world grown wild with ravening, to sweeten its bitterness and be lustration for the stains of wrong. And this was his message of farewell:—

Sets your star,
O heart, for ever! Yet, behind the night,
Waits for the great unborn, somewhere afar,
Some white tremendous daybreak.
And the light,
Returning, shall give back the golden hours,
Ocean a windless level, Earth a lawn
Spacious and full of sunlit dancing-places,
And laughter, and music, and, among the flowers,
The gay child-hearts of men, and the child-faces,
O heart, in the great dawn!

J. T. D.

SMOKE.

THERE are evils of the town and evils of the country, sometimes they touch the dwellers in both; but there is one evil which touches the town dweller very much and hardly troubles the country dweller at all. Naturally the country dweller worries not about it, and, unfortunately, the town dweller is so used to it that he very often does the same, which is a pity in more ways than one. I refer to the evils of smoke—factory and domestic. Dwellers in cities and the surrounding districts are so used to the dinginess of their houses, the public buildings, and the monotonous fact that a collar will hardly go through a day's work without shouting for the wash tub, that they do not trouble themselves much about it. People have been so accustomed to think of smoke as smoke, as something that is blown away, that they do not realize what a stupendous amount of damage is going on all round them in the great cities. Frequently, also, smoke from a factory chimney is looked upon as a sign of prosperity; fat clouds of smoke rolling out mean fat bags of golden sovereigns rolling in. The prosperity of a certain town has been, in fact, attributed to smoke. The Town Council did not attempt to make any manufacturer reduce his smoke. More smoke, more prosperity, was its motto, and as the trade of the town continued to flourish, so the Council "smeeked" itself on its intelligent action. At one time, and not so very long ago either, the stokers in the country used to receive a bonus direct from the mine, and the more coal they burnt the larger the bonus. Now manufacturers are beginning to find out that smoke spells waste, and are giving their men a bonus according to the small quantity of coal they burn.

There is no doubt that factory smoke is the cause of the larger part of the damage which is done to buildings, it is the prime cause of fogs, and contributes at least one half of the dinginess of the atmosphere; but domestic smoke comes in no bad second. It is true, as Emerson says, that "the great majority of men unable to judge of a principle until its light falls on a fact, are not aware of the evil which is around them, until they see it in some gross form." We want to make people realise the smoke evil in all its grossness, and then, perhaps, they will wake up to what is going on around them. Few Manchester people, for instance, realise the amount of soot there is in their atmosphere. If, however, we put it before them in a concrete form in this fashion, it must bring it home to them with a considerable shock. "The volume of soot poured forth into Manchester atmosphere is such that it would form a column fifteen feet square, and twice as high as the tower of the Town Hall." Do London dwellers know that over the 117 square miles which comprise the whole area of the metropolis, 17,050 tons of soot fall in one year on their devoted heads?

Carpenter drew a lamentable picture of the dwellers in towns walking to their own funerals under a pall of smoke which they themselves had created, and the pity of it is that the picture is a true one. Long ago Kingsley spoke of the degradation of "stink," we might equally well speak of the degradation of dirt produced by smoke. It is a terrible sight to see a home fall into a dirty wretched state, simply because the woman cannot keep up the incessant warfare against the dirt which pours into her house. She lets the house stay dirty, she gets dirty herself, the children follow suit, the man spends his time at the public house, and at last that stage is reached which makes the school teacher weep and the health visitor despair. And it is all smoke and nothing but smoke. "A little energy is all that is wanted," you say, "the woman is lazy." Yes, probably she is lazy. Why? Smoke again. It is a proved fact that a smoky atmosphere cuts off the health-giving violet rays of the sun, the rays that give vitality. Here is the reason for the woman's laziness—lack of vitality. This is the reason for the tiredness of many of our town workers, and of the children. Just so long as we take no steps to lessen the smoke nuisance so long will the health of our citizens, and of our future citizens be injured, for we are taking away their God-given birth-right of sunshine.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

WAR CHARITIES.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I suggest that there is a point of view on this matter other than that which you put forth in the current issue? During the present war we have not, it is true, reached the depth of degradation that we did during the South African War when, as someone put it, the country was run on the lines of a charity bazaar: one public-spirited man giving a battery of artillery, a generous lady a number of machine guns, and so on; but there is far too much provided by philanthropy which ought to be paid for out of the public purse. Last winter we saw the shameful spectacle of the wife of the captain of a British battleship having to appeal through the press for people to help her in providing warm clothing for the men. In another instance a lady appealed for, inter alia, soap for the crew of another vessel. Now there are two reasons why this state of affairs should not be: the first is that it is not consonant with the dignity of a great and wealthy country like this, and the second is that it enables mean—and, perhaps, still more thoughtless—people to escape their fair share for paying for their defence. Of course, one does not wish to restrain any generous impulse on the part of those who feel that they have not discharged their obligation to our soldiers and sailors when they have paid their taxes—The Daily News Christmas Pudding Fund for instance, was a very laudable effort last year and will be again this—but I do suggest strongly that all necessities should be paid for by the Exchequer, leaving the care of comforts to philanthropy. At least one of the latter, a certain allowance of tobacco, is now provided by the War Office. This should not be. As a smoker I am prepared to give my mite towards purchasing such proportion of the weekly consumption of tobacco as the men cannot afford to pay for themselves.

Though hospitals are certainly a necessary and not a luxury, I hope that what I have said will not hinder any of your readers from contributing to the Belgian Hospital Fund. The case of Belgium is, of course, exceptional—
Yours, &c. FREDK. G. JACKSON.

8, Park Lane, Leeds,
September 13, 1915.

THE IMMANENCE OF GOD.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In your reviewer's criticism of the Rev. R. Nicol Cross's book on 'Communion of Man with God,' he refers in one comment to the failure of the recent New Theology. That one aspect of the theory was over emphasised in certain quarters may be granted, but to assume that the doctrine of "Immanence" can itself be regarded as a failure would be a great error. On the contrary it is the most vital doctrine of present day thought. Of this there is plenty of evidence. At the recent Wesleyan Assembly the new President said words to this effect—that in the light of the doctrine of Immanence they had revised their beliefs. Some artificial accretions to the doctrine of the Atonement had been removed, but they could to-day present a Saviour "perfect God and perfect man" who was able to save to the uttermost. We may doubt the logic of the conclusion, but when such a conservative body as the Wesleyan revises its beliefs under the influence of a new thought it may be said to have driven itself pretty deeply into the mind of the age.

I have before me a recent pamphlet by a Church of England minister who has reshaped his beliefs in his old age. It contains the following passages:—"God as infinite, universal, all-involving and all-embracing is transcendent. As all-evolving, all-constituting, all-essential, all-pervading, God is immanent. What God is in Himself we cannot know; but the thought of the day may be said to define God as the All in All—as infinite, essential, transcendent, and immanent, Life and Force, Mind and Consciousness, Will and Purpose, Wisdom and Truth, Love and Holiness."—"There is not an article of Christian belief nor a Christian doctrine that must not take a completely new complexion when, instead of conceiving God as outside, beyond, and above the universe, we conceive of Him as the real basis and essence and true inwardness of all existence."

Thus the heaven is working, and will work until the whole lump is quickened. Meanwhile, it is a puzzle to know what is the philosophy of the Free Churches?—
Yours, &c. E. CAPLETON.

113, Highbury New Park, N.
September 14, 1915.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE autumn lists, which are being issued by the publishing houses, show some signs of a revival of literary activity. The War still claims chief attention and many popular writers have abandoned familiar paths for its daily excitements. The mass of books and pamphlets dealing with war problems from the point of view of political history and diplomacy continues to grow, and a good deal of judgment is required on the part of the reader if he is to choose wisely and avoid mental bewilderment. But fortunately the autumn season promises us other things as well, and there will be some books of wisdom and refreshment for quiet hours.

THE last twelve months have been singularly barren in theological books of sterling merit. Professor Kirsopp Lake's striking volume "The Stewardship of Faith" stands almost alone in its attempt to grapple with the larger problems of re-construction. The chief effort has been inspired by the need of popular apologetic created by the war and its challenge to Christian ethics. Messrs. Macmillan announce a new volume, 'Christian Ideals in War Time,' on similar lines. It will consist of a series of essays by members of the Churchmen's Union and others on the religious difficulties aroused by the present condition of the world. Dr. Foakes Jackson is acting as editor, and among the contributors are Professor Percy Gardner, the Dean of St. Paul's, Professor A. E. Taylor, and Dr. Hastings Rashdall.

ANOTHER volume of special interest announced by Messrs. Macmillan is 'The Personal Life of Josiah Wedgwood, the Potter,' by his great-granddaughter, the late Miss Julia Wedgwood. The volume has been edited with an introduction and a prefatory memoir of Miss Wedgwood by Prof. C. H. Herford. Messrs. Macmillan's list also includes 'Six Portraits of Rabindranath Tagore,' by W. Rothenstein; 'Letters from Serbia,' by Mrs. Percy Dearmer, with a Prefatory Memoir by Stephen Gwynn; 'The Way of Martha and the Way of Mary'—a further study of life and religion in Russia—by Stephen Graham; and the 'Adventures of Senmas Beg: Verses for Children,' by James Stephens, which should be rich in whimsical mirth and other good things.

MESSRS. SMITH ELDER announce several books of biographical interest, including 'The Life and Letters of Canon Barnett,' by Mrs. Barnett, and a new and greatly enlarged edition of the 'Life of William Shakespeare,' by Sir Sidney Lee.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. FRANCIS TAYLOR, J.P.

It is with deep regret that we record the death on September 1st of Mr. Francis Taylor, of Diss, Norfolk, at the age of 70 years. Mr. Taylor was the eldest survivor of a notable family which, for many generations, has taken a prominent place in the life of East Anglia. He was the principal supporter of the Unitarian Congregation in Diss, and regularly attended the Park Fields Chapel there. For two years in succession he held the office of President of the Eastern Union of Unitarian Churches. In the public and social activities of his town he always played a prominent and generous part. He was Lord of the Manor, and at the time of his death was Chairman of the Magistrates. He took a great interest in education. For a long period he was Chairman of the Diss School Board, whilst he gave the site for the Diss Secondary School and has been Chairman of the Governors since its foundation in 1908. At one time he was a member of the Diss Local Board of Health, and a member of the Old Age Pensions Committee. He took a lively interest in the Volunteer movement in years gone by, and was Commanding Officer of the old Diss Rifle Volunteers, from which he retired with the honorary rank of major. One of his last acts of public generosity was the construction of a new road so that farmers and others could avoid a long détour and two steep hills when passing through the town.

In his younger days Mr. Taylor took a keen delight in yachting. He was a member of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, and at one time Commodore of the Harwich Yacht Club. He represented the constituency of South Norwich in Parliament from 1885 to 1898, first as a Liberal, from which party he seceded on the introduction of the Home Rule Bill. At the first election, which took place shortly after the passing of the Bill which extended the franchise to agricultural labourers, he had as his opponent the late Sir R. J. Buxton, who had for some years previously represented the division. Mr. Taylor's retirement from Parliament was due to ill-health. He married in 1873, Susan, daughter of the late Mr. Edward Rigby, M.D., of Berkeley Square, W. At the funeral which took place on Saturday, September 4, in the graveyard attached to the Unitarian Chapel, there was a large attendance of friends and neighbours from Diss and the surrounding villages. The Rev. W. Birks officiated.

MR. ALFRED HENSHALL.

ON Monday last (September 13), at Dean Row Chapel, near Wilmslow, took place the funeral of one who in former years was closely connected with the congregation worshipping in that ancient building. Mr. Alfred Henshall was the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Henshall of Styal, and during the whole of his business life was in the service of Messrs. Greg Bros., cotton merchants, Chancery Place, Manchester, who fully appreciated the value of his long and steady labours. In private life he was endeared to all who knew him by the charm of his sympathetic nature, his deep sincerity, his unflinching cheerfulness. Of late years he was a valued member of the Cross Street congregation, Manchester. He was twice married. His first wife was Annie, daughter of Mr. Robert Bourne, of Wilmslow. He married subsequently Mary, daughter of the late Mr. Henry Noar, of Manchester. Mr. Henshall had very recently completed 71 years of life. The funeral service at Dean Row, which was largely attended by friends from Manchester, Wilmslow, and Styal, was conducted by the Rev. J. C. Odgers, of Liverpool, with whom he had been intimately associated during Mr. Odgers's pastorate in that part of Cheshire. On Sunday last the following expression of regret was adopted at Dean Row:—"The Trustees and Committee of Dean Row Chapel have heard with sorrow of the death of Mr. Alfred Henshall. This meeting desires to place on record its deep sense of the value of the devoted services rendered by Mr. Henshall to the Chapel, as Trustee, Secretary, Treasurer, Chapel Warden, and latterly as Honorary Auditor for many years, and wishes to convey to Mrs. Henshall and other members of his family their sincere sympathy with them in the great loss they have sustained."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

35TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	6,394	2	0
Miss H. M. Hutton (second donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Preston (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss C. R. Holland (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Tangye (sixth donation)	5	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Miss Grundy (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Long	5	0	0
Miss M. Field (third donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. and Miss Tarrant (second donation)	1	1	0
Mrs. du Vallon (fifth donation)	4	0	0
Liscard Memorial Church and Red Cross Society, per Mrs. Johnson (fifth donation) ..	3	16	5
Mrs. Hardy (third donation)	2	0	0
Miss E. R. Lee (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss G. Coe (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. Wm. Roscoe	5	0	0
Miss Colton and the Misses Gillespie (seventh donation)	7	6
Miss E. Dora Higginson (third donation)	5	0	0
The Misses A. and M. Beard (third donation)	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Isaacs (second donation)	5	5	0
Mr. Percival Hart	5	5	0
Miss M. Preston (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Thornhill, per Mrs. Preston	10	0	0
Miss Gladys M. Oram	2	6
Miss Winona Osborne	1	1	0
Mrs. Bredall (second donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Singleton	1	10	0
Mrs. E. A. Wurtzburg	1	1	0
Mrs. William Kenrick (fourth donation)	15	0	0
Mr. S. Gilfillan (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Grundy ..	10	0	0
Miss Baker	2	2	0
Miss M. J. Shaen	5	0	0
"A Holiday Worker"	5	0	0
Mrs. D. S. Capper	1	1	0
Mrs. M. R. Green	2	0	0
Miss Bolies	1	1	0
Miss Collet	1	1	0
"R." (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss Joyce Cobb	4	0	0
Mrs. Hamer (second donation)	1	0	0
Miss Edith C. Harvey (third donation)	5	0	0
Miss Rowe and Miss Taylor (special donation for Chateaugiron)	17	15	0
Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Thew	10	0	0
Mr. E. Chitty, J.P. (second donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Harris (fifth donation) ..	2	0	0
Miss Harris (fifth donation) ..	2	0	0
Mrs. Marriott (second donation)	10	0	0
Mr. Nevill	1	0	0
Bootle Free Church, per the Rev. W. Short (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Smith (second donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Harold Bailly (third donation)	2	2	0
R. B. D., Edinburgh (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss Alderson	1	0	0
Miss S. J. Gregg (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Miss Annie Fryer (third donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Ridley Bax	5	0	0
Mr. Ridley Bax	10	0	0
Mr. J. M. Gimson (third donation)	10	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Miss Ida L. Benecke	2	0	0
Mr. Jas. Ballantyne (second donation)	2	2	0
Mr. J. Bredall	1	0	0
Mrs. Kirby (second donation)	3	3	0
Sir Thomas Bowring	10	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. Charles Roper	1	1	0
Mrs. M. E. Rye, M.B. (second donation)	1	0	0
"R. L." (fourth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Marten	2	2	0
Miss Marten	10	0	0
Mrs. Isaacs	1	0	0
Miss H. Beard (monthly donation for September) ..	5	0	0
Mr. H. Sharpe	5	0	0
"Bromidic"	2	2	0
"L. E. M. D."	1	0	0
Mrs. George Webb (fifth donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Basil Martineau (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Wallis (second donation)	5	5	0
Mrs. Bulley	1	0	0
"M. R. J." (third donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. A. Lemann (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. Jonathan Nield	0	5	0
Mr. Thomas Kingston (second donation)	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Barnes (second donation)	3	3	0
Miss E. A. Carter (fifth donation)	10	0	0
"Three Friends at Kirk Ella" ..	1	10	0
	£6,677	0	5

Parcels have been received from:—

Miss Crafer; Mrs. T. Byles; Mrs. Minns; Two Friends; Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Mrs. Titterton; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty; Mrs. Williamson; Mrs. Corfield; Miss Partridge; Mr. Tyssen; Mrs. W. Reeve; The Misses Passavant; Mrs. Edward Chitty; Mrs. Frank Preston; Miss Bruce; Miss M. J. Shaen; "A Holiday Worker"; Miss Gittens; Mrs. Dunkerley; Mrs. and Miss Tarrant; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Brighton New Road Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. Russell Martineau); High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham (per Mr. John Ballantyne); Anon. (Acton); Mrs. Gunther; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Grundy; Miss Comport; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Mrs. Thomas H. Terry; Mrs. Wallace Bruce; Mrs. Greg; Ullet Road Sewing Circle (per Mrs. J. C. Odgers); Miss Hollins; Miss Taylor and Miss Rowe; Miss Ruth Cobb; Pluparcian Women's Circle (per Miss Powell Evans); Miss Norton; Mr. Henry Sharpe; "Pour les Hôpitaux Belges"; Mr. William Greenwood; Mrs. Wallis; Mrs. Enfield; Mrs. Eiloart; Miss Garrett; The Rev. Joshua Lord's Adult Class; Mrs. Dent; Miss Clay and Miss Chapman; Mrs. A. Love; Mrs. and the Misses Harvey; Mrs. Millington; Wimbledon War Workers' Depot (per Mrs. Vincent Green).

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

For the Hospitals:—

Money to buy hospital requisites of all kinds.

Shirts.

Socks.

Vests | woven or of a natural coloured

Pants | flannel.

Cardigans. 4
Shoes with leather soles.
Towels. 34
Handkerchiefs.
Mufflers.
Playing cards.

For Refugees (civilians):—

Money to support the hospice for sick and aged.

Clothes for men, women, children, and babies' layettes.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Cullompton.—In spite of the shadow caused by the absence of so many friends on active service, the Sunday School Anniversary and Harvest Festival were celebrated with much heartiness on Sunday, September 12th, at Pound Square Chapel, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The minister, the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, conducted the morning and evening services, the lessons being read by Miss Edith Gulpin and Mr. W. Broone, and the afternoon service was taken by Mr. C. H. Morgan.

Lincoln.—The Rev. W. H. King and Mrs. King have now settled in Lincoln, and preparations are being made for the re-opening of the Unitarian Church. The necessary re-decoration and alterations will be complete at an early date, and the first services will be conducted on Sunday, October 3rd.

National Unitarian Temperance Association.—We understand that November 14th has been fixed for the observance of Temperance Sunday.

Newark.—The Rev. J. Walter Cock, from 1906 to 1914 assistant minister at Upper Chapel and at Attercliffe Church, Sheffield, has accepted an invitation to the pulpit of the King Street Church, and will commence his new duties with service at 6.30 on Sunday, September 19th.

Newbury.—A new attempt is being made by the workers connected with the Unitarian Church to strengthen their hold on the young people, and at the opening of the winter session on September 8th a Guild Committee was inaugurated for the purpose of linking up the Band of Hope, Band of Mercy, Sunday School, and Children's Mission, Nature Club and Ambulance, League of Young Helpers', and Flower Mission Committee. Small sub-committees were elected, each with its responsible sub-secretary, and programmes have been adopted which will be carried out during the coming months. The Chairman of the Guild is the minister, the Rev. R. Newell; Secretary, Mrs. F. Wright; Treasurer, Mrs. Matthews.

Oldham Road, Manchester.—The Rev. Herbert Barnes commenced his active work on September 5th. The attendances were satisfactory, 70 in the morning and 150 in the evening, when many friends attended. The services were most helpful and inspiring. On Saturday, September 11th, the formal Welcome Meeting to Mr. Barnes on his settlement was held in the School-room. Amongst others, the Rev. J. Morley Mills, Failsworth (President of the Manchester District Association), Dr. Mellone (Principal of the Home Missionary College, Manchester), the Rev. C. Travers, Mill Street, Bradford, Manchester, and the Rev. W. G. Cadman, the first Minister to the Congregation, delivered stirring and helpful addresses, and Mr. Barnes suitably responded. The meeting was most encouraging; about 180 Members and friends were present

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

EDUCATION FOR WORKING PEOPLE.

The war has naturally laid a heavy hand on the Tutorial Classes carried on by the University of London Joint Committee for the Promotion of the Higher Education of Working People. Several tutors and a great many students have enlisted, and the energies of many others are absorbed in war work. It will be impossible to increase the number of classes for the present, but those existing will, in the main, continue. The Tutorial Classes have had great influence on the lives and social efficiency of many working men and women. They are held all over greater London from Southall to Tottenham, from Battersea to Ilford, and the members meet weekly during three consecutive winters to study economics, history, political science, &c. It will be more than ever important when this war is over that working people should be informed on these subjects, and so be able to take their share in dealing with the problems that will arise. There are also classes in biology, sociology, and literature. The Central London Classes will be found convenient for workers in or near the City. In most of the classes there are some vacancies, and keen students are invited to make application. The fees are nominal. Full information can be obtained from the Organising Secretary of Tutorial Classes, University of London, South Kensington, S.W.

HEROISM OF A BELGIAN PEASANT WOMAN.

The Havre correspondent of the Petit Parisien narrates the story of an old Flemish peasant woman who lavished her care on the soldiers fighting on the Yser around Duedecapelle, remaining under shell-fire for an indefinite period. The Belgian Minister for the Interior has come to the conclusion that no one has merited more than she did the decoration of 1914-15 destined for the reward of acts of striking courage, devotion and humanity. King Albert has just signed a decree by which the Civic Cross of the First Class, 1914-15, is granted to Madame the Widow Debœuf, Marie Thérèse, styled the Joconde of Duedecapelle.

NO INFANTILE MORTALITY.

The small French commune of Villiers le Duc is referred to by Alderman Broadbent, in an article in The Times on the 'Early Notification of Births (Amendment) Act, September 1st, as a place where for ten years together the infantile mortality rate was zero. Not one baby died for ten years, and every child born in that commune was, at the end of ten years, vivant et vigoureux. This he attributes to administrative power, medical skill, and philanthropic zeal. The three elements were fortunately united in one person, for the Mayor of Villiers le Duc was also a doctor, and a man with "heart, head, hand," so the task was perfectly done and crowned with success. The best piece of work hitherto attempted on anything like a national scale for infant welfare is, says Mr. Broadbent, in New Zealand. Owing to the methods set in motion by two remarkable personalities, Lady Plunket and Dr. Truby King, astonishing results have been obtained, the infantile mortality rate having gone down in Dunedin, for example, from the already low rate of 80 per 1,000 to under 40 per 1,000. In this country the mere passing of the Act which has just come into operation will immeasurably strengthen the forces already at work if its possibilities are not allowed to remain latent and unused, and at a time like the present, when death is reaping such a harvest of our best, it is of great importance that public opinion should be educated on the necessity of safeguarding the young lives that come in their place.

IMPORTS WE CAN DO WITHOUT.

The following figures are published by the Women's Economy League in regard to expenditure in this country on more or less unnecessary articles brought from abroad. Nearly £8,000,000 is spent yearly on tobacco; £3,000,000 for skins and furs; £3,500,000 for wines and £1,500,000 for spirits; £1,428,000 for ornamental feathers; and £13,000,000 for silks not needed for industries. Over £7,000,000 is spent on motor-cars, motor-cycles, and cycles, and £4,000,000 for imported petrol; while something like £100,000 goes in fancy sweets, and £21,171 for "Turkish delight" alone. It is useful to keep these facts before us, though, as we have said, we think it scarcely necessary to join a society before beginning to cut down expenses on any articles of luxury which may have tempted us at other times into extravagance.

THE ITALIAN BLUE CROSS.

The work of the Italian Blue Cross, to which we referred a month or two ago, was taken over at the beginning of June by a society specially formed for the purpose to which the Rome Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has handed over all the money collected from Italians. All contributions received by Mr. Leonard Hawksley from English and Americans are being kept and administered by him personally, the Societies having nothing to do with it. "This amounts," he says in a letter to The Animals' Friend, "to £800 received in Rome, £200 received by our Hon. Secretary in England, £1,000 grant from the English Blue Cross, and £3,000 which will be given by Mr. W. W. Astor for a hospital to be erected and maintained in his name under my management. The Italian Army, acting on my suggestions, has 31 field hospitals of its own for 150 horses each, at the various fronts, manned by civilian vets. recalled to the colours. These have hitherto been sufficient as there have been no cavalry actions, all the fighting being on steep mountains, so that the casualties were confined to artillery and transport horses, mules, and oxen."

A MIRACLE WROUGHT BY TEMPERANCE

Mrs. Rosa Newmarch writes very optimistically in the Daily Chronicle on the effects of enforced abstinence in Russia. Human nature being what it is, we must not assume that the craving for drink has been destroyed everywhere because its satisfaction is forbidden, and evidence is not wanting that human ingenuity has been considerably exercised to provide substitutes for the stupefying vodka; but undoubtedly a remarkable change has come over the towns and villages alike of which Mrs. Newmarch is qualified to speak by personal experience. Not only are the people generally more prosperous, more cleanly, and in better health, but they are conscious of the fact, and realise that the royal edict has proved beneficial to them in every way. Among the wealthier folk, such as frequent luxurious restaurants, the improvement is quite as noticeable as among the peasants. Mrs. Newmarch describes a visit to the famous Café de Paris in Petrograd at a time when it was thronged with men of all ages—prosperous business men, Government officials, officers in military and naval uniforms, taking their midday meal. "How indignant they would all have been a year ago," she says, "if they had been told that their appetite would be as good and their digestive functions work as well without a glass or two of vodka with the zakouska and a bottle of wine with the more substantial courses! Yet how 'fit' and cheerful they all looked! Clearer in complexion, trimmer in figure, brighter-eyed than formerly. And the hum of conversation was as convivial as of old. I rubbed my eyes on beholding this first phase of the miracle."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD." WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

TENTERDEN.—FURNISHED HOUSE To Let—Autumn and Winter Months. 2 Reception, 3 Bedrooms, usual offices, hot and cold water, geyser, radiators. Dogs, children, and smokers objected to.—Address B. INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEF BARGAINS! Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size about 14 inches. Bundle of six, 2s. 8d. Postage 2d. Bundle of twelve, 5s. 2d. Postage 3d. Catalogue free.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, September 18, 1915.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3821.
NEW SERIES, No. 924.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

LINDSEY PRESS.

Crown 8vo, 250 pp. 2s. net; by post, 2s. 4d.

Communion of Man with God.
New Handbook of Religion.

By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 96 pp. 1s. 6d. net; Persian morocco, gilt edges,
2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

Handbook for Ministers of Religion.

Services for Baptism, Communion, Marriage
Burial, with Hymns and Readings.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Crown 8vo, 152 pp. 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 9d.

Theology in Scotland.

By ALEXANDER WEBSTER.

Paper covers, 1d.; 5s. per 100.

Hymns in Times of National Crisis.

1d. each; 1s. per 100; by post, 1s. 10d.

Prayers for Use in War Time.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

September

26. Rev. LAWRENCE PEARSALL JACKS, M.A.,
LL.D. (of Manchester College, Oxford).

October

3. Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A. (of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester).

10. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).

17. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

The Evening Services will not be resumed
for the present.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOFFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel
in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON.

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

THE ATHENÆUM

[ESTABLISHED 1828.]

Every FRIDAY. Price Sixpence.

A SPECIMEN COPY WILL BE FORWARDED
POST FREE UPON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF NON-SUBSCRIBING MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS Of London and the South-Eastern Counties

The Twenty-seventh Annual Meeting of the Assembly will be held on TUESDAY, the 5th OCTOBER, 1915,
at the

Unitarian Christian Church, High
Road, Ilford.

The Proceedings will be as follows:—

3.30 P.M. Annual Business Meeting, the Rev. J.
Wood, President of the Assembly, in the Chair.

5.30 P.M. Tea in the Schoolroom.

7.30 P.M. Religious Service. Preacher, the Rev.
A. Farquharson; supporter, the Rev. A. H.
Biggs.

GORDON COOPER, Hon. Sec.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAW-
RENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE,
F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive
4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free
of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on
short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge
low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a
Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
CHRISTMAS TERM begins SEPTEMBER 21.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of
health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matricu-
lation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

MISS ISABEL COLE, L.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE—Theory of Music and Aural
Training. Visiting Music Mistress. Public
School Experience. Registered Examinations.
Receives Private Pupils—Curwen Method.—
9, Holmewood Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

Mrs. LUCAN-DAVIES, M.A.

(Diploma in Education, Liverpool University)
has vacancies for Two Boarders. Thorough
Education. Individual Attention. Healthy
Situation. Fees Moderate. — "Parkhurst," Fields
Road, Newport, Mon.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses.
Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children
in residence. — For particulars apply to HON.
SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCI-ATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street,
Liverpool.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, September 26.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 7, Mr. G. H. FEARN.
 Aolian Hall, New Bond Street, W., 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D. Services will be resumed on Sunday, October 3rd.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. HUGON S. TAYLER, M.A.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. S. FRANKLIN, 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. J. KINSMAN.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, 3, and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.—Harvest Festival Services
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. PIPKIN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A., LL.D.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worpole Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.
 ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Mr. STANLEY P. PENWARDEN.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. E. HAYCOCK.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 DITCHLING, 11.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.—Harvest Festival Services.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. EWART, M.A., B.D.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.—Harvest Thanksgiving Services.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45, and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Mr. H. W. STEPHENSON.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. H. W. HAWKES; 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DR. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.—Harvest Thanksgiving Services. Collections on behalf of the Domestic Mission.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. MATTHEW R. SCOTT.—Harvest Festival Services.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College.—Closed during September.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

DEATHS.

FROST.—On Sept. 19th, at Hull, Eliza, aged 80 years, widow of the late Alfred Frost, of Hull.

LILLEY.—On Sept. 17th, at 8, Peacock Street, Middlesborough, William, the beloved husband of the late Martha Lilley, aged 80 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

USEFUL COMPANION.—To elderly, aged, or partially invalid lady. Housekeeping, needlework, &c. Excellent references. Salary required.—B. E. T., 53, The Cliffe, Lewes.

LADY, having held position as COMPANION for 16 years, desires re-engagement. Highest references.—(Miss) GERTRUDE LEWIS, 3, Hamilton Drive, Nottingham.

WANTED RELIABLE WOMAN for Invalid's House to housekeep, cook—substantial help given.—Office of INQUIRER, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	467	Imports we can do without.	471	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
THE DISASTERS OF IMPATIENCE	469	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	471	Belgian Hospital Fund	473
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	470	MEMORIAL NOTICES:—		Military Training in Schools	474
FRENCH PROTESTANTISM AND THE WAR	470	The Rev. Henry Eachus	472	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	475
CORRESPONDENCE:—		Major John Evans, V.D.	472	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	476
The Doctrine of Immanence	471	Lance-Corporal A. W. Whitehead	473

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE promised our readers a short time ago that we would present them with an audited statement of the accounts of the Belgian Hospital Fund. This promise we are able to redeem to-day. The whole of the financial side of the Fund has been submitted to Mr. P. H. Williams, F.C.A., and his certificate will be found in our present issue. One of the pleasant features of the work from the beginning has been the entire confidence of the contributors in our methods of administration. We have had a few kindly suggestions, but no carping criticism or hints of disapproval, though we have been dealing with large sums of public money. This confidence will be strengthened among people of business habits by our auditor's words of approval. They strengthen our hands in widening our area of appeal and pushing forward the autumn campaign on behalf of the Fund, which has been marked already by such a splendid outburst of generosity.

THE country has accepted the immense burdens of the Budget with a calmness which almost amounts to sang froid. It is the best warning which we can give to Germany of our determination to see the war through to the end without any weakening of purpose. The fact that we can raise this huge sum of money by new taxation must be a source of consternation in financial circles in Berlin, where gambling with the prospects of a war indemnity has become the approved method of backing a loan. For ourselves the remarkable feature of the situation is the disappearance of the clamour of vested interests and of the familiar plea that others ought to be made to pay a larger share. We are not so much concerned with our neighbour as with ourselves, and our own duty to help our country.

* * *

THEN it is clear that the discipline of the war has given a new value to many things and created a fine indifference to money for its own sake which would have startled us a short time ago. We are a commercial people and we have often yielded to the dazzling lure and allowed ourselves to be hard driven by the passion of getting and spending. But all the time we were conscious deep down in our hearts of other and more precious things. These have now come into their own. Freedom, national security, clean affections, right feeling and right doing mean more to every one of us than the money we can spend on ourselves. It does not matter if we are poor; it does matter if we are dishonoured. We know this now, no longer by the hearing of the ear, but in the clear light of inward vision.

* * *

WE are glad that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been so impartial in the distribution of new and increased taxation. It is only right that the broadest backs should bear the heaviest burdens. The rich men of the country are going to be very hard hit. Let us not dismiss their sacrifice from our minds with the cheap remark that they can afford it. Just as with poorer men it means a rigid curtailment of expenditure and a revision of daily habit. All honour to them for the uncomplaining cheerfulness with which they are accepting it. But it is also right that every citizen, however limited his resources may be, should do his share. For this reason we have always looked upon the policy of raising wages so as to cover all loss due to the war with a good deal of suspicion. It is contrary to the highest interests of the country at a time of crisis that any large body of citizens should be exempt from the necessity of only smoking one pipe where they smoked two before. The new taxation put into human terms means simply this, that all of us must devote a large amount of our labour every day to the defence of the commonwealth, who is the mother of us all, and not to our private needs.

* * *

BUT what is to become of our charities and all the good enterprises which have been supported for the most part by the margin of wealth which is left after our own wants have been supplied? Probably some of them will be the first to suffer. Others will have to begin a régime of rigid economy and to dismiss all thought of innocent luxuries. But we are not uneasy about the philanthropy of the country as a whole. It is not at all likely to collapse, for it has too firm a place in our affections. There is nothing which is still so secure in its religious sanction. We should be afraid to face ourselves, if we suddenly proclaimed the bankruptcy of Christian charity in order to maintain the familiar level of comfort in our own homes. For our own readers we know that warnings of this kind are quite superfluous. We are a people with a tradition of philanthropy in our blood. Simple tastes have often gone hand in hand with ample means. We are ashamed of self-indulgence. The religion of doing good has never been a matter of the small surplus we can spare. It is such an intimate part of ourselves that we could not live with any self-respect without it.

* * *

THE one proposal in the Budget which has been met with a good deal of criticism is the abolition of the half-penny post. As a war penalty, from the point of view of widespread inconvenience, something may be said for it, and possibly Mr. McKenna will be able to justify it on purely financial grounds as well. But for the present we view it rather doubtfully. It robs the community of an easy method of intercourse, to which it has become firmly wedded, without any adequate increase of revenue, for it seems likely that a large part of the half-penny post will automatically cease. Possibly it will have its compensations. When the picture postcard habit has been killed we may recover the pleasure of receiving letters from our friends.

* * *

TURKEY is carrying on her usual policy of extermination against the Armenians. Information which has recently come to hand shows that the familiar method of massacre is being employed at the present time with a ferocity which puts previous horrors into the shade. Lord Bryce has written a letter to Mr. Aneurin Williams giving a brief statement of the facts, which ought to be widely known :—

The massacres of this year have [he says] gone far beyond even those of 1895-96. The accounts which have now found their way to Western Europe—accounts coming from different sources but agreeing with one another, and as to whose substantial truth there can be no doubt—prove that over the whole of Eastern and Northern Asia Minor and Armenia the whole Christian population is being deliberately exterminated. The men of military age have been killed. The younger women have been seized for Turkish harems, compelled to become Mohammedans, and kept, sometimes with their children, also forcibly converted, in virtual slavery. The rest of the inhabitants, old men, women, and children, have been torn from their homes and driven away under convoys of Turkish soldiers, largely composed of released criminals, some into unhealthy parts of Asia Minor, some into the deserts between Syria and the Euphrates. Many die or are murdered on the way; all perish sooner or later....No greater injury could be done to the country than to destroy the most intelligent and industrious and educated part of its population, but for that the reckless and ruthless men who now control Turkey do not care.

THE condition of things in Trebizond is described in the following passage :—

In Trebizond, a city where the Armenians, numbering more than 10,000 persons, had dwelt in peace with their Muslim neighbours, orders came from Constantinople to seize all the Armenians. Many of their kindly neighbours tried to hide or protect them, but in vain. The troops hunted them all out, drove them to the shore, placed them in sailing boats, took them out to sea, threw them overboard and drowned them all, men, women, and children. Resistance was impossible, for the younger men had been carried off to the army, and the rest were unarmed. This was seen, and is described by the Italian Consul. How many have perished over the whole country no one can tell. Some seem to have saved their lives by professing to accept Islam, and about 250,000 are said to have escaped across the frontier into Russian territory. But a far greater number, perhaps half a million, have been slaughtered or deported, and the deported are all fast dying of ill-treatment, disease, and starvation, while the massacres still go on.

* * *

LORD BRYCE's letter has been published in the American press in order to focus American public opinion upon the subject. None of the Allied Powers at war with Turkey have the slightest influence. It is Germany alone who can put pressure upon her to stop these massacres, and the only chance of appealing to Germany on the subject is through the conscience of neutral nations. Probably Lord Bryce himself has only a very slender hope that anything will be done. In times of peace Germany has consistently turned a deaf ear to the cry of misery. She has done nothing to protect the weak or to protest in the name of justice against hideous wrong. Outraged humanity has no meaning in her political vocabulary unless it can be used as a counter in her selfish game. Armenian massacres probably have a necessary place in her Welt-politik, and there would be more than a touch of irony if, with her own hands red from massacre in Belgium, she were to protest against similar frightfulness in Asiatic Turkey. This is the terrible fact which confronts us night and day, the existence of this insensate lust of power, which simply does not care and laughs all our humanitarian dreams to scorn. If Germany had willed it so in the past we might have co-operated as guardians of the rights of humanity in various parts of the globe, where the weak and the oppressed look to the strong for help. It is hardly too much to say that if she had done so there would have been no war, for it would have been a fatal blow to her cult of ferocious strength, and the deliverance of her own people into a larger and saner world.

MR. MARK H. JUDGE has sent us a copy of Mr. J. Lewis Paton's address at the British Association on 'Military Training in Schools,' with a request that we should publish it. We are glad to do so in order that our readers may have an opportunity of considering its criticisms and suggestions, though we agree with Mr. Paton's opening remark that the time is inopportune for the public discussion of the subject. Our minds are pre-occupied with other things, and we lack the knowledge of facts, which can only emerge when the war is over and yet must form an essential part of the problem. The result is that Mr. Paton says little that is new. Except for a phrase here and there his paper might almost have been written in the days before the war. That we are convinced is a mistake, and it is one into which some ardent idealists are very liable to fall. We cannot simply pick up our social or religious schemes of a year ago and impose them upon entirely novel conditions when the war is over. The world is changing every day, and we are changing with it. We shall have to look at most things from a new angle of vision. This is true above all of the young men, who have never been in bondage to the phrases of old controversies. Their idealism is still fluid and they will not judge all things, as some of us are still inclined to do, by the political loyalties or the social doctrines of the past.

* * *

WE are sorry to find Mr. Paton using the familiar warning against the dangers of Prussian militarism in our own country. It is rhetoric and not thought, and everybody who listens to phrases of this kind knows how hollow they are and how little they help us to a clear understanding of our own duty. We have our own grave dangers, but they are not of the Prussian order, and they never will be until England cuts herself adrift from her history or is conquered by the German army. At present, let us confess it, we are completely in the dark about military needs after the war. We may have to remain armed for self-defence against the German menace, if it only sinks into uneasy slumber and is not destroyed, or we may emerge spent but victorious into the brighter day when all men will think less of their armies and more of the life of the people. Meanwhile it would be well to keep the problem of the school entirely separate from the general political question. In countries which are far more thoroughly organised for war than we are the boys are not turned into miniature soldiers. Military training comes afterwards, at the proper age.

THE DISASTERS OF IMPATIENCE.

WHEN the war began many people with political foresight and military knowledge warned us that it would be a long war. It was freely stated that Lord Kitchener reckoned on three years. Sir Edward Grey had spoken repeatedly of the menace of a European conflagration in terms which left no doubt of his own belief that the struggle, when it came, would be long and terrible. But we could not really grasp it. The whole thing was so strange to our experience. A few months of hot fighting, leading to a triumphant peace, that is what most of us hoped that it would be. And so we sent our young men across the sea to win the war, while we stayed at home, going about our business as usual in the full expectation that life would soon drop back into its ordinary routine. This mood had its temporary use. It kept the country dignified and calm during the difficult period of transition, while the new army was being trained, and it enabled us to advance right into the centre of the storm with extraordinary cheerfulness and brimful of confidence. But it did not fortify our hearts with patience for the agony of disappointment and of apparently wasted effort, the long swaying to and fro of forces too evenly matched, which must be the lot of all who engage in a long war.

Now that our first illusions are gone and we see the war for the terrible upheaval that it is and know that its mighty issues are still in the balance, many of us are becoming the victims of nervous reaction. We do not accept bad news as cheerfully as we used to do. We fall more readily into moods of anxiety and depression. "Why has it all happened just in this way?" we exclaim. "Could it not have been prevented? Our methods must be wrong, or some one has blundered." And so like most angry people we look for a scapegoat to scold, or put our faith in remedies violent enough to match our own impatience. We have not to look far for illustrations of this temper. It does not mean that we are losing our faith in the cause or are lapsing into the mood of moral feebleness and incapacity, which questions its righteousness. With every month that passes conscience becomes more invincible on that point. But none the less we may be weakening the common stock of energy and lowering the national capacity for willing sacrifice, if we dwell too much among the shadows, speaking a great deal of our faults and shortcomings and little of our achievements, or prophesying certain disaster if our advice is not adopted to-morrow.

Of course, no sane man wants to be buoyed up by false hopes. If there is any one who still thinks that everything is going well and he need do nothing, we do not mind what rude methods are adopted to shake him out of his selfish optimism. But most of us have heard a good deal of serious news lately and do not need these drastic remedies. We want the tonic of encouragement which will give us staying power and help us to put forth stronger effort. It would be of far greater value to us than anything else at this difficult moment, as we wait for decisive events and strain our eyes to read the secrets of the future. Every man in the country has got to do his best and to put the whole of his strength into the struggle. It is on the methods we are to adopt to secure this result that we differ from some of our public mentors who, in their impatience to get things done, seem to forget some of the elementary facts of human nature.

Is it better, for instance, to scold men as unprofitable servants or to encourage them with a just appreciation of what they have already done, if you want to get the maximum of effort out of them? If we are to judge from the reports which appear in some of our newspapers and the strong emphasis which is laid upon every element of anxiety or failure, we should conclude that as yet we of the British stock have done nothing worth speaking of, while our Allies, in the midst of their own superhuman efforts, regard us with reproachful surprise. Everybody knows that this is not true. The fashion of national belittlement, which has nothing to say in praise of the new armies and forgets to mention such a small item as the navy, is one of the rhetorical devices of impatience. In its anxiety to overtake the time that has been lost, it sounds the tocsin of patriotism and tries to rush the country into feverish activity. But it is only heading for disaster; for instead of rallying a united people it makes tens of thousands of men sullen and resentful. They know what they have done already both in the workshop and the army and the protection of the seas; and they will do more as the demand rises, to the utmost limit of their strength; but it must be under the stimulus of encouragement and just appreciation and generous appeals to their loyalty. Here the lash of impatient censure can only bring disaster. Even in war we must take time to win men, if we would achieve the best results.

Moreover the cult of depression is in itself a prescription of defeat. We can be quite serious and look the truth plainly in the face without losing our cheerfulness; at least we know of no facts which forbid us to do so at the present time. The rhetoric of alarm, the device of giving the place of honour to evil news, the suspicion that something is wrong because the movement of the war does not keep pace with our impatience, all this is a sign of weakness. It is indeed natural that men should be more serious and talk more gravely than they did at the beginning of the war, for they carry a heavier weight of care, and sorrow has bitten deep into their souls. Let it also be granted that hard experience has taught us many lessons, and we have made our share of mistakes. But the cause remains the same, unfading in its glory; and already we have accomplished great things for its sake. We advance inch by inch and step by step, like the fighting in Gallipoli, towards our goal. The one thing we have to guard against is failure of nerve. When cheerfulness goes vitality goes, and with it the compelling sense that our duty is our privilege.

Already the young men of the second year are pressing forward to take their place. Let them feel what their brothers felt a year ago, the beauty and the sacredness of the cause in which they serve. For them too the war must have its glory of romance. No worse evil could flow from any taint of impatience or dull complaining in ourselves than that they should contract the same crippling disease. Whatever practical steps may be taken by politicians, it still remains the first duty of all of us whose eyes are fixed upon the spiritual issues of the conflict to feed the flame of a noble ardour, to encourage men to yield themselves willingly to the call to serve, and to bid them keep their hearts with all diligence, lest by impatience or despondency, or some other weakness of the flesh or spirit, they should injure their own powers of resistance and refuse the clear call of God to fight with a cheerful courage for freedom and goodness to the last ounce of their strength and the last drop of their blood. There are occasions when the disasters of impatience, springing as they do from some root of moral failure in ourselves, may be only a few degrees less ignoble than the calm neutrality, which simply looks on when the lists are set between good and evil.

Good Thoughts for Ebil Times.

THE BATTLE AUTUMN.

THE flags of war like storm-birds fly,
The charging trumpets blow ;
Yet rolls no thunder in the sky,
No earthquake strives below.

And calm and patient Nature keeps
Her ancient promise well,
Though o'er her bloom and greenness sweeps
The battle's breath of hell.

And still she walks in golden hours
Through harvest-happy farms,
And still she wears her fruit and flowers:
Like jewels on her arms.

What mean the gladness of the plain,
This joy of eve and morn,
The mirth that shakes the b. ard of grain
And yellow locks of corn ?

Ah ! eyes may well be full of tears,
And hearts with hate are hot ;
But even-paced come round the years,
And Nature changes not.

She meets with smiles our bitter grief
With songs our groans of pain ;
She mocks with tint of flower and leaf
The war-field's crimson stain.

Still, in the cannon's pause, we hear
Her sweet thanksgiving-psalm ;
Too near to God for doubt or fear,
She shares the eternal calm.

She knows the seed lies safe below
The fires that blast and burn ;
For all the tears of blood we sow
She waits the rich return.

She sees with clearer eyes than ours
The good of suffering born—
The hearts that blossom like her flowers,
And ripen like her corn.

Oh, give to us, in times like these,
The vision of her eyes ;
And make her fields and fruited trees
Our golden prophecies !

Oh, give to us her finer ear !
Above this stormy din,
We too would hear the bells of cheer
Ring peace and freedom in.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

OUR CITIZENSHIP IS IN HEAVEN.

Socrates.—The man of understanding will look at the city which is within him, and take heed that no disorder occur in it such as might arise either from superfluity or from want, and upon this principle he will regulate his property, and gain or spend according to his means. . . . And for the same reason he will gladly accept and enjoy such honours as he deems likely to make him a better man ; but those, whether private or public, which are likely to disorder his life, he will avoid.

Glaucon.—Then if that be his motive, he will not be a statesman.

Socrates.—By the dog of Egypt, he will ! in the city which is his own he certainly will, though in the land of his birth perhaps not, unless he have a divine call.

Glaucon.—I understand ; you mean that he will be a ruler in the city of which we are the founders, and which exists in idea only, for I do not believe there is such an one anywhere on earth.

Socrates.—In heaven, I replied, there is laid up a pattern of it, methinks, which he who desires may behold, and beholding, may take up his abode there. But whether such an one exists or ever will exist in fact is no matter ; for he will live after the manner of that city, having nothing to do with any other.

Glaucon.—I think so, he said.

THE REPUBLIC OF PLATO.

O LORD, I offer and present unto thee myself and all that is mine—my deeds and words—my rest and my silence. Only, O Lord, do thou take me and lead me. Move my hand and my mind and my tongue to those things which are well pleasing in thy sight, and turn me from all things from which thou wouldest have me abstain.

Almighty God, Father of all Mercies, I bless thee for my creation, preservation, and for all the blessings of this life. And, I beseech thee, give me that due sense of all thy mercies, that my heart may be unfeignedly thankful, and that I show forth thy praise, not only with my lips, but in my life ; by giving up myself to thy service, and by walking before thee in holiness and righteousness all my days. Amen.

FRENCH PROTESTANTISM AND THE WAR.

ONE finds it in one's heart to envy France many things these days, all pertaining to her manner of rising to her supreme moment. We, too, speaking broadly, have met our crisis well ; the soul of the British Empire is heroic, self-sacrificing, fervent, faithful. But the soul is silent, and unfortunately it is often obscured to ourselves and to the world by other things which are essentially not silent : " Words, words, words " of selfishment and disagreement, by the voices of those " little folk " as Punch says, " just voices, nothing more " who " . . . give us words in lieu of deeds, Content to blather while their country bleeds,"

and make a noise quite out of proportion to their importance. The same tremendous thing which has struck the finer souls into silence strikes the smaller into frantic self-advertisement, the coarser into a rush after profits. It is much safer to generalise about France and the war than about ourselves and the war. To France this appalling strife forced upon her (for to the pioneer spirit of France war was already a thing almost unthinkable, a product of the ancestral imagination) made two grand revelations : one the revelation of the Native Land, the land of the vision of Jeanne d'Arc in the old world and of Maurice Barrès and his school in the new, the land which is home and family and ancestry and country, not symbolically only or poetically, but actually and vitally, so that every clod of her earth and every stone of her towns, become preciously fraught with the past and prophetic—more than ever prophetic, for France has ever been the prophet of the nations—of the future ; the land quivering under a violation which pollutes and from which she must be washed clean even if all her young sons have to die for her and her clean ing ; and the other the revelation of a New Idealism which has killed old party Pendant la Guerre : Discours prononcés à l'Oratoire. Deuxième Edition. Paris, Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue de Seine.

strifes and swept away old animosities. The feeling of these things thrills through a little book of selected sermons, "Pendant la Guerre," preached at the Oratoire by the Pasteurs Wilfred Monod, J. E. Roberty and Charles Wagner. Only yesterday France seemed impatient of preaching; not so much from scepticisms, for at heart she is ever an idealist, as because her secret soul demanded (so Abbé Dimnet declares) that preaching should belong only to deep religiousness, and it was folly to look for inspiration from recipes. Now she knows that the preacher has a case to state, and that his whole soul is involved in stating it, and she knows besides that the whole background of her struggle to the death is an ideal and religious one. So once more she listens, and once more her preachers preach to hearers and preach as they never preached before. Once more she knows and they know that "nothing except faith will do for a whole existence, above all for the existence of a nation," and that self-sacrifice and religion are one and the same.

To those who are accustomed to English preaching, and to preachers who know little personally of the Calvaries of war by invasion, the passion and agony of these sermons will be a strange thing. The speakers know where we surmise and experience where we speculate; they have seen and felt where we try with more or less success to imagine. They have sat waiting for the day of doom to dawn to-morrow. They have no time therefore for the amiable sentimentalism rife among us which is more concerned about the mild "reactions" we make to barbarism than the dread outbreak in life and the world of barbarism itself. These men have seen its monstrous claw reach to their very threshold, and they see its devilish weight still crushing their land. Their words come out of feeling, not their feeling out of words. They know what happens when brute force is placed on the pedestal where other nations have placed moral force, and we may be thankful that such men are our allies.

Monod's sermon on Psalm xx., 8, is a very noble utterance on the ultimate weight of spiritual force as opposed to material in the balances of human history. A part of this spiritual force for him is the spirit of indignation.

"I do not say," he declares, "the spirit of anger, of vengeance, of hate, I say the spirit of indignation, impelled by reason and by the conscience. What! This France of ours humbled half a century ago, but humbled salutarily, consenting to all sacrifice of personal ambitions for the sake of European peace—from the Atlantic to the Urals there was not a nation that had any reason to fear her offensive; at the Hague tribunal she was the first and the most ardent in laying down terms of international arbitration. And without warning, without provocation, immense armies are massed on her frontiers, her land is violated, solemn treaties are torn to pieces, neutral rights are trampled under foot—and all in order to strike at Paris more quickly and more surely! Our fellow citizens are shot before declaration of war, our towns are selected for the concentration of the enemy reservists. And from Perpignan to Dunkirk, from Brest to Nancy, France with one bound sprang to her feet. And all of us, all of us, hand in hand, in body or in soul, all together and unanimous, we marched towards the frontier. The historians will tell it all in the days to come: Not an explosion of anger—we did not see red—but a holy wrath which gave us wings. And we are the champions of the human cause; other nations have their distinctive personality, special qualities which are lacking in us; but our peculiar mission it is to propagate in the world those eternal principles of liberty, justice, fraternity, which make the intangible Decalogue of modern times."

This is not "the faculty of easy anger;" it is deep anger justified by the universe and by the Spirit. And if M. Monod is convincing when he sees the spirit of high indignation as a part of the moral glory of France, he is yet more inspiring in his fine estimate of the spirit of sacrifice which is making her a completely new factor in the history of the nations.

All these addresses breathe this unconquerable faith in France, in her peaceful mission in the world, in her heroes and her heroism, in her ideals, in those everlasting principles which are lifting her above wrongs and hate and hating into the ampler ether, the diviner air of the vision of spiritual truth. The men who preached these sermons believe in France, and so tend to raise her even if she were low to the heights of their belief. But they know that suddenly she "has ears to hear in the silence and eyes to see the invisible," and that only in the imponderable things will she—and the world groaning under a curse with her—find salvation. This is more or less the assertion, more or less convincingly made, by all religion; but the Protestant preachers in France are saying it in words that burn. And—such is the irony of things—it is Germany, the apostle of materialism and of brute force that has thrust into their hands anew "la clé de la vie."

F. ROBERTS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE DOCTRINE OF IMMANENCE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Capelton in his interesting and informing letter, suggests that I regard the doctrine of Immanence as a failure. This is not so. It is the New Theology that I spoke of as a failure, and this not because it taught Immanence, but because it identified God's Immanence in the world with his self-revelation through the world. Tennyson's 'Flower in the crannied wall' is a most beautiful statement of the truth of the matter:

the poet does not say that the flower reveals God; indeed he suggests that it does not: "if I could understand," &c. The New Theology said: "Jesus is God and so are you"—it identified immanence and self-revelation. The declaration of the Wesleyan President quoted by Mr. Capleton is only another illustration of the loose use of the conception of immanence, for the President actually thinks that his acceptance of immanence justifies him in speaking of Jesus as "perfect God and perfect man." A similar case is that of Dr. Sanday, who has recently said (Modern Churchman, June) that our belief in immanence prepares us for the idea of supernatural birth, i.e., the incarnation. Other writers connect immanence with the sub-conscious. So the confusions multiply until a careful writer like Mr. McGiffert, in Hasting's Dictionary of Religion and Ethics, seems inclined to despair of finding any solid kernel in the conception at all. Yet it is too valuable a thought to be abandoned.—Yours, &c.

W. WHITAKER.

Manchester, September 22, 1915.

IMPORTS WE CAN DO WITHOUT.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The Women's War Economy League is much obliged to you for the valuable aid you have given the movement by calling attention to the vast sums being spent by the nation upon articles, which are not necessities of life, imported from abroad. You add that it is scarcely necessary to join a society before beginning to cut down expenses on any article of luxury. In that view we all cordially agree. But if this League had not been formed, and had not received the large amount of influential support being given to it, the facts which you say it is useful to keep before us might not have been made public, or only have been published in ways which would not have attracted general attention.

Combination and co-operation are of the first importance in furthering any movement. That simple fact of experience is adequate explanation why ladies are urged to join the War Economy League.—Yours, &c.

CHARLES C. OSBORNE,

Hon. Organising Secretary,
Women's War Economy League.

36, Denison House, Westminster, S.W.

September 22, 1915.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN:—The Elementary Forms of Religious Life: Emile Durkheim. 15s. net. Fatigue: A. Mosso. 2s. 6d. net.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY:—The Book and the Sword.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co.:—Attila and the Huns: Edward Hutton. 6s. net. The Field of Honour: H. Fielding Hall. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & Co.:—The Holy Spirit in Thought and Experience: Thomas Rees. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co.:—The Church and the New Knowledge: E. M. Caillard. 2s. 6d. net. Conduct and the Supernatural: L. S. Thornton. 7s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—The Pentecost of Calamity: Owen Wister. 2s. net. The Research Magnificent: H. G. Wells. 6s.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Birth-Time of the World: J. Jolly. 10s. 6d. net. Irish Orators and Oratory: Essays and Poems: Thomas Davis; Legends of Saints and Sinners, translated by Douglas Hyde; Humours of Irish Life: Wild Sports of the West: W. H. Maxwell; The Book of Irish Poetry (Every Irishman's Library, 2s. 6d. net each).

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co. have in the press for early publication 'Day by Day with the Russian Army,' by Bernard Pares, Official British Observer with the Russian armies in the field. Prof. Pares, who has for a long time been amongst the most prominent workers in the direction of an Anglo-Russian Entente, has been attached to the Russian General Staff, and has seen the fighting in Galicia during the most critical months of the war, both during the advance and retirement of the Russian forces, not from the capital, not only from headquarters, but also from the actual fighting line. Mr. Pares gives a most vivid description of the campaign, not only engrossing in itself, but of the highest historical value.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. HENRY EACHUS.

WE regret to announce the death of the Rev. Henry Eachus, for forty-seven years minister of the Old Meeting House, Coseley, which took place on September 12th at the age of 89. Mr. Eachus, who was the second son of the late James Eachus, a leading educationalist in the district in which he lived, was born at Hurdfield, in the parish of Prestbury, Cheshire, on February 19th, 1826. At an early age he was articled to Messrs. J. and T. Brocklehurst, silk manufacturers, of Macclesfield, with whom he remained until the age of 30 years. Ever desirous of acquiring knowledge he devoted his evenings to studying, attending several classes in the Mechanics Institute in Macclesfield. In his earlier life he engaged in Sunday School work amongst the Wesleyans, but eventually joined himself to the little band of Unitarians worshipping in King Edward Street, Macclesfield. Here he found a congenial religious home and was brought into close contact with the late Rev. John Wright, the minister of the chapel. He engaged in missionary work in the town and occasionally conducted the religious services in the chapel.

Acting on the advice of his minister, he resigned the position he occupied in the silk trade and entered the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, Manchester. At the end of the curriculum of three years, he received an invitation to the post of Missionary to the Poor in Belfast. During his ministry the work of the mission prospered, and a new building, to be used as a Day and Sunday School, and a room for public worship were built in Stanhope Street. In the year 1862 he left Belfast to undertake the charge of the new church and school at Pudsey, near Leeds, where he remained for nearly three years. Receiving a cordial invitation from the Trustees and Congregation of the Old Meeting House, Coseley, he settled there in 1865, and remained the minister to the congregation until his resignation owing to failing health in 1912. Thus terminated a ministry of forty-seven years, notable in many respects. During this period a new school was built in which Mr. Eachus superintended the work of a day school for several years; and, principally as a result of his painstaking efforts, coupled with much personal self-sacrifice, the present beautiful Gothic chapel was erected.

He was also actively engaged in philanthropic, educational, civic, and Liberal political movements. He had to do with the formation of the Sedgley School Board, and was a member of it for many years. On the establishment of the Coseley Urban District Council he was returned at the head of the poll, and elected Vice-Chairman, and afterwards Chairman of the Council.

In July, 1899, on the occasion of the centenary of the founding of the Sunday School, a medal was issued in commemoration of the event, and also in recognition of the faithful, consistent, and self-sacrificing ministry of Mr. Eachus, which, at that time, had extended over thirty-four years. On the completion of forty years in the ministry, he was the recipient of a purse of gold and an illuminated address testifying to the high esteem in which he was held by the members of his congregation and other friends in the district. The interment took place on Saturday last at Coseley Old Meeting House; the Revs. A. H. Shelley, of Cradley, and W. G. Topping (resident minister) conducting the service. Among the congregation were representatives of the District Council and Education Committee, the local police, boy scouts, who attended with muffled drums, and other public bodies. After the close of the evening service in the Old Meeting House last Sunday, a resolution of condolence with the relatives of the deceased was carried in silence. At the parish church and several of the Nonconformist chapels in the district tributes were also paid to his memory.

MAJOR JOHN EVANS, V.D.

THE Ullet Road Church, Liverpool, has lost another valued member of long standing in the person of the late Major Evans. He was by profession a consulting engineer, and in that capacity held a position in the service of the Liverpool Corporation, but retired many years ago. He was connected with many of the Building Societies of Liverpool, and was for some years a Director of the Liverpool Investment Building Society. From the first he was a very enthusiastic supporter of the early Volunteer movement, and became Major of the First Lancashire Engineers. Towards the close of his career he was among the first recipients of the Victoria Decoration, accorded to him in recognition of his long service as an officer of Engineers.

Of nothing in the course of his life was he more proud than his long association with the Renshaw Street congregation, of which he became a member in 1853. It is a singular fact that he was in turn a trustee of Benn's Gardens Chapel, of Renshaw Street Chapel, and of Ullet Road Church. After the opening of Renshaw Street Chapel in 1811, the Benn's Gardens Chapel became the property of a congregation of Welsh Wesleyans, who worshipped therein until 1866, when they migrated to Shaw Street. Major Evans and his relatives were members of Benn's Gardens Wesleyan Chapel, and though he adopted broader views and joined the Renshaw Street congregation in 1853, he was appointed four years later a trustee of the Chapel in which he had ceased to be an habitual worshipper. He was always a loyal friend and supporter of the ministers under whom he sat, whether at Renshaw Street or at Ullet Road, and was not slow to aid them by his advice and sympathy. Of his association with Dr. Charles Beard he always spoke in glowing terms; in his ministrations he found every need more than satisfied; in his words he found always an inspiring power. Major Evans was never absent from the services in Renshaw Street Chapel if he could help it. It was his boast—and it was a true one—that he had heard every sermon which Mr. Beard preached within those walls, nay, that he was himself a better attender than Mr. Beard, for while his pastor was usually absent for a few weeks in the summer or autumn, he never went from home, and was always to be found in his pew on Sundays, winter or summer, warm or cold, wet or dry, morning or evening. It is no wonder that his fellow-worshippers were not slow to honour him for his steadfast fidelity to the ideals which they all held in common; he was made not only a trustee but a warden of the congregation, and for thirty years discharged every duty with diligence. When he retired from that position a gathering of members and friends was held to express their high appreciation of his services, and a sum of money was presented, which, however, he refused to accept, but handed it to the officers of the Ullet Road Sunday School to form a prize fund for senior boys and girls. To receive a Major Evans Prize is at present the highest distinction attainable by a member of the Sunday School.

After a four years' slow decline, Major Evans died on September 13th in his 83rd year. Before the interment in the Smithdown Road Cemetery on September 16th a service was held in Ullet Road Church which was largely attended by relatives, friends, and deputations of public bodies. In his address the Rev. J. C. Odgers referred to the staunch and manly qualities of the deceased, to his opposition to what he considered the follies and superstitions of the age, as well as to his kindly heart, his generous nature, and quick compassion. He loved to do good by stealth, and many in Liverpool would be the poorer for his demise. At Ullet Road he would be greatly missed. In our congregations there were not many who for a period of sixty-two years had sustained a connection marked by such loyalty of spirit and goodness of heart.

LANCE-CORPORAL A. W. WHITE-HEAD.

WE regret to announce that Lance-Corporal A. W. Whitehead, of the 1/11 Battalion London Regiment (Finsbury Rifles), was killed in action at the Dardanelles on August 31st, at the age of 29. He was formerly a member of the Lord Street Unitarian Chapel, Oldham, but for some years had made his home with the Rev. J. A. and Mrs. Pearson in London, to whom he owed all that friendship and unfailing sympathy can give. After a period of doubt and anxiety his robust and kindly nature recovered a deep interest in religion, and he began to throw himself with energy into religious work. For a time he acted as assistant secretary to the London District Unitarian Society, and the congregation at Leytonstone owed much to his active help. Several reports from his pen of meetings in London have appeared in our own columns. When the war broke out he was at the beginning of a happy business career, but he saw the national issue clearly and he knew where his duty lay. He was among the first to join the Army, in simple-minded devotion to his country and the outraged cause of liberty. On March 10th Mr. Whitehead was married to Emily Winifred, daughter of the late James Lonsdale Cox, of Halifax, a sister of Mrs. J. A. Pearson. With her and with Mr. and Mrs. Pearson the deepest sympathy will be felt in a bereavement which touches them all so closely.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

AUDITOR'S STATEMENT.

RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS ACCOUNT FOR THE EIGHT MONTHS ENDED AUGUST 31st, 1915.

	£	s.	d.
To Surgical Instruments ..	1,093	16	1
„ Hospital Equipment ..	1,352	12	11
„ Drugs and Dressings ..	508	19	7
„ Clothing ..	590	13	4
„ Motors, Accessories and Upkeep ..	521	3	8
„ Maintainances of Civilian Hospices ..	137	0	0
„ Packing ..	91	14	6
„ Carriage ..	151	9	9
„ Bank Charges ..		5	0
„ Balance—	£	s.	d.
At Bank as per Pass Book	1,272	1	3
In the hands of representative at Calais	13	0	0
Contributions paid in on Sept. 1st	67	3	0
	1,352	4	3

By Donations received £5,798 19 1

To the Donors.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I report that I have examined the above statement and find it in order. The receipts are in accordance with the official acknowledgements published weekly in THE INQUIRER. The payments have been allocated by the Organiser, who has produced to me all vouchers and documents, and has given me all the explanations I have required. The items for Packing and Carriage include considerable charges in connection with the handling of specific gifts of clothes and medical appliances. No charges have been debited to the Fund for travelling, printing, stationery, postage or clerical work, all of which have been privately met.

PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.,

Hon. Auditor.

London, 31, Cophall Avenue, E.C.

September 18, 1915.

STATEMENT OF LIABILITIES.

THE whole of the balance in the bank on September 1st, amounting to £1,352 4s. 3d., was needed to cover the cost of liabilities already incurred. In addition to large special needs which have to be met from time to time regular monthly lists are sent in from about sixty hospitals, and the upkeep of the hospice for refugees costs £20 a month.

VALUE OF GIFTS IN KIND.

It is only possible to put an approximate value upon the large quantities of clothing, surgical instruments and other gifts in kind which have been received, but at a moderate estimate it must be reckoned at not less than £5,000. This sum must be added to the subscriptions in order to arrive at the grand total of the Fund.

ROSE ALLEN,

14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

September 18, 1915.

36TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	6,677	0	5
Mrs. Megson ..	1	0	0
Miss Astley ..	5	0	0
“Anon.” (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. E. E. Burridge (third donation) ..	1	10	0
Mr. T. Fielding Johnson (second donation) ..	5	5	0
Miss A. E. Winkworth (fourth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mr. C. A. Pease (second donation) ..	10	0	0
Mr. J. Atherton Parkyn ..	10	0	0
Mr. John Tinkler ..	10	0	0
Dr. Frances Hoggan (second donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss R. Nettlefold (fourth donation) ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Caird ..	10	10	0
Mr. J. W. Belfield ..	4	0	0
Mrs. E. E. Dendy ..	5	0	0
J. G. F. ..	1	0	0
M. and H. W. (second donation) ..	3	3	0
Mrs. Arthur Carey ..	5	10	0
Mrs. Aneurin Williams ..	2	2	0
Miss Cooke ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Normington ..	10	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Miss S. Silson (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. J. Teal (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Miss Emily Henderson (third donation) ..	2	0	0
Mrs. Gresswell ..	5	0	0
“Liverpoolian” (fourth donation) ..	50	0	0
Miss C. Scott (fourth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Eveleigh (third donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss L. A. Russell (second donation) ..	2	2	0
The Rev. Henry Gow ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Mathews (second donation) ..	10	0	0
The Misses Guildford (third donation) ..	5	0	0
The Rev. W. C. Compton ..	1	0	0
Miss Dorothy Moggridge (third donation) ..	2	0	0
Miss F. Booth-Scott (sixth donation) ..	1	1	0
Mr. John White (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Anne, Lady Scott ..	5	0	0
Mr. John Wray (second donation) ..	2	6
Mr. Wm. D. Cliff ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Russell Scott (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Mr. Alfred Clarke ..	1	1	0
Mrs. Jeremy (second donation) ..	3	0	0
Mr. Chas. Booth, jun. (third donation) ..	10	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (ninth monthly donation) ..	20	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. David ..	1	1	0
Mr. Arthur Wheatley (second donation) ..	10	0
Mr. Chas. H. Bache (third donation) ..	1	1	0
Ilford Unitarian Christian Church Harvest Festival collection, per Mr. C. Syer	3	0	0
Mr. J. F. Grundy ..	10	0
Miss B. Shipman (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss Gaskell (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Miss E. M. Gaskell (second donation) ..	5	0	0
A Friend, Oxford (fourth donation) ..	10	10	0
“In Memoriam W. and R.” (fourth donation) ..	10	10	0
Mrs. Smyth (second donation) ..	1	1	0
Mr. C. Reynolds (fourth donation) ..	10	0
The Misses Fletcher ..	2	0	0
Miss E. Eiloart (second donation) ..	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. W. Dearden ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. A. Dufton (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Louise Brunner ..	10	10	0
Mr. W. E. Mullins ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Stroesiger ..	5	0	0
Mrs. T. A. Day (second donation) ..	1	1	0
The Misses Moffat ..	1	0	0
Benevolent Fund of the Memorial Church Sunday School, Liscard, per Mrs. F. Hill (second donation) ..	10	6
Mrs. Cobb (fourth donation) ..	1	1	0
Miss F. Rathbone ..	5	5	0
Mr. J. C. Ledlie (fourth donation) ..	1	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Miss Eilse	1	0	0
Mr. C. Sydney Jones (third donation)	25	0	0
Mrs. Shearman (second donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Jones	5	0	0
Mrs. E. Hecht (third donation)	3	3	0
Miss Prance (third donation)	5	0	0
Mr. A. G. Pritchard	1	0	0
Miss Kirkpatrick (second donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Thew (second donation)	1	0	0
Master Henry Thew (5½ years old)		7
Mr. John S. Swann (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. W. Frank Price (second donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Lawson	1	1	0
Mrs. Taylor (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. T. Grosvenor Lee	5	0	0
A. J. A., Deal (seventh donation)	5	0
Miss A. L. Hargrove	10	0
Miss Glead (second donation)	1	0
Mrs. J. T. Osler (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss Corfield	2	2	0
Miss Margaret Ashton (second donation)	25	0	0
Miss G. E. Rendall (second donation)	5	0
Mrs. Renold (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Ogden	1	0	0
Miss B. Harvey (second donation)	3	3	0
Miss M. L. Bruce	5	0	0
Mrs. Shand	1	1	0
Mr. J. A. B. Bruce	2	2	0
The Children of the Infants' Department of Denton Council School, Lancs, per Miss Thornley	10	0
Mrs. Redfern	3	3	0
Miss K. J. Mullins	5	0	0
Miss M. C. Martineau (fourth donation)	5	0	0
	£7,098	8	0

Parcels have been received from:—

Miss Gertrude Martineau; Mrs. J. M. Gimson; Mrs. Jellie; Miss Eveleigh; The Rev. F. Wood; Bank Street War Workers' Circle, Bolton (per Mrs. Hardman); Mrs. Wilkinson; Miss A. Smith; Mrs. Atkinson; Miss H. M. Selby; Anon. (Selly Oak); Mrs. Wm. Healey; Monton Church Women's Union (per Mrs. Nanson); Mrs. Lewis Lloyd; Mrs. Titterton; Mill Hill Chapel Ladies' Sewing League, Leeds (per Mrs. F. W. Ritson); Mrs. F. E. Baines; Mrs. F. Perrot; Miss Dalby; Mrs. Worthington; Mrs. Bennett; Mrs. Varian; Croydon War Hospital Supply Depot; Anne, Lady Scott; Mrs. F. H. Jones; Miss Short; Plymouth Branch Women's League; Miss Maginnis; Miss S. Worsley; Mrs. Shearman; Mrs. Turberville; The Misses E. and G. Coe; Mrs. E. C. Smyth; Miss Jolly; Mrs. T. H. Russell; Finchley Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); The Misses Webster; Mrs. T. A. Day; Miss Mitchell; Mrs. Hans Renold; Miss Corfield; Lady Mayoress' Committee, Leeds (three large cases of bandages, &c.). Mrs. D. Martineau; Miss M. C. Smith; Miss Emma Smith; Mrs. Notcutt;

Wood Green Branch Women's League (per Miss Starling); Mrs. Copeland Bowie; Miss Nettlefold.

It will be a great convenience if the name and address of sender and a list of contents are enclosed in every parcel.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

For the Hospitals:—

Money to buy hospital requisites of all kinds.

Shirts.

Socks.

Vests | woven or of a natural coloured flannel.

Pants |

Cardigans.

Shoes with leather soles.

Towels.

Handkerchiefs.

Mufflers.

Playing cards.

Chess.

Draughts.

Dominoes.

For Refugees (civilians):—

Money to support the hospice for sick and aged.

Clothes for men, women, children, and babies' layettes.

At the convalescent dépôt to which we recently sent 300 beds, the commandant is establishing a class to teach men who are unfit for further military services the rudiments of commercial education. This is in order that after the war they may be able to earn their living. For this purpose he asks us if we can give him a typewriter, of any maker, so that he can teach typewriting. Mrs. Allen will be glad if any reader who has a second-hand typewriter that can be spared will communicate with her, giving full particulars.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

MILITARY TRAINING IN SCHOOLS.

ADDRESS BY MR. J. LEWIS PATON.

The following is the text of an address by Mr. J. Lewis Paton (High Master of the Manchester Grammar School) to the British Association at its recent meeting in Manchester:—

The present seems to me of all times the most inopportune for discussing this question. We are all under the obsession of the War. National opinion, so far as it has been formed, has not been the growth of deliberate reflection, but rushed into being (like the huts of a training camp) under the pressure of menace such as never threatened our nation before, and will never threaten us again. We are at present

In a state where men are tempted still To evil, for a guard against worse ill.

All this, it is urged, is based not on the present state of things, but what will follow when the war is over, when mankind will have a chance such as it never had before to open a new era and to roll the world upon a new and a better course.

1. If military training is to be made universal and compulsory in secondary schools, this ought to be part of a national scheme. Compulsion by patches will never work. Where is this national scheme? At present it looks as if the idea was to train officers in the secondary school and the rank and file in the elementary school. Is Lancashire prepared to accept this? England follows Lancashire. If we are to have a conscript army, serving under compulsion, at least let it be on a democratic basis with free upward nobility and no caste about it.

2. This War is the result of ideas firmly held, resolutely and unscrupulously carried out into action. The seed-time of ideas is boyhood and early manhood. The ideas instilled into the mind then are the ideas which will govern the issues of life. Instil the idea of war, and war will be the crop we shall reap. Already our history is instilling far too much the idea of war. Every page of it teaches implicitly that, when nations disagree, the way they settle their difference is by means of war. And war appeals far more to the imagination of youth than arbitration. A boy is, and cannot help being, a bit of a Red Indian. He is far more stirred by the Balaclava Charge than by the Alabama Arbitration. The teaching of history needs reforming. But what he does influences your boy much more than what he hears. And now you propose to train every boy in the practice of arms. War is to be his chief game. I do not know whether scouting is still to have any existence, but, if so, it is to be merely as a preparatory branch for the great universal English game of war. And directly a boy turns sixteen he is to be turned out of the scouts and don the khaki. That means that scouting will be shorn of one of its most valuable training qualities; the training of the senior boy in responsibility. Have the originators of this proposal thought out the inevitable psychological result of their proposal? Steadily, day by day, they are going to drill into our boys, at the most suggestible period of life, the idea that the service which their country requires of them is fighting.

3. One would have thought that this war had been sufficient object lesson to us never again to turn a nation into a barracks. Why did the European peoples go to war? Because for generations they had been living for war, and preparing for it. If our present experience teaches us anything, it is the impotence of conscription to save us from war. Europe is suffering from the fever of war. What produced it? Conscription and military preparation. What remedy is proposed to cure the patient? The authors of this proposal only have one prescription:—"Repeat the conscription dose—the mixture as before, only make it stronger and increase the amount."

4. What is the principle we are fighting for? Is it government by consent, or government by coercion? Is it a nation drilled and regimented, and dragooned by the War Office, or a nation free and spontaneous in its service, mutually co-operative in its organisation?

Let us get down to the root difference between the two parties in this debate. Neither of us holds with Treitschke that war is good or desirable in itself. Both of us agree that the present state of things is of the devil. But my opponents accept it as a thing that must be, and say, "We have to live in the world as it is." Our position is the exact opposite. "We have to make the world as it should be, and it is in our power to do it." We fail in our highest duty if we do not make some advance towards this. To accept evil as a thing that must be, to accept the works of the evil one as something that cannot be done away, is to deny the highest of which we are conscious. It is to deny Christ.

There remains the question: On what lines can national security be assured? First smash Germany. But after smashing Germany, do not put the yoke of Prussian militarism round your own neck. At present any other scheme may sound Utopian. First smash Germany, and the chief difficulty is removed. Then summon the Hague Conference. Utilise to the full the reaction against war which is sure to set in. Throw all the highest statesmanship, moral wisdom, and strongest will power of the nations into the ending of the war. If we do not end war, war will end us. It ought to be done, therefore it can be done. And if it can be done, it must be done.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might gain
By fearing to attempt.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Aberdare.—On September 17, the Rev. Rees Jenkin Jones, M.A., for forty-six years minister at the Old Meeting House, Treconon (1864-1909), celebrated his 80th birthday. Mr. Jones who, as author and minister has rendered services to his country which have won him a host of friends and admirers, is descended from a long line of Cardiganshire worthies, including the Rev. John Jones, who died in 1709, and is said to have been the founder of Nonconformity in that part of Wales. He graduated at Glasgow University in 1863, and in 1864 succeeded his father at the Old Meeting House, where he remained, with an interval of several years, during which he visited Egypt and Palestine as a result of a breakdown in health, until 1909. He edited Yr Ymofynydd, the Welsh Unitarian monthly, for some years, was the first Secretary of the Welsh Unitarian Ministers' Education Fund, founded in Cwmbach, in 1864; and President of the South Wales Unitarian Association in 1896. Mr. Jones is the author of numerous hymns and pamphlets, and a prolific writer on Welsh subjects. He contributed several articles—one on Dr. Lewis Edwards, Bala—to the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' and is at present preparing a contribution to a new work, the 'Encyclopædia of Education,' published by Isaac Pitman. In addition to his literary activities, Mr. Jones has found time to undertake many important public duties. He has been a Governor of the Welsh University, Cardiff, since the beginning, served on the old Aberdare School Board, gave evidence before the Welsh Church Commission, and was one of the Commissioners on Higher Education when a conference was held at Merthyr in December, 1880. In 1877 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Evan Griffiths, of Aberdare, and her death occurred at a comparatively early age in 1899. Of his four children, one is the wife of the Rev. Simon Jones, Swansea, and another, Dr.

Goronwy Jones, M.D., London, is now serving in the R.A.M.C. Mr. Jones is still a busy man, and it is characteristic of him that he looks forward at the close of his life, not to a well-earned rest, but to entering a wider sphere in which his activities may find fresh scope. It is the hope of all his friends in South Wales that he has yet many years of life and health to spend in their midst.

Bradford.—A well-attended meeting was held in Broadway Avenue Unitarian Chapel on Saturday, for the purpose of extending a hearty welcome to the Rev. W. R. Shanks, formerly of Holbeck, who has been appointed minister there in succession to the late Rev. W. Rosling. Mr. Shanks, who is the Secretary of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, has occupied a prominent position in the civic life of Holbeck, including that of Chairman of the Board of Guardians; he is also one of the best known officials in the Boy Scout movement in the Leeds district. Mr. H. B. Alderson presided over the meeting, and among others present were the Rev. Nicol Cross (Leeds), the Rev. T. Paxton (Bradford), the Rev. Joshua Lord (Pudsey), the Rev. T. Parkin (Little Horton), Mr. Grosvenor Talbot (Yorkshire Unitarian Union), Mr. F. W. Marsland (Leeds), Mr. J. Hargreaves (Bradford), Mr. W. Holgate (Holbeck), Mr. Simeon Hall (Leeds), Mr. H. Ellison (Idle), and Mr. F. Clayton (Leeds). The Chairman expressed the pleasure it afforded himself and the members of Broadway Avenue Church to see so many distinguished representatives of Unitarianism present, and read letters of apology from several prominent ministers and laymen in all parts of the West Riding, regretting inability to attend, and wishing the Rev. W. R. Shanks a happy and successful ministry at West Bowling. Mr. G. W. Wilson extended to Mr. Shanks a very cordial welcome on behalf of the congregation, the Sunday School, and the Band of Hope. Mr. Grosvenor Talbot spoke of the organising ability of Mr. Shanks, and of his utility to the Yorkshire Union. He was following a great man in the Rev. W. Rosling—a man who was great because he was good, and one who had devoted his life to the service of his fellow men. The work of their late minister would lighten that of Mr. Shanks in that district. As the outcome of the war in Europe he looked forward to a revival of church life. Letters from the soldiers at the front showed that the men were filled with the spirit of Christianity, and the effect would be to turn their thoughts to higher and better things, and do away with class distinctions. The Rev. R. Nicol Cross, the Rev. T. Paxton, Mr. W. Holgate, the Rev. J. Lord, Mr. H. Ellison, and Mr. Fred Clayton also spoke. The Rev. T. Parkin, of Little Horton Congregational Chapel, said that as their closest neighbour he was pleased to welcome Mr. Shanks. Though the church was not a big one it had a big soul, and the church with the big soul was the one that was going to make its mark. The way Mr. Rosling had worked, the way he had prayed and longed for the success of that little church he (Mr. Parkin) knew, and it was bound to bear fruit. The prosperity of that church would make for the prosperity of his own, for although they laboured under different denominational names they had the same Captain, and were aiming for one goal. The Rev. W. R. Shanks, who had a hearty reception on rising to respond, said that, as he was also to take charge of the church at Idle, and the circuit idea among Unitarians was looked at somewhat askance, it became an interesting question as to whether the innovation could be made a success. He was full of confidence that it could—by a policy of give and take. He promised to do his best in the interests of the Church; but would not resort to "tricks" in an endeavour to secure a large congregation, and he appealed to all to be absolutely sincere in all that was done and said, and then he felt confident success would crown their efforts.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead.—The Rev. W. Tudor Jones, Ph.D., has received and accepted a cordial invitation to the ministry of the Lewin's Mead Chapel, Bristol, in succession to the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A. He will begin his ministry at the beginning of October.

Hale.—The pulpit of Hale Chapel was occupied on Sunday, September 12, by the Rev. Dr. Powicke, President of the Cheshire Congregational Union and minister of Hatherlow Chapel, Remley. On the same day the Rev. W. G. Price conducted Harvest Thanksgiving Services at Hatherlow Chapel.

Huddersfield.—Dr. Marshall, senior surgeon of the Huddersfield Infirmary, has been appointed Commanding Officer of the War Hospital just erected near that town for five hundred wounded soldiers; and is gazetted Lieutenant-Colonel in His Majesty's Army (R.A.M.C.). Col. Marshall is the only surviving son of the Rev. T. L. Marshall, of Swiss Cottage, Exeter.

Lydgate.—By a sale that was opened by Mrs. Sagar, of Halifax, last Saturday £40 was raised, thus reducing the debt on the recent improvements to about £25. A very popular "stall" was a collecting sheet for contributions for a present to be sent out to each of the six young men connected with the congregation who are serving with H.M. Forces.

Newark.—The Rev. J. Walter Cock writes from 66, Barnby Gate, Newark-on-Trent, as follows:—"As our church at Newark has now been re-opened, and there are a good number of soldiers stationed in the district, I should be glad if you would let your readers know that if any men of our communion are quartered here, I should be very glad to know of it so that I may get into touch with them and give them any help that lies in my power. Of course it goes without saying that our church would extend to them a very hearty and cordial welcome."

Northampton.—The Autumn Conference of the members of Kettering Road Church was held on Monday, September 20, the minister, the Rev. W. C. Hall, presiding. A resolution of sympathy with the relatives of the late Mrs. Iden Payne, widow of a former minister, was passed before ordinary business. The Secretary reported on the work of the Committee during the summer, and the Treasurer presented an interim financial statement. Mr. Hall reviewed the work of the congregation and its institutions, and laid before the meeting plans of work for the coming months. A discussion followed. The object of the Conferences, of which this was the second, is to keep the members informed of the general work of the Church, and to ensure their close co-operation in new undertakings.

Sheffield.—The congregation of the Unitarian Chapel, Uppertorpe, which has migrated from that district to Unity Church, Crookesmoor, Sheffield, entered into possession of its new home on Thursday, September 16. A church in which both harmony of design and utility are represented has been provided at a cost, together with the land, amounting to £8,150, towards which £6,200 has been raised. The church in style is an adaptation of late Gothic carried out in brick and stone, and presents an imposing appearance. The peculiarities of the site led to height being the main consideration in order to raise the chapel to the Crookesmoor Road front, and the hall and class rooms have been placed underneath. The building is approached by a bridge and a flight of steps, while access to the Sunday School is given at the back in Harcourt Road. Here there is a fine balcony leading from the ladies' parlour and commanding a picturesque view of Sheffield. The interior of the church is spacious, and the light and artistic effect of pale green walls and oak panelling is enhanced by a series of elegant windows. Particularly handsome is the chancel window, in which three figures symbolising Justice, Mercy, and Truth, are embodied in richly tinted stained glass. The artist, Mr. A. L. Ward, of 117, Ladbrooke Grove, Notting Hill, London, has handled his theme most successfully. The feature is his happy treatment of blues. The pictorial window subjects from Upperthorpe Church have been introduced in the west and transept windows.

The opening proceedings began with the unveiling by Mr. W. Guest (Chairman of the Trustees), of a bronze tablet at the entrance of the church setting forth the origin of the congregation. The event brought together a large and representative gathering of Unitarians. Mr. Guest, performing the unveiling ceremony, mentioned that the congregation started to worship sixty years ago in Penistone Road, and later went to Upperthorpe Chapel. He hoped that under better conditions and better equipment they would be able to prosecute their work there with an even greater measure of success. Mr. Charles Hawksley (ex-President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association), then opened the church doors with a key presented by the congregation, and the assembly followed him and the church minister and officials into the church where the dedicatory service was held. Mrs. Kirke, sister of the late Mr. J. B. Wostinholm, in unveiling the chancel window, said she had pleasure in presenting it on behalf of herself and Mr. Wostinholm's nieces to the church and congregation. Her brother was one of the founders of the church, and took the greatest interest in it, and she was sure would desire her to wish them all prosperity. Mr. H. R. Bramley, in the absence of Mr. E. Bramley, made a statement concerning the window. He said Mr. Wostinholm was one of the earliest workers in connection with the founding of Upperthorpe Chapel, and was a good friend to it throughout his life. In the name of the minister, the trustees, and the congregation, he wished to thank Mrs. Kirke and Mr. Wostinholm's nieces for their gift, which would be treasured as much as the memory of the man of whose life it was a reminder. The dedicatory service was conducted by the Revs. A. H. Dolphin and Dr. Chas. Hargrove. The hymns included 'O Lord of Earth and Heaven Above,' written by the late Mr. Edward Bramley, and sung at the opening of Upperthorpe Chapel in 1861. Mrs. Andrew King sang with clearness and purity of tone the solo, 'I Will Sing of Thy Great Mercies.' Alderman A. J. Hobson presided over the public meeting in Unity Hall in the evening, and congratulated the congregation on possessing a building whose simplicity, stateliness, and ripeness of design would grow upon them as they came into closer association with it. He wished their work there every success. The Rev. A. H. Dolphin, in tracing the history of the congregation, said its foundation in 1859 was due to Upper Chapel, and its then minister, the Rev. Brooke Herford. That pastor and Mr. Woollen, whose work was commemorated by a window in the church, at first chose a disused joiner's shop in Penistone Road. Two years later they built the Upperthorpe Chapel. The congregation succeeded fairly well for some years, but gradually the families supporting it moved away from the neighbourhood, and eventually it was felt that the work could be better done and with more hopeful prospects in another district. The present site, recommended by the late Councillor Fox, was bought ten years ago. Several persons who were present at the opening of Upperthorpe Chapel were still with them.

Mrs. Kirke, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Beckett were among these, and others there were who had not sent in their names. He wished to thank all who had taken part in bringing to a successful end the building of a house worthy of their cause. Complimentary speeches were delivered by the Revs. Dr. Clemens, J. F. Matthews, Messrs. T. Beaumont, J. R. Wigfull, C. Hawksley, A. F. Smith, and others. The officials present were Mr. W. R. Stevenson (Treasurer), Mr. Andrew King (Secretary), and Mr. W. Guest (Chairman of Trustees). A service followed in which the Revs. A. H. Dolphin, C. Peach, J. Ellis, and C. J. Street took part. Dr. Hargrove preached the sermon. The choir rendered the anthem, 'I Have Built Thee a House.' Collections and donations amounted to £184 14s. 3d.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

ON THE WAY TO THE TRENCHES.

"Do people know," said General Bramwell Booth to an interviewer recently, "how eager the soldier is to talk about serious things?" And yet, according to some people, their sole craving when off duty is to be amused. Two ladies were singing recently, he tells us at an entertainment given at one of the huts "somewhere in France." They were very fashionably dressed, and they sang the usual songs from comic opera which are so popular everywhere. At the conclusion of the entertainment a young sergeant was called upon to propose a vote of thanks. He fulfilled this duty quite civilly, but added: "At the same time I should like to say that many of us would have preferred songs which would have given us something to think about on our way up to the front." Probably the majority would not have agreed with him; it is the English soldier's way to meet the great issues of life and death with a cheery, almost a gay, spirit; but it should be remembered, as General Booth reminds us, that the British army is now largely made up of men who have enlisted for the highest motives, and comic songs must jar on the ear when the soul is filled with the solemn sense of responsibility which made Cromwell's Ironsides invincible.

THE SALE OF STONEHENGE.

English people need be under no apprehension as to the future of Stonehenge, which has come under the hammer this week as part of the Amesbury estate. It is under the protection of the Ancient Monuments' Act, which ensures its preservation, and could only be sold on condition that the public should always have free access to it on the payment of a sum not exceeding 1s. per head, that it should be maintained, so far as possible, in its present condition, and that the purchaser should not erect any buildings within a certain prescribed distance of the Circle. An attempt was made about ten years ago by the Commons and Footpaths Preservation Society to secure Stonehenge for the public, but the project failed because the price asked for it at the time was too high.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.O. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

AN IDEAL Summer Boarding Establishment. All bedrooms have hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, footbath, electric light and penny-in-slot gas fire. Excellent bathroom and lavatories. Three good reception rooms. Central, garden, near sea.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk Terrace, Brighton.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

TENTERDEN.—FURNISHED HOUSE To Let—Autumn and Winter Months. 2 Reception, 3 Bedrooms, usual offices, hot and cold water, geyser, radiators. Dogs, children, and smokers objected to.—Address B., INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two sitting-rooms) TO BE LET. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

WHITE ART LINEN REMNANTS, lengths from $\frac{3}{4}$ yard, suitable for Drawn Thread Work, Afternoon Tea Cloths, &c., only 5s. per bundle. Postage 4d. Catalogue free.—Write, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, September 25, 1915.
* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3822.
NEW SERIES, No. 925.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

NOW READY

2s. 6d. net (postage 3d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—OCTOBER.

A THEOLOGICAL HOLIDAY AND AFTER The Editor
SOME RECENT GERMAN WAR LITERATURE M. Epstein, M.A., Ph.D.
A GERMAN ON THE WAR G. Lowes Dickinson
AN AMERICAN THINKER ON THE WAR Prof. Royce
THE WARFARE OF MORAL IDEAS Prof. E. B. McGilvary
FACTS AND QUESTIONS BEFORE US Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M.
THE EFFECT OF THE EUROPEAN WAR ON HIGHER LEARNING IN AMERICA Chas. Franklin Thwing
THE PROVINCE OF THE ARTS AND HANDICRAFTS IN A MECHANICAL SOCIETY C. R. Ashbee
IBSEN'S TREATMENT OF GUILT Rev. Frinc. Forsyth, D.D.
THE WAR: A QUAKER APOLOGIA John W. Graham, M.A.
TRIUMPH AND TRAGEDY Prof. Hugh Walter
THE IDEA OF RESURRECTION Alban G. Widgery, M.A.
FECHNER'S THEORY OF LIFE AFTER DEATH J. Arthur Hill
MYSTICISM AND MAHOMEDANISM The late Lieut.-Col. E. C. Thwaytes

SUBSCRIPTIONS: 10s. per annum, post free.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

October

3. Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A. (of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester).
10. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).
17. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.
24. Rev. HENRY DAVID ROBERTS (of Liverpool).

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH

having REMOVED from Swallow Street,

now meets EVERY SUNDAY at

STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour Street

(near Portman Square, W.).

Subjects next Sunday.

11. "Mr. Balfour's New Book, 'Theism and Humanism,' a Theistic Preacher's Review."

6.30. Dr. Walsh's Sunday Evening Lecture, "Problems of War and Peace—the Maze and its Meaning."

Commencement of a New Volume.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

OCTOBER, 1915.

CONTENTS.

LESSONS ON THE HISTORY OF UNITARIANISM—

Junior Department—Alfred Hall, M.A.

Who were The First Unitarians?

Socinus and Servetus.

Francis David.

The English Unitarian Martyrs (two lessons).

Senior Department—Francis Scrivener.

Introduction.

Church Councils.

The Beginning of Controversy.

Certain Strong Men.

The English Reformation Movement.

LESSONS FOR THE PRIMARY DEPARTMENT—

Dorothy Tarrant, M.A.

Kind Deeds.—Wise Words.—God's

Greatness and our own Powers.—

Pure Worship.—Builders of the City.

BY THE WAY.

LONDON:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF NON-SUBSCRIBING MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS

Of London and the South-Eastern Counties

The Twenty-seventh Annual Meeting
of the Assembly will be held on TUESDAY, the 5th OCTOBER, 1915,
at the

Unitarian Christian Church, High
Road, Ilford.

The Proceedings will be as follows:—

3.30 P.M. Annual Business Meeting, the Rev. J. Wood, President of the Assembly, in the Chair.

5.30 P.M. Tea in the Schoolroom.

7.30 P.M. Religious Service. Preacher, the Rev. A. Farquharson; supporter, the Rev. A. H. Biggs.

GORDON COOPER, Hon. Sec.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 13 years of age.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILLIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

The Executive Committee has decided under present conditions NOT to hold the United Service this year.

J. ARTHUR PEARSON,

Secretary pro tem.

Unitarian Home Missionary College.

OPENING OF THE SESSION,
1915-16.

THE OPENING ADDRESS, entitled, "Christianity and War, in Ancient and Modern Times," will be delivered by the Rev. S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc., the Principal, at the COLLEGE, Summerville, Victoria Park, Manchester, on Wednesday, October 6th, 1915, at Four o'clock.

P. J. WINSER, } Hon. Secs.
G. A. PAYNE, }

PARK-Y-VELVET CHAPEL, Carmarthen.

Re-opening after Successful Restoration,
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 10th, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, October 3.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11 and 7, Mr. H. C. HORSLEY, B.A.

Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W., 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON—Harvest Festival. Full Choral Service, Organist, Mr. W. P. Evershed.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTAM LISTER.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.

Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.; 7, Mr. J. HUME GIBSON.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT; 3, Mr. A. FORBES; 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.—Harvest Festival.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. H. N. CALEY.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.; 6.30, Rev. W. C. C. POPE.

Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.

South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FRANKLIN.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. PERCIVAL CHALK.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wimbledon Smaller Worples Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.

Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas; 6.30,

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKE.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11, Rev. W. G. TOPPING; 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Dr. C. HARGROVE, M.A., D.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11, Rev. DENDY AGATE; 6.30, Rev. D. R. DAVIS.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. M. ROWE.

MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. FREIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGES.

PEACH-LEEMING.—On September 25th, at the Unitarian Free Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, by the father of the bridegroom, Lieut. L. du Garde Peach, M.A., and Emily Marianne Leeming, B.A.

WILLMER-COOKE.—On September 23rd, at Birkenhead Unitarian Church, Bessborough Road, by Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A., and Rev. J. Ewart Jenkins, Captain Harvey Thew Willmer, 19th Battalion, The King's (Liverpool) Regiment, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Willmer, of Oakhurst, Grosvenor Road, Birkenhead, to Violet Florence, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cooke, of Ragleth, Shrewsbury Road, Birkenhead.

DEATHS.

JONES.—On September 30th, at 37, Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells, Laura, widow of the late Rev. Robert Crompton Jones, aged 82. No flowers.

ORR.—On September 26th, at Airmount, Clonmel, Rev. R. J. Orr, A.M., third and last surviving son of the late Rev. James Orr, Clonmel.

PHELPS.—On September 23rd, George Phelps, of 210, Cathedral Road, Cardiff, aged 68 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

USEFUL COMPANION.—To elderly, aged, or partially invalid lady. Housekeeping, needlework, &c. Excellent references. Salary required.—B. E. T., 53, The Cliffe, Lewes.

A LADY, who has had varied experience, desires re-engagement as COMPANION. For particulars and reference apply—Rev. James Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	479	CORRESPONDENCE:—
GENEROSITY AND CAUTION	481	The Extermination of Armenia	484
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	482	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	484
THE "IRREDUCIBLE MINIMUM" FOR A WORLD PEACE	482	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
REMINISCENCE AND A MILESTONE	483	Belgian Hospital Fund	484
		A Belgian Entertainment at Hampstead	485
		The Rev. R. J. Campbell at Westbourne Park Chapel	495
		The National Conference	486
		Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association	486
		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	486
		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	487

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

OUR wonderful Indian summer is at an end. We almost forgot that we had reached the fall of the year and are less than three months from Christmas in the warm air and radiant sunshine. But now we have felt the cold rain and bitter winds of autumn, with their familiar suggestion of fires and other physical comforts. But the first thought that leaps to the mind is that we are at the beginning of another winter for our armies with its exposure and terrible suffering. We must bestir ourselves at once to help the gallant men who are fighting our battles to resist the cold. The long campaign last winter made big demands, but gifts came pouring in; the work had all the exciting charm of novelty and even knitting had its touch of romance.

EVERYTHING has become harder and grimmer since then, and possibly some of us have lost a little of our eagerness and elasticity under the weight of care. It is a temptation which we must resist with all our might. Persistence is now the winning virtue. Moreover, the need is as great and ought to touch our hearts just as acutely. There has been a steady wastage of material in the hospitals, and this must be made good. Mr. Kelland writes to us this week from France that we shall want thousands of blankets in the Belgian Hospitals and Convalescent Depots. Many of the buildings cannot be properly warmed, and the misery of scanty bed coverings on cold and stormy nights can be easily imagined. We do not ask our readers to send us blankets in twos and threes, but money for their purchase in large quantities, which is at once cheaper and more convenient. Of course, if any of our readers are in the woollen trade and will send us a consignment, to match the generous gift of Nestlé's milk which we announce this week, we shall be greatly delighted.

It has become necessary for us once again to state quite clearly that our work does not conflict in any way with the activities of the Belgian Red Cross. The public who read some appeals which have appeared recently might easily suppose that the Belgian Red Cross is the only organisation for helping wounded Belgian soldiers in hospital, and that it is making a serious effort to cover the whole ground. The facts are as we have stated them more than once already. The Belgian Red Cross looks after the welfare of a few hospitals of its own which are admirably equipped, but it does not touch the sixty or more military hospitals and convalescent depots which our Belgian Hospital Fund has made its special care. We do not wish to criticise the policy of the Belgian Red Cross in imposing these limits upon its activities. We admire what it is doing and are only anxious that its beneficent work should have all the success it deserves. But we want to inform people who are not intimately acquainted with our work that the Belgian Hospital Fund is not simply supplementing in a private or amateur way the work of the Red Cross. We have our large sphere of activity practically to ourselves, and all our work is done with the cordial help and approval of the Belgian military authorities. If for any reason we had to withdraw our help, no one else is ready to step into our place, or has the same personal knowledge of local needs. We do not say this in any tone of complaint. We are much more inclined to rejoice, for it has been an unspeakable privilege and joy to everybody connected with the Fund to discover a large field of labour, where we are really wanted.

We are tempted to complain sometimes that we hear very little about the Belgian Army, and we wonder what it is doing. It is an army in being all the time, only the larger operations of the French and ourselves on the Western front tend to banish its activities to an obscure corner of the newspaper. A short time ago we were able to state, from personal observation, that large numbers of recruits are being drilled in various centres in France. We have just received some information which shows with what foresight and enterprise the problem of the incapacitated soldier is being faced. Somewhere in France a large estate has been placed at the disposal of the Belgian army by a French baron. There a village of huts is being erected which is to be an "école professionnelle militaire." Plans are being worked out for 1,200 men, who have lost a limb or are otherwise physically incapable of further service, to be taught a trade. The living huts are to take 30 men each, and in addition, when the plan is completed, there are to be "teaching" huts where carpentry, shoe-making, brush-making, or the rudiments of a commercial education are to be taught. We shall watch the growth of this scheme with great interest. It is a good illustration of the admirable spirit with which the Belgian authorities are facing their difficulties.

THE good news from the Western Front has come at a most opportune moment. It has fixed public attention, which had grown a little listless and weary with long delay, upon the armies in the field, and made critics at home look rather small. The critic and the grumbler always batten upon public disappointment. They have had a long innings, during which they have played a rotten game, and it is time they were dismissed. We are chary, in a war of slow movement and repeated checks, of using the word victory; but we have a right to be proud that something great has been accomplished. The effect upon the army and the country will be immediate; but we must be content to wait for some time before we can estimate its military value. It is a brave and handsome beginning, and we ought to get every ounce of encouragement and renewal of confidence out of it that it can possibly yield. Only let us beware of the fresh crop of amateur prophecies and avoid the folly of making time-tables for driving the Germans to the Rhine.

* * *

SIR EDWARD GREY made an important statement on the Balkan situation on Tuesday. He managed to handle the difficult subject of Bulgaria's intentions in a conciliatory temper but with complete firmness, and it is said that his words have already had a marked effect in improving the situation.

Not only [he said], is there no hostility in this country to Bulgaria, but there is traditionally a warm feeling of sympathy for the Bulgarian people. As long, therefore, as Bulgaria does not side with the enemies of Great Britain and her Allies, there can be no question of British influence or forces being used in a sense hostile to Bulgarian interests; and, as long as the Bulgarian attitude is unaggressive, there should be no disturbance of friendly relations. If, on the other hand, the Bulgarian mobilisation were to result in Bulgaria assuming an aggressive attitude on the side of our enemies, we are prepared to give to our friends in the Balkans all the support in our power, in the manner that would be most welcome to them, in concert with our Allies without reserve and without qualification.

* * *

SIR EDWARD GREY'S summary of the divergent aims pursued by Germany and ourselves in the Balkans sets two political ideals in the sharpest possible contrast. It is this moral conflict which lies at the basis of the present war. On the one hand there is the lust of dominion which uses the miseries of other men for its own advancement; on the other, respect for nationality and the political imagination which sees that the happiness and well-being of other peoples are an essential part of our own.

Our policy [he said] has been to secure agreement between the Balkan States, which would assure to each of them, not only independence, but a brilliant future, based as a general principle on the territorial and political union of kindred nationalities. To secure this agreement, we have recognised that the legitimate aspirations of all Balkan States must find satisfaction. The policy of Germany, on the other hand, has been to create for her own purposes disunion and war between the Balkan States. She first made use of Austria-Hungary to precipitate a European war, with the result that that Empire is now completely subordinated to Germany and dependent upon her. Turkey, whose interests would have been preserved by remaining neutral, was gratuitously forced by Germany into this war, and, having been used, is now being subordinated and made dependent upon Germany, in order to realise the German aspiration of German influence from Berlin to Bagdad. In the same way, it would naturally be Germany's policy to use any Balkan State she could influence to further this plan, with the inevitable result that that State would eventually be subordinated to her; and, though territorial gains might be promised, it would lose real independence. This is directly contrary to the policy of the Allies, which is to further the national aspirations of the Balkan States without sacrificing the independence of any of them.

* * *

THE death of Mr. Keir Hardie removes a picturesque figure from the political world. He was only 58, but he looked older and had long been regarded as a veteran by younger men. In private life he was a delightful companion, a man of deep piety and a most tender heart. These qualities were reflected in his public work, in his passion for justice, and the flavour of social idealism which he imparted to labour politics. But he lacked balance and judgment and his career as a politician, in spite of his wonderful driving power, was pathetically sterile. He played the part of an Ishmaelite with zest and courage, and was never really happy except in opposition. The newspapers seized upon a few bizarre features in his utterances and made of him a public scarecrow, but this would only have acted as a good advertisement had there been real breadth of view and some controlling force of political sanity behind. He has left behind him in the Labour Party men of much riper experience in public affairs than himself, but none with quite the same personal magnetism for his fellows or a more eager passion for what he believed to be right.

* * *

IN an address to his diocesan conference last week the Bishop of Carlisle spoke with a refreshing plainness of speech of the need of recovering depth and reality in religion. Referring to the charge that the war is the bankruptcy of Christianity he expressed his earnest hope that of merely professional and hierarchical Christianity, which has dug itself deep in the trenches of tradition, it will prove the complete and final bankruptcy.

In the coming age that Church will be found safest, strongest, most glorious in the eyes of men, and most holy in the sight of God, which uplifts as its most fascinating ideal and all-absorbing purpose, the Divine Son of Man, in all the splendour of His humiliation and all the lowliness of His majesty. Secondary things—such as episcopacy, sacraments, Church ordinances, and organisations—are not unimportant, far otherwise, they are of great importance. But the primary facts in Christianity are the Fatherhood of God, redemption through Christ, goodness through the Holy Ghost, and the universal brotherhood of men. Let us teach these things, preach these truths, live these realities. Let us make these facts the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and end of our ministry; and all other things, social well-being, political and civic integrity, harmony between capital and labour, domestic felicity, international righteousness, concord between the Churches, and the cessation of wars among nations will be added unto us.

* * *

THE following words, taken from the same address, were spoken specially to the Church of England, but they have an equal application to every denomination in the country which still fails to realise that the world has changed and has lost all interest in many debates and controversies and points of difference, which engaged our eager interest in the past, because it is deeply concerned about something better—to find God and to feel His transforming power.

In the trenches men are quickly learning to probe to the realities of things. Through living the war they are finding God. Confronted with danger and death they are gaining new visions of the meaning of life and of the value and glory of its eternal goal. The very angels have been visibly ministering to some of them. Those who return will no longer be satisfied with the husks of tradition—with ceremonies and ordinances, and the commandments of men—they will demand the Bread of Life itself which came down from heaven. They will care more for visions of God vouchsafed to prayer than for revisions of Prayer-books, however urgent. Ecclesiastical religion will not satisfy them. They will require a religion which is moral towards God and moral towards men. Both Conformity and Nonconformity will take on new meanings. The real Conformists in God's sight will be the Nonconformists to the world-spirit, and the Conformists to the world-spirit will be the real Nonconformists displeasing to God.

GENEROSITY AND CAUTION.

IN ordinary times we expect generosity to be controlled by caution, for caution runs in our blood, and the Englishman is inclined to regard it as one of the cardinal virtues. It has played a large part in our commercial success. It is responsible for much of our middle-class comfort. It stimulates the sense of property and puts us in love with security. It reveals its prevailing power as a social force in the death duties. Not that any of us would speak a light or heedless word against the value of generosity. We know how benevolence adds to the charm of life; besides it is prescribed by our religion. Only we think that the instincts of generosity ought to be indulged in a measured way, and kept under strict control. There is such a thing as extravagance in giving, and that point is reached when a man goes the length of doing an injury to himself and his own interests. All this is in natural harmony with our love for sober virtues and our dislike of any exaggeration either in feeling or action. Our method is to have a reasonable margin for charity, just as we have another and, perhaps, larger margin for golf and motor-ing, and we are not kept awake at night by an uneasy conscience if generosity is never allowed to exceed these limits.

Upon this settled and unimaginative way of living the war has broken in with the force of a tornado. It has filled us with emotions which are quite strange and bewildering in their intensity. It has brought us to the brink of an abyss of human misery and pain into which few men can look with steady gaze. It confronts us with duties which are more imperious than any we have known before. In many of us the struggle is going on at the present moment between the old prudent habits of thought and behaviour, in which our own interests and a cautious provision for the future have played so large a part, and generous self-abandonment to the claims of loyalty and brotherhood. And in one direction, and that the most important, generosity, unhampered by caution, has already won a signal victory. The young men of the nation have answered the call by giving themselves, and they cannot give more. In its simplicity and self-forgetfulness, and the mighty volume of its willing surrender, this gift stands almost alone in the history of the world. Perhaps the naturalness with which we have accepted it, knowing that it was not possible for good men to do anything else, is hardly less remarkable. It shows that suddenly we have begun to judge human behaviour by finer standards than on ordinary days. We have no excuse left for the young man who is anxious to find a snug berth for himself, or prudently considers his own future, when the call is for the supreme surrender without terms, the acceptance of death that others may live.

Our citizen soldiers do not, of course, think of themselves in this way. They are much too healthy and modest to do anything of the kind. They are not conscious that they have done anything remarkable. If they reflect upon the situation at all they would only say that they have tried to do their best. And we who accept the gift can only show our gratitude in one way, by a similar absence of carefulness about ourselves. It would, indeed, be an unworthy spectacle if the nation were divided into two halves, the men in the fighting line who have given all, and the people at home absorbed in prudent considerations for their own safety, and not a little anxious under their financial burdens. It is strange but true that many people find it easier to be generous with their lives than with their fortunes. A man knows that his life is not in his own hands. He never really claims to possess himself. But property is subject to his own control and links itself readily with the life of the senses and prudent calculations of self-interest. We honour the man who is spendthrift enough to throw away his life as a hero; but when it is a question of risking money and worldly position on a great scale for the same cause, we find in it something quixotic and extreme. Is our generosity, in presence of the vast and inexhaustible needs of the present hour, at all comparable to the generosity of our sons and brothers who are giving their lives? Has our scale of helping advanced far beyond the limits prescribed by caution and comfortable living and a good provision for our own future? These are questions which few of us have faced squarely. It has seemed enough to continue our usual practice of generosity, limited by caution.

But is it enough? The time has come when we must settle that with our own conscience at the bar of Christian judgment. If we take the line of least resistance caution will prevail, and there will be a steady shrinkage during the next few months along the whole line of charitable effort. Already some people are beginning to talk rather sadly about the increase in the income tax, as though it must necessarily be taken out of the money which we should like to give to help wounded men or to feed starving peasants. We shall be surprised if warnings do not reach us from some quarters that we must be prepared to limit the work of our Belgian Hospital Fund, because our friends can no longer afford to subscribe. Our only answer to such searchings of heart is to suggest that we should face the question in plain human terms. When we have paid our taxes we shall remain a people living under comparatively prosperous conditions, secure in our quiet resting places, able to look out into the future without any sense of devastating loss. But what of those who have borne the full brunt of the war in fighting for the common cause, theirs and ours? They have been trampled into the mire; their country is laid waste; their wounded men, their orphaned children; their desolate women who have suffered the last extremity of anguish, look to us for healing and succour and the touch of human sympathy. Can we draw back or reduce our help, while we have bread enough and to spare and all the comfort and delight of our beautiful homes? We shall have to be hit far harder than we are at present before we can make even a weak pretence of excuse for such a base betrayal of the spirit of Christian brotherhood. There are times, and the present hour is one of them, when good men must learn to be reckless about themselves and their own interests. The warning in the gospel that we are not to be anxious for the morrow never had a plainer application. We must carry the spirit of the soldier into the ordinary affairs of life. The future is not our concern, and the less we are troubled about our own future the better.

Our one care must be to meet the needs of the moment, to do the duty of to-day, and in all things, and not least in the spending of our money and the ordering of our lives, to acquit ourselves worthily of our high aim and our difficult task.

But we are almost ashamed to urge a point of view, which is so clear in the light of Christian judgment and for ourselves and our readers is common ground. We believe that they would look upon us with surprise and displeasure if we began to curtail the claims of charity as soon as they involve real self-sacrifice. They look to us to continue this work to which we have set our hands, to keep them informed of the manifold needs of this field of human service which we have made peculiarly our own, and to ask them in full confidence in their unstinted generosity and goodwill to help to the utmost of their power. For luxuries and many innocent personal habits we advocate retrenchment, but not for charity. We shall only find a richer satisfaction when we forget to be cautious in our own interests, and generosity has in it the heroic note of sacrifice.

Good Thoughts for Glib Times.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND, with all thy faults I love thee still.
My country ! and, while yet a nook is left
Where English minds and manners may be found,
Shall be constrained to love thee. Though thy clime
Be fickle, and thy year most part deformed
With dripping rains, or withered by a frost,
I would not yet exchange thy sullen skies,
And fields without a flower, for warmer
France
With all her vines ; nor for Ausonia's groves
Of golden fruitage, and her myrtle bowers.
To shake thy senate and from heights sublime
Of patriot eloquence to flash down fire
Upon thy foes, was never meant my task ;
But I can feel thy fortunes, and partake
Thy joys and sorrows, with as true a heart

As any thunderer there. And I can feel
Thy follies, too ; and with a just disdain
Frown at effeminates, whose very looks
Reflect dishonour on the land I love.
How, in the name of soldiership and sense,
Should England prosper, when such things, as smooth
And tender as a girl, all essenc'd o'er
With odours, and as profligate as sweet ;
Who sell their laurel for a myrtle wreath,
And love when they should fight ; when such as these
Presume to lay their hand upon the ark
Of her magnificent and awful cause ?
Time was when it was praise and boast enough
In every clime, and travel where we might,
That we were born her children. Praise
enough
To fill the ambition of a private man,
That Chatham's language was his mother tongue
And Wolfe's great name compatriot with his own.

WILLIAM COWPER.

"WE ARE A PEOPLE YET."

THE eminence, the nobleness of a people depends on its capability of being stirred by memories, and of striving for what we call spiritual ends—ends which consist not in immediate material possession, but in the satisfaction of a great feeling that animates the collective body as with one soul. A people having the seed of worthiness in it must feel an answering thrill when it is adjured by the deaths of its heroes who died to preserve its national existence ; when it is reminded of its small beginnings and gradual growth through past labours and struggles, such as are still demanded of it in order that the freedom and well-being thus inherited may be transmitted unimpaired to children and children's children ; when an appeal against the permission of injustice is made to great precedents in its history and to the better genius breathing in its institutions. It is the living force of sentiment in common which makes a national consciousness. Nations so moved will resist conquest with the very breasts of their women ; will pay their millions and their blood to abolish slavery, will share privation in famine and all calamity, will produce poets to sing "some great story of a man," and thinkers whose theories will bear the test of action. An individual man, to be harmoniously great, must belong to a nation of this order, if not in actual existence yet existing in the past, in memory, as a departed, invisible, beloved ideal, once a reality, and perhaps to be restored.

GEORGE ELIOT.

O LORD GOD, Thou art our refuge and our hope : on thee alone we rest ; for we find all to be weak and insufficient but thee. Many friends cannot profit, nor strong helpers assist, nor prudent counsellors advise, nor the books of the learned afford comfort, nor any precious substance deliver, nor any place give shelter, unless thou thyself dost assist, strengthen, console, instruct, and guard us. To thee, therefore, do we lift up our eyes ; in thee, our God, the Father of mercies, do we put our trust. Bless and sanctify our souls, that they may become thy holy habitation, and the seat of thine eternal glory ; and let nothing be found in us displeasing in thy sight.

AMEN

THE "IRREDUCIBLE MINIMUM" FOR A WORLD PEACE.

A MINISTER of religion of my acquaintance lately sent me a copy of a sermon he had preached in his church. After referring to the necessity of some kind of guidance in practical steps towards the reform so tragically necessary, he said in it : "I can only put it to you that a good many of us ought to be heartily ashamed of ourselves for leaving this problem to those whom we may (I admit with some reason) look upon as rather unpractical people. If the 'Peace party' have been guilty of sentimentality and softness and downright un-wisdom—I don't say they have, but some of us think so—at any rate they have faced the problem and proposed their remedies."

In my humble opinion, the weakness of the Peace Society is allied to the weakness of teetotal reformers. They have each denounced the object of their opposition as the supremely "accursed thing." The teetotalers denounce drink as the one crying evil ; the Peace Society, with even greater reason, denounce war. Each cries out for total prohibition. Neither will countenance any traffic with the accursed thing ; and so far, from a practical point of view, each has fallen short of its ideal possibilities of usefulness. The teetotaler has relied for the fruition of his ideal on a turn of the legislative screw ; the Peace Society has thought the ideal way lay over the universal and instantaneous acceptance of a doctrine of non-resistance.

In this paper I am not advocating the abolition of physical force. We all uphold the application of physical force in this stage of society ; its symbol is the policeman. In some millennium of the future the policeman may be abolished, but that time is not yet. My object is to direct attention to the most immediate and practical measures—the irreducible minimum for a world peace.

Now a great deal is being said about the principles on which a permanent peace may be built. Stress is laid on various factors: nationality; race; the consent and concurrence of peoples and transferred provinces; and the like. It seems to me that talking about principles, however rational, is not sufficient; some actual steps must be taken, and they must be steps defined beforehand. We cannot afford to wait to debate our remedial measures after the war; they must strike the reason at once by their sheer obviousness and applicability. The words of Mr. Lloyd George are those of an optimist (let us be thankful for that!), but also of a rational and practical statesman: "Do you look for a permanent peace?" he said. "I do. I look for—I believe there will come—peace predicated, first of all, on new geographical boundaries—boundaries based on national lines, on the will of the respective peoples; and, secondly, on a mutual pledge of the signatories not only to respect guaranteed neutrality, but to chastise the nation which offers to break the international compact."

But some actual steps must be taken. These must be scientific and applicable immediately. We note, sadly enough, the disparity between the national and the individual ethic. Cavour, the statesman of Italian unity, admitted that if the patriots had done for themselves privately what they had perpetrated for the national cause they would have been ostracised from decent society. The fact is that the nation, like the individual, passes through certain evolutionary stages.

What, we are bound to inquire, were the first steps necessary to the stability and well-being of the earliest groupings of men in society? The first in order of time was peace: peace within the family; then peace within the clan; then peace within the kingdom.

The next step, and quite consequentially, was the agreement on some court of appeal to which to refer such differences as arose even within the operations of peace. In the family the patriarch was in himself such a court of appeal; in the clan the chief gave decisions; in the kingdom special men were set apart as judges.

Ubi societas, ibi jus: "where there is a society there is law and right." But nations are not yet a collective society; there is no union of nations; and so we find neither peace nor law effectively operating in any real sense.

The primitive evolution must be worked out internationally. We need an International League of Peace and an International Court of Justice. The decisions of courts of justice require a sanction. Within the nation the real sanction is the ordered national idea of law and right; ostensibly, and for the evil-doer, the police embody the physical sanction.

Can we attain this status internationally? I say we can; not only in Europe but in the world at large. The Allies, with Europe and the world behind, must be able to say and must say to Germany: "You have broken the world peace. The world henceforth will permit no nation to initiate Armageddon. The peace-breaker henceforth is the world enemy." Here emerges, the World-League of Peace: unformulated, it may be, though just at present, perhaps, none the worse for that. But disputes will arise between nations as between individuals. How are you to prevent them fighting it out as before? Nations being only "artificial persons," and low down in the evolutionary scale, may be unready to assent to a compulsory code of arbitration or international court. Some of them have said they are. What is the World-League of Peace to do?

A practical way is still open, notwithstanding their hardness of heart, or their stupidity, or their regard for what they term their honour. The World-League of Peace can decree that the United States Treaty with thirty nations, including Great Britain, is the irreducible minimum of international obligation. That is, in case of a dispute, a commission of inquiry shall be set up, not to make an award, not to give a decision, but simply to find out and to state the facts of the case, and either disputant may call for the cessation of hostilities for the space of one year. Here is a concession to national honour and notions of national independence. In practical effect, there is no doubt this simple expedient would of itself go far to abolish war.

Further, and necessarily, there must be a mutual reduction of armaments. After the war it must be said specifically to Germany (for I count Germany the greatest offender): "You must reduce your armaments; the world intends to reduce its national armaments relatively." Here again we prescribe for a low-grade international status. The actual establishment of an international police force as such, in our primitive international relations, presents many difficulties. How is it to be made effective? Who is to be the head? and the like. But the mutually reduced armaments of the nations will act essentially as an actual police force, easy of direction against the peace-breaker.

An American military officer in the Boer War, perceiving the difficulty of a frontal attack in a certain locality, asked if there were not a way round. We may not even after Armageddon get the nations by a definite communal consent and in so many words to abolish war—though they will be fools if they don't! But we are saving their time-dishonoured scruples, and we propose a way round. It is curious, but it is true, that nations have to be treated like children. Let us refrain even from the phrase League of Peace—lest it should alarm the undeveloped creatures. But what we may term the A. B. C. treaty and the mutual reduction of armaments are without question the irreducible minimum. Without them Armageddon is still to come; with them I believe we shall see the practical abolition of war, and certainly in the sense of war as, according to the jurist Grotius, "the condition of nations contending by force."

In effect, then, we must provide the means by which the national ethic may be raised, and we are to accomplish our end by consciously pursuing the stages in the course of the development of the individual ethic within the nation. These are:—

1. Peace within the borders.
2. Courts of justice.
3. Abolition of private warfare.

Thus we shall finally attain internationally:—

(a) A union of nations upholding universal peace.

(b) The establishment of an international court of justice.

(c) The abolition of national fighting machines except as an international police force.

The immediate need is for recognised international measures for insistence on law and order. If once this irreducible minimum can be secured, we may rest assured of the good things to follow.

H. D. ROBERTS.

REMINISCENCE AND A MILESTONE.

It is rather over fifty years ago since the writer first entered a Unitarian Chapel. Being located at Bristol the spirit of inquiry and curiosity tempted him one Sunday evening to attend Lewin's Mead Chapel. He was struck by the personality of the minister, who marched up the aisle, to the visitor's surprise, from the entrance end of the building—a square built, strong featured, rather short old man with flowing white hair, the severe black gown relieved by the white lappets of the abundant tie. He reminded the spectator of portraits of John Wesley. Nothing remains in the memory of the discourse, but only the impression of a sedate, serious and edifying service, the preacher being the Rev. W. James.

Twenty-five years elapse, and another visit is paid to the West country, this time as a delegate to visit a country chapel of General Baptist traditions where a new minister is being welcomed, the writer having meanwhile identified himself with the Free Churches, and in various capacities worked for them. Now another twenty-five years have expired and he again visits the same chapel, but this time to occupy the pulpit. In the evening there is a congregation of over one hundred, including a choir of twenty-five, conditions stimulating to a preacher, and rarely found in a church where a layman is welcomed to the pulpit. So by a strange chance, at the end of a busy season in which he completes twenty-five years of lay ministry, and also reaches the termination of his 70th year, he finds himself again not far from his native county, breathing the sweet west country air, and finishing off near where he began. There must surely be some ordering of events, for he has lately visited most of the churches in which he first preached, and the tale of his labours this year is seventy services for his seventy years, over a large area of country, while for the last twenty years he has preached on an average one sermon per Sunday, the district extending from Devonshire in the south to Northumberland in the north.

Perhaps under the circumstances this personal reference may be pardoned, and the writer would like at the close of an epoch important to himself to express his thankfulness for being permitted to do the work and to testify to the wonderful mystery of life which seems to grow on one as age advances. The dogmas of the churches may become of less moment as the years roll on, but the spiritual significance of Creation and Life grows clearer and more profound. There is a tendency at the present day to exclude age from the pulpit, but though youth has an elan of its own, age may have a spiritual vision which it alone can declare.

As the writer wandered for the first time for a few brief hours over the solitudes of Salisbury Plain, breathing the stimulating air, while the eye wandered over the vast and varied expanse illuminated by the rich September sunlight, a vision of God came to him such as, perhaps, the Patriarchs experienced in the days of old. It is He whom the soul can fully worship, the great "I am," the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But as the margin of the Plain is reached there is a change in the environment, vast camps of citizen soldiers lie before him—England's sons who have obeyed their country's call. Then came the thought of the Christ and of the great problem of diffusing his spirit among men.

Our churches may be more in number to-day, but they can hardly be said to be more powerful than they were fifty years ago. The liberal thinker must turn for satisfaction to the general trend of thought, and then surely he will see a loosening from the old positions and a general desire for more light. So the long vista of the future presents itself full of problems that can be dimly seen, for man is but awakening to the possibilities of his nature, and how he will shape his destiny who can say! We of the past generations may from a Pisgah height see the glory from afar; but it is not our lot to enter the promised land. Sufficient for us that we have taken part in the onward march.

E. C.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.
THE EXTERMINATION OF ARMENIA.

DEAR SIR,—At this time of awful crisis in the history of unhappy Armenia, we, the Committee of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, feel impelled to appeal to all Christendom for sympathy with Armenia's matchless wrongs and for offers of help to her people. It is time surely that all civilised nations, especially all neutral nations, should protest in the name of humanity against the latest and most infamous crimes yet committed by Turkey upon her defenceless Armenian subjects!

The thick curtain of oblivion and silence which has enshrouded Armenia since Turkey declared war upon the Allies has been at last partially lifted and we have caught certain glimpses of unrecordable horrors of systematically-planned massacres of all Armenians in the Six Vilayets, involving the total extermination of the nation; of their deportation to desert regions where they must inevitably perish by starvation, and of the appropriation of their lands by Moslems, the whole Satanic policy culminating in the expulsion of the Armenian Missionaries from the mission fields to which they have devoted themselves with rare heroism, ever standing as "the shadow of a great rock in a thirsty land" between the people and their persecutors. The latest news which now reaches us via America, is that our special friends, the missionaries of Van, whom we, as a committee, have so long supported and loved, had to fly before the Turks when the Russians evacuated the city. Ill, broken-hearted, destitute, they reached Tiflis on August 17th, Dr. Ussher seriously ill and Mrs. Raynolds suffering from a badly fractured leg. To complete the tragedy, Mrs. Raynolds died just two days before her husband reached Tiflis from the United States, where he, Dr. Raynolds, had been conducting a campaign on behalf of the proposed college in Van, for the last two years!

All friends of the noble Armenian people must to-day be full of indignation, full of sorrow, however absorbed they may be in their own fearful war; and I am sure we all desire to earnestly express such sorrow. We, old friends of the cause, must also sorrow for the present ruthless shattering of all our plans and hopes and work for the uplifting of the nation. But we can do more than sorrow, we can and we do most solemnly protest, and we can and do hold Turkey and Germany responsible for this last and greatest crime upon humanity. To-day we send to every part of the world where Armenians have sought asylum, our true, deep, fraternal sympathy, together with our vow that as far as in us lies, individually or collectively, we will see to it that freedom, justice and full political rights be ensured to the Armenian nation in the final settlement of peace which must sooner or later follow the great European war.—Yours, &c.,

MADELEINE COLE, Hon. Treasurer,
The Women's Armenian Relief Fund.
Danehurst, Putney, S.W.
September 29, 1915.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN:—Sicilian Studies: Alexander Nelson Hood. 5s. net.

THE BEACON PRESS:—War and the Breed: David Starr Jordan. 1. 35s.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & Co.:—The Challenge of Christianity to a World at War: E. Griffiths-Jones. 2s. 6d. net.

HODDER & STOUGHTON:—Knowing God for Certain: Frederic C. Spurr. 2s. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co.:—Practical Socialism: Canon Barnett and Mrs. S. A. Barnett. 6s. net.

MESSRS. RIDER & SON, LTD.:—Problems of the Borderland: J. Herbert Slater. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co.:—Is It Armageddon: Henry Sulley. 6d.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Quintessence of Capitalism: Werner Sombart. 15s. net. The Socialist Party in the Reichstag: P. G. La Chesnais 1s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Nineteenth Century, The Cornhill, The Quest, Sunday School Monthly.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

37TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	7098	8	0
Mrs. Eustace Thompson ..	0	10	0
Mrs. Aspland Jones ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Schultz (third donation)	1	1	0
Mr. Shirreff	1	1	0
"A. R." (third donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Rackham	0	10	0
Mr. John P. Hudson (third donation)	1	0	0
The Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Herford (second donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. and the Misses Martelli	2	0	0
Mr. F. Martelli	1	0	0
Unitarian Congregation and Friends, Dunedin, New Zealand, per the Rev. W. F. Kennedy	3	10	0
Mr. E. E. Roberts	5	0	0
Mrs. Lindsay Cropper (second donation)	2	0	0
Mr. Edward Wadsley (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Prof. S. Alexander (second donation)	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Pooley ..	1	0	0
Miss Amabel F. Simmons	1	0	0
The Misses Pearse (fourth donation)	2	0	0
The Misses Pearse (fourth donation)	2	0	0
Miss A. E. Clephan (third donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Chris. James (fifth donation)	5	0	0
Capt. Carpenter, R.N. ..	3	0	0
Mr. W. A. Sharpe (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. M. Oram (third donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Jones (second donation) ..	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (third donation)	1	0	0
"Sepoet"	0	10	0
Mrs. George S. Elgood ..	1	0	0
Friends at Cairo Street Chapel, Warrington, per J. S. H.	7	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (monthly donation) ..	4	0	0
Mrs. Walter Mallett (third donation)	2	2	0
Mrs. Kirke	5	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Wimbledon Unitarian Church, per Mr. W. N. Martin (seventh monthly donation)	1	0	0
Staffs of the Central School, Haverstock Hill, per Mr. F. Chappell (seventh monthly donation)	1	2	0
The Rev. and Mrs. H. Mc- Lachlan	2	2	0
Miss Louisa Marshall (second donation)	10	0	0
Miss Moreton (second dona- tion)	0	10	0
Mr. Arthur W. Harris (third donation)	0	10	0
Mrs. Osborne Smith	1	1	0
Mr. T. B. Taylor (second dona- tion)	5	0	0
Miss Phyllis Dyson (7 years old), proceeds of a concert organised by herself	0	10	6
Mr. J. J. Rawsthorn (second donation)	2	10	0
Miss Enid Rawsthorn (third donation)	0	10	0
Collection at Guild Meeting, Free Christian Church, Hastings	2	6	0
Pontypridd Branch Women's League, per Mrs. John Lewis	0	15	0
Melbourne Branch Women's League, per Miss Eleanor Wren	1	0	0
Mr. Henry Marsden (thirteenth donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. M. E. Brock	2	2	0
Collection at Lewin's Mead, Bristol, per Mr. J. T Underhill	7	10	5
Miss Mary Dendy (third dona- tion)	5	0	0
Miss Molly Waplin	10	6
Mrs. Tolmé	10	0	0
	£7,237	12	5

Parcels have been received from:—Mrs. Jervis; Mrs. Rackham; Miss Crowe; Mrs. Frank Preston; Swansea Unitarian Church Sewing Guild (per Mrs. Reid); Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss M. T. Worsley; Mrs. Herbert Smith; High Pavement War Relief Committee, Nottingham (per Miss S. Guilford); Miss Hamerton; Miss Garrett; Miss Agnes M. Bellhouse; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee (per Mrs. Duke); Miss E. M. Oram; Mr. Ernest Cook; Mrs. J. H. Green and Miss East; Mrs. Mitchiner and Miss Mildred Mitchiner; Mrs. Piggott; M. B. (per the Rev. F. H. Vaughan); Mrs. E. Worthington; Mrs. Lindsay Cropper; Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. Nuttall; Mrs. Cave-Browne-Cave; Mrs. F. Bishop; Mrs. W. H. Travers; Mrs. Travers' maids; the Misses Pearse; Miss Amabel F. Simmons; Miss L. A. Birks; Mrs. R. E. Robinson; Mrs. Wanton; Miss Joyce Cobb; Miss Gertrude Martineau; Mr. C. J. Lehmann (192 tins Nestlé's milk); Mr. A. H. Barlow (98 tins Benger's Food); Mr. Alfred Wilson (a typewriter); Bank Street Branch Women's League, Bury (per Miss Johnstone); Miss S. Booth; Miss Barratt; Miss F. Sharpe; S. A. and E. Gittins; "X."; Mrs. Osborne Smith; Mrs. E. A. Wurtzburg; Miss Helen Drummond; Mrs. Entwistle; Miss Florence Blake; Mrs. Slade; Mrs. E. Page; The Misses Fryer and friends; Mrs. Wm. Robertson.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

For the Hospitals:—

Money to buy hospital requisites of all kinds.
Shirts.
Socks.
Vests | woven or of a natural coloured
Pants | flannel. Patterns can be supplied.
Cardigans.
Shoes with leather or linoleum soles.
Towels.
Handkerchiefs.
Mufflers.
Playing cards, draughts, chess, dominoes,
Writing materials.

For Refugees (civilians):—

Money to support the hospice for sick and aged.
Clothes for men, women, children, and babies' layettes. Patterns can be had.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

A BELGIAN ENTERTAINMENT AT HAMPSTEAD.

ON Saturday, Sept. 25, a very successful entertainment was given in aid of the Belgian Hospital Fund in the garden of St. Cuthbert's, West Heath Road, Hampstead, kindly lent for the purpose by Mrs. Bayliss. The chief feature of the performance was a series of dances by Mme. Defauw and Miss Ruby Betteley, and for these the flowers and trees bordering the lawn, from which a distant view of Harrow-on-the-Hill could be seen, provided a perfect background. Surely nothing can bring more instant delight than to sit under a radiant sky, and watch figures clad in rose-colour or amethyst threading barefooted the mazes of melodies by Schubert, Glück, or Debussy as noiselessly as the sunlight flickering on the grass. Some of the music was very modern, but the rhythmic motions of the dancers brought back the freshness of the early world, and the pretty game of ball which was played to a lilting valse measure by Miss Betteley might have been enjoyed by Nausicaa. Delightful, too, was the dance of the winds ("Arabesque") with the floating movements and waving of filmy veils which made the poetical symbolism so effective, and the more solemn strains of the "Marche Héroïque," and "Marche Militaire" (Schubert) though they demanded a very different kind of action, were interpreted with extraordinary energy by Mme. Defauw.

Among the musical items on the programme, Handel's Sonata in A for violin and piano, with its delicate opening melody, was finely rendered by M. Desire Defauw and Miss Winifred Gardiner, and M. Marcel Laoureux, pianist to the Belgian Court, played Liszt's "Yeux d'eau de la Villa d'Este," and Rachmaninoff's impressive "Prelude in G Minor" in a masterly way. Mme. Jeanne Houben gave three "Old French Bergerettes" with much charm and feeling, and afterwards led a spirited rendering of some quaint Belgian Folk Songs, such as "Au Jardin de ma Tante," "Belle, qui tiens ma Vie," and "Mes Sabots de Bois," by a Belgian Choir. The joyous humour of these native songs probably brought home the unhappy condition of Belgium to many who heard them more poignantly than a sorrowful dirge would have done, and it was impossible not to wonder how long it would be before the exiled men whose sufferings we are trying to alleviate would hear them again in their own country, free from the shadow of war.

THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL AT WESTBOURNE PARK CHAPEL.

THE PURPOSE OF PAIN.

SPEAKING at the Thirty-Eighth Anniversary of the Consecration of Westbourne Park Chapel on Monday evening, the Rev. R. J. Campbell dwelt on the subject of pain and its salutary purposes, bringing out in a manner peculiarly his own the idea of the suffering God who bears all things that man is called upon to endure. If God is immanent in everything that he has created, then you cannot divorce him from the evil any more than you can divorce him from the joy of life; the sorrows which agonise the human heart also rend the heart divine, and the Maker of all things suffers with his erring and stricken children until they have learnt his purpose and entered into the joy of co-operation with him. The doctrine of immanence was not actually touched upon, but it was implied in every word uttered by Mr. Campbell, and very searching were the questions which he put to the crowded congregation as to the reality of the belief so often spoken of, but not always clearly understood, that God actually does stand beside the soul in sorrow and give it strength and courage to sustain its burdens.

The roots of the Christian religion, he said, were to be found in the conception of Israel as to the suffering servant of God set forth by Jeremiah and Isaiah, a conception which was taken up and translated into glowing reality in the words and experience of Christ. It was a vision of the spiritual pilgrimage of man anywhere and everywhere, and what we learnt from it was that God is intimately and immediately concerned with our pain, which could, indeed, have no meaning save as the harbinger of joy. Whence comes the painfulness of pain if not from the realisation that we are short of the fulness of the power of God, that we are somehow cut off from him by our inability to see the good lying beyond our hour of trouble, that, wherever he may be, the soul is not conscious of his presence as it goes down into the deep waters? The truth is that God is behind it all, that he himself endures for us, and that we are called upon to share the anguish as our part of the great purpose that is leading man on his upward pilgrimage. The saints and martyrs in all ages have known this, and counted their afflictions light for the glory that was set before them.

The saviours of mankind have never had easy or sheltered lives; they have been tossed about on the sea of trouble, they have been despised and rejected, misunderstood and persecuted, yet every one of them—Jeremiah, Paul, Stephen, whom that Paul stoned; Latimer, Wesley, and, most of all, our Lord himself, regarded themselves as vehicles of eternal truth, and willingly endured every trial for the sake of lifting humanity up to the light and love of God. This was a thought hard to accept, very often, by men—sometimes of the best intentions and filled with high aspirations—who had met with nothing but failure and loss, or those whom sorrow and disappointment had embittered, or those who had missed their opportunities and become soulless derelicts without hope or desire; but it was the lesson of Christianity and of history, and the only solution of the problem of life. To expect little from human nature, and despise it, was one thing; to expect little from it and still love it, and desire to save it, was another, and never was this better illustrated than at the present time. All over Europe idealists were suffering the bitter defeat of their dearest hopes, but the despair which they must feel—which even Jesus himself felt in the darkest hour of Calvary—was not shared by the men who were actually laying down their lives for their brothers in the trenches, and there never yet was one who fought on the spiritual battlefield as a follower of Christ who did not experience his resurrection morn. The place of suffering is holy ground, for there it is that God calls you, not so much to do something for him, as to let him do something for you. No pain inflicted by him is ever endured in vain, nor ever shall be, for behind all suffering bravely borne in humble sincerity and fidelity to truth are the eternal life and love. He has wrapped up in the individual soul something of himself, something which he desires to utter to the world, as the oak tree in its beauty is wrapped up in the tiny acorn—though man has the power, which the acorn has not, to refuse to do his will. When Jesus in physical anguish uttered that cry on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" it must be remembered that he had already made the supreme sacrifice and fulfilled the purpose of his life. There was nothing more that he could do. But God was doing all the rest, and he never was nearer to his beloved Son than at that very instant.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

As already announced the Triennial Meetings of the National Conference of Unitarian, Liberal Christian, and other Kindred Congregations, will be held in London from October 26—28 under the Presidency of Mr. Hugh R. Rathbone, of Liverpool. There has been some unavoidable delay in arranging the programme, but we are now in a position to make the following announcements:—The religious service will be held at Essex Church on Tuesday evening, October 26, when the Conference Sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. L. P. Jacks, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford. On Wednesday morning there will be a discussion on the Report on Public Worship. The Report, which has been circulated already, will be taken as read; the discussion will be opened by the Rev. Joseph Wood, and the Rev. Principal Mellone. Owing to the importance of the subject it is proposed that this discussion should be continued on Thursday morning, when special attention will be paid to the question of religious education and work among young people. At the Public Meeting on Wednesday evening the President will take the chair, and an address will be given by Prof. Gilbert Murray, of Oxford, on 'Ethical Problems of the War.'

A Local Committee for arranging hospitality and other details has been formed with Mrs. Sydney Martineau and Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., as Hon. Secretaries, and Mr. Harold Wade as Hon. Treasurer. Attention is called to the fact that the list of ministers and delegates desiring hospitality must be definitely closed in a few days.

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION. ANNUAL MEETINGS.

THE annual sermons of the Association were preached in the church of the Divine Unity, New Bridge Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Tuesday, September 26th, by Mr. Henry G. Chancellor, M.P., who created a profound impression by the earnestness with which he conducted the services. Large congregations assembled, and notwithstanding the darkened streets the evening congregation almost filled the church. Special collection, were taken on behalf of the funds of the Association and proved to be much in excess of the former year.

The meetings of the following day were preceded by a lunch, given by the retiring president, Alderman Sir Joseph Baxter Ellis, J.P., in the schoolrooms.

The business meeting was held in the church, the president occupying the chair. Representatives were present from most of the churches on the roll. In opening the meeting the president extended fraternal greetings to all the friends from the district churches and especially welcomed the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who attended as representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. In reviewing the history of the past year, the president said the Association had a great deal to be thankful for. The year had in many ways been prosperous, the finances were satisfactory, but as the committee had taken upon themselves new responsibilities, greater financial assistance would be required during the coming years.

The report of the committee was submitted by the secretary, Mr. E. H. Coysh, as also was the treasurer's statement in the unavoidable absence of the treasurer. The report and financial statement were accepted, and adopted. Due recognition of the services of the officers and committee having been given, a resolution of thanks was accorded to the committee of the Church of the Divine Unity for permission to hold all the meetings of the Association in that building. The new president, Mr. Thomas R. Short, was elected on the motion of Sir Joseph Ellis, and the Rev. Alfred Hall, who referred to the services rendered by Mr. Short to the Church of the Divine Unity for a great number of years. Mr. Chancellor and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie in response to special resolutions addressed the meeting. The Annual Tea was served in the school-room. A largely attended public meeting was held in the evening, Sir Joseph B. Ellis presiding, when vigorous addresses were delivered by Mr. Bowie, the Rev. T. Sykes of the Central Primitive Methodist Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and the Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A., pastor of the Church of the Divine Unity.

WE are informed that owing to the darkened condition of the streets it has been decided to abandon the usual United Service organised by the London District Unitarian Society at Austin Friars for this year.

ON Sunday, October 3, Dr. Hunter will resume the morning services at the Æolian Hall. The subject of his discourse will be, 'The Eternal March of Life: Some of its Deeper Aspects.'

It is announced that the Theistic Church will hold its opening services at its new home in Steinway Hall on Sunday next. In the morning Dr. Walsh will take Mr. Balfour's new volume of Gifford lectures for his subject, and in the evening he will give the first of a series of lectures on 'The Problems of War and Peace.'

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Cardiff, The late Mr. George Phelps.—The West Grove Church in Cardiff has suffered a very serious loss in the death, on September 23, of Mr. George Phelps at the age of 68. Mr. Phelps was one of those who earnestly worked to secure a Unitarian Church in Cardiff, he was present at the first recorded meeting held in 1880 at the office of Mr. Jenkins in the Philharmonic Building, St. Mary's Street, and thenceforward until his death he actively exerted himself in the interest of the church. He was one of the few surviving original trustees, and he has served in many capacities as Committeeman and Treasurer, always seeking the advancement and welfare of the church. Married in 1871 to Miss Frances C. Evans, his children successively passed through the Sunday School and became members of the church. One of his sons is the Rev. George Leonard Phelps, of Holywood, co. Down. In every relationship of life Mr. Phelps established ties of the deepest respect and esteem.

Glasgow.—The Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt., has intimated, that he has decided to accept a unanimous call which has been given him by the congregation of Park Street Church, Hull. The members of St. Vincent Street Church are extremely sorry to lose the services of Mr. Falconer. During the four years in which he has been in Glasgow he has done extremely good work in keeping together the members, and the church has been making steady progress year by year. Both Mr. and Mrs. Falconer have endeared themselves to all who have come into contact with them, and the best wishes of all members will go with them in their new sphere of work in Hull.

Halifax, The late Mr. Joe Sagar.—We deeply regret to record the death at The Poplars, Savile Park, Halifax, on Thursday, September 23, 1915, of Mr. Joe Sagar, aged 62 years, after a sharp and sudden illness of but three days. He was a generous and loyal adherent to the congregation at the Northgate End Chapel, at whose services his kindly dignified presence will greatly be missed. His early training was in the Church of England, his father was the honoured vergier at the old Parish Church, but for the greater period of his life he was a Unitarian, and attached to Northgate End. For many years he was a member of the Chapel committee, and for over twenty years he acted as Warden. He took a deep interest in the school, and his help could always be relied on in any movement that meant greater efficiency and progress. The Chapel shared with Freemasonry the principal interests of his life, outside the range of home and business, and the congregation in Halifax will feel his loss in many ways. For his interest expressed itself in several practical forms. He liked to help those who helped themselves, and sometimes his donations would take the form of a goodly percentage on the amount of money made by work or gathered in subscriptions. His acute mind was always at the service of his colleagues, and his fine business instincts have meant much for the financial soundness of the Chapel funds. But men valued him for what he was in himself, a good friend, a loyal colleague, and a healthy-minded man in whose nature shone qualities of sympathy, reverence and fine aspiration. The interment was on Monday, September 27, at All Saints' cemetery. The service in the church was conducted by the Rev. T. Rose Price, and the Rev. W. Lawrence Schroeder. Reference was made by Mr. Schroeder, at Northgate End Chapel on Sunday morning, to the very great loss the congregation had sustained in the death of Mr. Sagar, whose place would be exceedingly difficult to fill. Sympathy was expressed for Mrs. Sagar and her family.

Harvest Festivals.—Reports of Harvest Festival services have reached us from Accrington (preacher, the Rev. W. T. Bushrod, of Chorley); Ilford (preacher, the Rev. W. H. Drummond); Hastings (preacher, the Rev. W. H. Drummond); Parkstone, Emerson Hall (preacher, Mr. S. Clement Ryley); Ashton-under-Lyne (preacher, the Minister, the Rev. N. J. Hawthorn Jones); Horsham (preacher, the Rev. Joseph Wood); Bedford (preacher, Mr. Arthur Stuart); Framlingham (preacher, Mr. W. H. Sands); and Urmston (preacher, the Rev. Jenkin Evans, of Chester).

Hastings.—A meeting of the Guild was held at the Free Christian Church on Monday, September 27, when the Rev. W. H. Drummond gave an address on the work of the Belgian Hospital Fund. The Rev. Edgar Lockett presided. A collection in aid of the Fund realised £2 6s.

Hull.—The congregation of the Park Street Church have very regretfully taken leave of their pastor, the Rev. Lawrence Clare, who has accepted the call to the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. During the four years of their stay in Hull Mr. and Mrs. Clare have gained for themselves the warmest esteem and admiration of the people at Park Street, young and old, also of a large circle of friends in the city, where Mr. Clare's remarkable eloquence and ability combined with his high character, his geniality, the deep religious tone of his discourses, and his eager concern for the welfare and well-being of all who came under his influence, have made an impression that will long remain in the hearts of those who have had the privilege of knowing and hearing him. The Farewell Meeting was held in the new schoolrooms on Friday last, when Mr. Clare announced that the Rev. T. M. Falconer of Glasgow, had accepted the invitation to Hull; he congratulated the congregation on their choice, and remarked that it was the first time he had heard of a departing minister announcing his successor. Speeches were made by Messrs. E. G. Rymer, W. J. Strachan, J. H. Noble, L. Walker, F. Ingham, and Mrs. W. F. Harris, voicing the affection and regard of the congregation to Mr. and Mrs. Clare, to which they both responded. A copy of Rembrandt's 'Sweeping Girl' was presented to Mr. Clare, and a silver pendant to Mrs. Clare. A short entertainment to which Mrs. James Downs and Mr. N. Rymer contributed, concluded the meeting.

Ilford.—At the Harvest Festival on September 19 the special preacher was the Rev. W. H. Drummond. In his evening sermon he referred specially to the work of the Belgian Hospital Fund. The offertory on behalf of the Fund amounted to £3.

Ipswich.—The Rev. John William Saunders, M.A., will commence his ministry at the Friar's Street Church on Sunday, Oct. 3. Mr. Saunders since 1913 has been Tate Missionary Fellow of the Mill Street Mission at Liverpool. Educated at Glasgow University, 1906-10 he obtained his degree there in 1910, and studied subsequently at Manchester College, Oxford, being senior student in 1912.

London: Islington.—The Rev. J. Vint Laughland, late of Meadville, U.S.A., has accepted a preaching engagement at Unity Church for six months beginning Sunday, October 10.

Manchester.—At a meeting of the General Committee of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, held at the Memorial Hall on Monday last, warm tributes of affectionate regard were paid to the memory of the late Mr. J. H. Pimley. A resolution proposed by the President (the Rev. J. Mosley Mills) and supported by Mr. G. H. Leigh; Mr. D. A. Little, and others, placed on record the high regard in which Mr. Pimley was held and the deep gratitude with which his long services were remembered. Mr. Pimley was one of the most active and best known amongst our Manchester laymen. Of a genial and helpful nature, he was always full of good works, although he could rarely be induced to speak on the platform. One of the founders of the Moss Side congregation, he was actively associated with it to the end. To the Sunday School Association he gave over twenty years unstinted labour, filling with diligent care and inspiring cheerfulness the offices of financial secretary and chairman of the Homes Committee. At the same meeting of the committee it was announced that the late Mr. Youatt had bequeathed to the Association the sum of £50, of which he had desired that £30 should go to the work of the Holiday and Convalescent Homes.

Middlesbrough, the late Mr. William Lilley.—In the death of William Lilley at the age of 75, the church at Middlesbrough has lost one of its most loyal and devoted supporters. For close upon forty-five years he has been identified with the church, and fair weather or foul, he was never absent from his place except through illness, and was ever ready to greet with his cheery word and genial handshake members and visitors alike. Deeply interested in the faith which had redeemed his life and brought cheer and comfort into his home, he was ever anxious that others should share in the same privileges and advantages. An unwearied distributor of our literature, with always a tract for friend or inquirer, he also made himself responsible for the sale of our denominational papers, and never allowed a stranger to leave the services without handing to him or her a copy of THE INQUIRER or Christian Life. And even in his long illness, when no longer able to attend church, he was equally solicitous that his daughter should continue this propaganda. His long life was honourable, and he leaves behind a memory precious and inspiring to his family and friends.

Midland Guilds Union.—A united meeting of the Guilds in the Union was held at Kidderminster on September 18, when there was a large attendance of members of the Constituent Guilds. The chair was taken by the Rev. H. Warnock (President of the Union). During the course of the proceedings Mr. E. E. Wrigley, B.A., of Lye, read a paper, in which he traced the origin of the Guild Movement, dwelling especially on the formation and development of the National Conference Guilds' Union. Pointing out that the essential function is to provide "mutual help, mutual enjoyment, mutual encouragement in high endeavour," Mr. Wrigley pleaded for the recognition of the Guild as a distinctly religious organisation through the agency of which many may be enabled to find a new vigour and vitality, a new meaning and purpose in the great things of life. The Guild may help to make a permanent and real peace possible by creating and developing the sense of religious fellowship, founded upon love one to another, which is the essential and fundamental thing, and so add strength to our religious life and our church. The thanks of the meeting to Mr. Wrigley for his paper were expressed by Miss M. Twist and Miss C. Badland.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

ENGLISH PRISONERS IN GERMANY.

It is reassuring to those who have relatives or friends interned in Germany to know that the treatment is not equally severe in all the camps, and that the British prisoners are determined to be as merry as circumstances will permit. The following is an extract from a letter received from an Englishwoman living in Germany. "I had a letter from Frau B. yesterday," she says; "Her husband had been visiting the camps, and at one he had been seeing some theatrical performances by our people that had been so frightfully entertaining and shriekingly funny he had laughed himself ill over them. He said the prisoners were allowed to go into Berlin to get costumes and theatrical properties, and seemed to be having a very good time among themselves."

"BROTHER RICHARD'S BOOKSHELF."

We have received several copies of the cheap reprints issued by "Brother Richard," at one time a well-known Congregational Minister, who is trying to popularise the best literature among a section of thoughtful working people for whom even the shilling or sixpenny editions are too expensive. We understand that a complete set of these little volumes, eight in number, already published, can be obtained for 2s. post free from "Brother Richard," 31, St. Mary's, York. The series includes Browning's

'Christmas Eve,' with introduction and notes by Mr. T. E. Harvey, M.P., Mazzini's 'Duties of Man,' Sir Chiozza Money's 'Hope for the Worker,' and 'The Labourer and the Land,' by Mr. Seebolm Rowntree. The books can be had singly at the very low cost of 2d. each, post free.

ARTS AND CRAFTS IN CALCUTTA.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore is remarkable for the way in which he endeavours to embody his religious ideals and his passionate love of beauty in practical schemes for the permanent enrichment of the human mind. He has for a long time been deeply interested in the question of education, and his school for boys at Bolpur in Bengal is one of the most successful institutions of the kind to be met with anywhere. We understand that he has now set aside a part of his family residence in Calcutta to be used as a school of arts and crafts, and that some nine teachers and a number of students of both sexes are already installed there. The objects aimed at in this venture would seem to be much the same as those which the originators of the Peasant Arts Society in this country set before them, and, if realised, they will do something, at least, to mitigate the disastrous effects of the factory system, which is developing rapidly in India, on the imagination and manual dexterity of a people to whom the making of beautiful things has hitherto been as natural as breathing. The curriculum at this Art House does not, however, entirely exclude modern subjects, and the founder has been obliged to consent to the teaching of shorthand and typewriting.

THE LATE MR. HOWARD EVANS.

At the recent council meeting of the International Arbitration League the death of Mr. Howard Evans, and his life-long work on behalf of international peace, were recorded in the following minute: "After the death of the founder of the League, the Council has now to express its sense of the greatest loss which it has suffered since it came into being by the passing away of Howard Evans, for thirty-eight years its faithful chairman. An original member of the League, in 1870, he had for the long period of forty-five years taken an intimate part in its work, and for the greater part of the time had presided over the deliberations of the Council. The late Sir Randal Cremer had in him a devoted colleague, who placed his gifts freely at his service in the interests of the cause they both served so splendidly. As his co-workers know so well, Howard Evans right to the end was actively engaged in the good work to which he had consecrated so much time and energy. Along with his fellow Cremer Trustees, he watched with care over the interests entrusted to them by his departed friend; as Chairman of the Council, he was a vigilant champion of the cause for which the League stands; and the pages of The Arbitrator bear witness to his judgment and skill. A convinced pacifist, he tried through a long life to persuade his fellow countrymen that international justice could never be secured whilst militarism held sway over the destinies of the world, and he died resolute in that belief. Whilst mourning the absence of our revered chairman, and realising the loss it has sustained, the Council can only close this minute with a note of gratitude for the labours of Howard Evans, a true friend of progress and a lover of mankind."

LECTURES IN WAR TIME.

The annual report of the Social and Political Education League gives an encouraging account of the activities of the society since the outbreak of the war. At first it was feared that its work would have to be suspended, but as time went on it was decided to allow matters to proceed, and there is reason to believe that in spite of many difficulties a considerable amount of useful work has been done. One hundred and seventy-eight lectures have been given, a large number of these, of course, dealing with questions and problems directly or indirectly relating to the national crisis. The League has suffered both by the loss of the services of many active lecturers, and also by reason of many Societies which have hitherto been served by it having temporarily suspended their own work, and the death of Mr. Rolleston Stables, who was killed in action in France, is deeply regretted. In the circumstances, and as a matter of economy, it has been decided not to publish a new Lecture List, but to make use of the current list, and although the war will inevitably dominate public life and thought during the coming season, it is hoped that members and friends of the League will continue to support it loyally. All lectures are given gratuitously, although societies and clubs are urged to contribute towards the expenses according to their means.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street.)

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to Hon. Sec., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

TENTERDEN.—FURNISHED HOUSE To Let—Autumn and Winter Months. 2 Reception, 3 Bedrooms, usual offices, hot and cold water, geyser, radiators. Dogs, children, and smokers objected to.—Address B, INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—"FERN LODGE."—COMFORTABLE BOARD RESIDENCE, near Unitarian Church, close to Sea, Winter Gardens, and other attractions. Terms from 35s.—Mesdames MOON and STEVENS.

SUSSEX DOWNS.—SLINDON.—FURNISHED COTTAGE (three bed and two Sitting-rooms) TO BE LET. Gas and water. Garage for small car. Beautiful fir woods. Good centre for walking holiday. Rent 3 guineas a week.—Apply DR., Worthing Lodge, Worthing.

HARROGATE.—COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, seven minutes from station, two minutes from Baths and Pump-room; moderate terms.—Thompson, 22, Belmont Road.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

IRISH PILLOW LINEN in bundles of Remnants, sufficient to make six full-size Pillow Cases, only 7s. 6d. Postage 5d. Genuine offer. Catalogue free. Send a postcard to-day. HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 2, 1915.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3823.
NEW SERIES, No. 926.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

IMPORTANT BOOKS

Published by T. FISHER UNWIN.

The Quintessence of Capitalism.

By WERNER SOMBART, Author of "The Jews and Modern Capitalism." Translated and edited by M. EPSTEIN, M.A., Ph.D. Cloth, 15s. net.

Capitalism is one of the most popular catchwords of our age. We are constantly hearing of the capitalist, of the capitalist system, of capitalist undertakings, and so forth. Yet there is no work which gives a clear statement of the true nature of capitalism and of the capitalist spirit. Prof. Sombart's book—a history of capitalism in Europe from the Middle Ages onwards—provides this desideratum, and readers will find it full of brilliant ideas and happy comparisons interesting in the extreme.

The Soul of Europe. A CHARACTER STUDY OF THE MILITANT NATIONS.

By JOSEPH McCABE. Cloth, 10s. 6d. net.
[Second Impression.]

"Mr. McCabe has written an illuminating and valuable book, which is all the more convincing since he is candid enough to admit the fine qualities which have been submerged in the havoc of this awful war."—The Standard.

The Birth-Time of the World, and other Scientific Essays.

By J. JOLY, Sc.D., F.R.S., Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. Illustrated. 10s. 6d. net.

"A volume of extraordinary interest and suggestiveness in which Professor Joly brings before us many of the deepest things of modern physical science in a prose setting that is a literary joy to possess."—The Contemporary Review.

Every Irishman's Library. (SIX VOLUMES.)

Irish literature is rich beyond compare in historic incident, noble aspiration, humour, romance, and poetic sentiment. Thus, not to Irishmen only but to all who take a general interest in the literature of the nations, the literature of Ireland makes a special appeal.

Hitherto this literature has been a closed book to many, and it is the purpose of EVERY IRISHMAN'S LIBRARY to bring its noble treasures of prose and verse to the doors of all book lovers.

FIRST SIX VOLUMES READY.

Cloth, with a frontispiece, 2s. 6d. net each.

1. THOMAS DAVIS.

Selections from his Prose and Poetry.
Edited by T. W. Rolleston, M.A. (Dublin).

2. WILD SPIRITS OF THE WEST.

By W. H. Maxwell.
Edited by the Earl of Dunraven.

3. LEGENDS OF SAINTS AND SINNERS FROM THE IRISH.

Edited by Douglas Hyde, LL.D. (Dublin).

4. THE BOOK OF IRISH HUMOUR.

Edited by Charles L. Graves, M.A. (Oxon.)

5. IRISH ORATORS AND ORATORY.

Edited by Professor T. M. Kettle, M.P.

6. THE BOOK OF IRISH POETRY.

Edited by Alfred Perceval Graves, M.A. (Dublin).

A descriptive prospectus will be sent free to any reader of this journal on application.

T. FISHER UNWIN, Ltd., 1, Adelphi Terrace, London.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

October

10. Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS (of Bury).

17. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

24. Rev. GILBERT THOMAS SADLER, M.A., LL.B. (of Wimbledon).

31. Rev. W. J. JUPP (of Letchworth).

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

HIBBERT TRUST.

ONE SCHOLARSHIP on this foundation, of the value of £120, tenable for One Year, will be awarded in December next, provided that a Candidate of sufficient merit presents himself. Candidates are required solemnly to declare in writing that it is their intention to exercise the office of Minister of Religion amongst those who profess Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form, and who do not require for themselves or their ministers subscription to any doctrinal articles of belief. They must also furnish satisfactory evidence of age, graduation, &c., in accordance with the regulations, which may be obtained from the Secretary of the Trust.

Names and addresses of candidates should be in the hands of the Secretary by November 1st, and the required declaration, certificates, testimonials, and all other information must be in the hands of the Secretary not later than Saturday, November 6th.

FRANCIS H. JONES, Secretary.
University Hall, Gordon Square,
London, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

Services will be resumed on Sunday, October 17th, at 11.30,

AT THE

Assembly Room, Downing Street,

BY

The Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Particulars from the Secretary,
Mr. H. SANDON, Queens' College.

UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON. (UPPER STREET.)

HARVEST AND ANNIVERSARY SERVICES,
11, 3.15, and 7,
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 10th, 1915,
Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO. Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

The Executive Committee has decided under present conditions NOT to hold the United Service this year.

J. ARTHUR PEARSON,

Secretary pro tem.

PARK-Y-VELVET CHAPEL, Carmarthen.

Re-opening after Successful Restoration,
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 10th, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence. — For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, October 10.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11 and 7, Rev. NEONE RAAD.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W., 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballard Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11. Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, Harvest and Anniversary Services, 11, 3.15, and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Rev. C. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 Mr. J. H. NOBLE; 6.30, Mrs. SCOTT.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. REED.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.—Harvest Services.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisdarg Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

JONES.—On the 6th October, at The Cottage, Station Road, Hendon, N.W., to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold F. Jones, a son (Laurance Fearon).

MARRIAGE.

RICHTER—ADDIS.—On September 28th, at All Saints' Church, Ennismore Gardens, London, Capt. Alexr. P. Richter, S. African Union Defence Force, to Ena Law, daughter of the Rev. W. E. and Mrs. Addis, of Rutland Gate, London.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

ADVERTISER offers Home to reliable person for work of Small House. 2 Ladies. No washing.—Address X., 9, St. Anne's Terrace, Lewes, Sussex.

COMPANION to elderly Lady requiring kind personal assistance, help in needlework, housekeeping. Lady with varied experience desires re-engagement.—C. C., THE INQUIRER Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted

20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	491	National Conference	496	The Provincial Assembly of London and the South-Eastern Counties	497
THE STILLING OF DOMESTIC STRIFE	493	MEMORIAL NOTICE:—		The Yorkshire Unitarian Union	493
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	494	The Rev. R. J. Orr	496	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	499
M. SABATIER IN LONDON	494	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	499
CORRESPONDENCE:—		Belgian Hospital Fund	496
Compulsory Military Training in Schools	495

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

It is a welcome relief to enter the bewildering world of public events week by week through the porch of charity. It keeps our finer feelings alive, it gives us firm support in the storm of human passion, and it rebukes every inclination to sink into fatalism, feeling that we can do no more. It is true that the field for beneficent service is so wide, that we are tempted to do a little here and a little there; and in the end we begin to wonder whether we have done anything worth doing after all. For this reason there is wisdom in annexing a limited field with special characteristics of its own. There we can feel the pulse of personal sympathies, and resolve that nothing shall be lacking on our part in order to make our service worthy of the cause of pity and righteousness and love, in which it is offered. We are glad that our readers agree with us so cordially in this point of view, and have given so large a welcome to our appeal for the Belgian hospitals. But there are some who have not done anything yet. Will they not send us pence if they cannot afford shillings, or shillings if they cannot afford pounds? We make the suggestion, not as pensioners upon public bounty, but as those who have it in their power to offer to others a share in a glorious privilege.

WE are very grateful for the various church collections for the Belgian Hospital Fund which have reached us lately, and there are others to come. It is an excellent way of gathering small sums from the numerous people whose names never appear upon a subscription list, and it links the life of the congregation with the wants which we are trying to supply. May we repeat what we said last week about the great need of blankets for the winter; partly because it has already brought us a most welcome response, but chiefly because we want a great many more. One contributor in sending a donation for blankets this week writes: "The Editor of THE INQUIRER, I see, thinks we are or shall get tired of giving, but I am certain we shall not as long as a Belgian, child, woman, or man needs our help." No the Editor does not think that generous hearts will get tired; it is only a cautious friend here or there who wonders whether we can really go on with the marvellous success of the last few months. Well we mean to try, and we know the strength of the forces of human sympathy and religious conviction which are behind the Fund.

THERE is one practical detail to which we wish to call attention. We do so without any apology for putting such a trivial thing in an important place, for nothing is trivial that helps the work of doing good and our success has depended largely upon the most careful personal supervision and the avoidance of waste. Mrs. Allen issues a list of 'Articles Required' in our columns every week. It is not always the same list, but is modified according to the state of our supplies. When any item is dropped out it means that for the time being we have enough of that particular article, either promised or in stock, and other needs are much more urgent. When private donors or working parties are setting their hands to some new piece of work they will help us greatly if they will consult the list. We have had some fine gifts of children's clothing lately for our civilian work. Our chief and increasing need is warm clothes for the men when they leave hospital.

ONLY a very rash writer will attempt to forecast the issue in the Balkans. The whole situation is a terrible tangle of intrigue and personal dissension, and now there is open conflict between the ambition or timidity of crowned heads and the will of the people. On Thursday morning it was announced that Russia has broken off diplomatic relations with Bulgaria, and we must presume that France and Great Britain will do the same. It is a course which we must view with the gravest concern, not only because it increases the hazards of war, but chiefly because it does violence to strong political sympathies. But in the circumstances nothing else is possible, for our friendship with Bulgaria was based upon respect, and it is impossible to respect the scheming foreign king and the miserable camarilla of Germanised politicians, who for the moment control her affairs. It is clear that they are ready to throw the country into the arms of Germany for a price; but events may show that they have only played the part of gamblers, who have dug a pit for themselves, when they reckoned upon the obedience of the army to break the antagonism of the people.

EVENTS in Greece are only a shade less perplexing than those in Bulgaria. The Greek army has been mobilised, ostensibly to curb the ambitions of Bulgaria. The landing of French troops at Salonika for the defence of Serbia has been greeted with popular enthusiasm. M. Venizelos has obtained an endorsement from Parliament of his policy of a strict fulfilment of treaty obligations towards Serbia. And suddenly the King, either from some taint of indecision in his character or deep design, has wobbled and dismissed his minister. It is a situation in which almost anything appears possible, and for the moment comment is useless. One thing seems quite certain, that the German sympathies of the court will not be able to drag the people into an alliance with Turkey. A revolution, a coup d'état in which M. Venizelos would be acclaimed as the national deliverer, anything is more likely than that.

* * *

THE events of the last few weeks in the Balkans have revealed another page in Germany's deeply laid schemes for a successful war of conquest. For years she has contrived to make the Balkan problem an open sore in European politics. She has made it her aim to keep these miserable Balkan peoples weak and divided, because she wanted to use them as pawns in her game, and they lie on the road to Constantinople and the Eastern Empire of her dreams. No one believes that she really cares for them or has the slightest regard for their interests. She would surrender them cheerfully to an engineered Turkish massacre, if it would bring her a step nearer to the dominion of the world. All these deeper issues of the war were clear enough in its early stages. We were right to make the treatment of Belgium the touchstone of German motives, and to see in it not a horrible blunder, into which a spirited people had been betrayed by fear for its own safety, but a cunning and deliberate crime.

* * *

COUNT REVENTLOW'S apology for the extermination of the Armenians, in reply to the protests which have appeared in the American press, is unofficial, but it is in harmony with Germany's usual policy of complete indifference in these matters. Here are his words in all their brutal shamelessness.

For a German there can, of course, be no question of meddling at the instigation of a third party with the affairs of our Turkish Ally. If the Turkish authorities believe it opportune to take vigorous measures against unreliable, blood-thirsty, riotous Armenian elements it is not only right but even a duty to do so. Turkey can always be assured that the German Empire will always be of opinion that this matter only concerns Turkey. A third Power should, at any rate, let Turkey alone. On the other hand, it is clear enough that our enemies would be glad to see Germany undertake steps which might produce a disagreeable impression at Constantinople.

* * *

SUCH is the apology, and now for the facts, which were the subject of a terrible indictment of the Turkish Government by Lord Bryce in the House of Lords on Wednesday.

The facts as to the slaughter in Trebizond [he said] were vouched for by the Italian Consul, who was there at the time. Orders came from Constantinople that all the Armenian Christians in Trebizond were to be killed. Many of the Muslims tried to save their Christian neighbours, and offered them shelter in their houses; but the Turkish authorities were implacable. Obeying the orders which they had received, they hunted out all the Christians, gathered them together, and drove them down the streets to the sea. They were all put on board sailing boats, carried out some distance into the Black Sea, and there thrown overboard and drowned. The whole Armenian population of from 8,000 to 10,000 was destroyed in that way in one afternoon. After that, any other story becomes credible, and I regret that all the stories contain similar elements of horror, intensified in some cases by stories of shocking torture. Nearly the whole nation has been wiped out, and I do not think there is any case in history, certainly not since the days of Tamerlane, in which any crime so hideous and upon so large a scale has been recorded.

* * *

LORD CROMER did well to point out that these atrocious crimes must not be laid to the charge of Islam. He believed that all the educated Mahomedans of India would look with as great horror as we do ourselves upon the proceedings of the Turkish Government. We agree most cordially with his plea that steps should be taken at once to enlighten India and Egypt upon the subject. The blame must be placed with all possible emphasis upon the gang of venal politicians in Constantinople. The men who planned these massacres are the tools of Germany. It is Germany who dictates their policy and Germany who pulls the strings. We hope that this scheme of wholesale slaughter was not conceived by a German brain; but nothing but a protest by Germany, which will ring round the world, can rid her of the suspicion of criminal complicity. And who believes that such a protest will be made?

* * *

THE word has gone forth that more men are needed for our army, and this Armenian horror has come to reinforce the familiar lesson of Belgium. It should rouse every instinct of self-devotion and galantry which we as a nation possess. Let the young men who still linger at home listen to the piercing cry of these Armenian Christians, and then let them ask themselves, with a sincerity that will have its answer, what strong and effective thing they are going to do. Will they not obey the clear call of duty and risk everything in order to bring deliverance? To wait and do nothing, or to leave it to others, will mean for them an indelible shame.

* * *

Do not let any young man be angry with us for putting the case in this blunt way, because we do not know how else to put it. We cannot to any profit go over all the familiar arguments again. We understand the reluctance to join the army which was felt by many during the first few months of the war. To become a soldier was inconsistent with all they had planned and hoped, and cut clean across their doctrinaire theories of life. It was possible to play the part of the conscientious objector with a cheerful confidence in their own scruples, or to cling to the pleasant belief that they could serve the country's need best by staying at home and helping others to be good. But little by little hesitation of this kind has been overcome by the stern logic of facts. Many men have yielded because they could no longer stand the strain of a divided mind. Others have come to see more clearly than they did how critical the issue is for the future of the world, and their own affairs have paled into insignificance before it. We make the appeal again as plainly as possible, in the hope that it may help some to see where their duty lies.

* * *

OUR final word this week must be one of admiration for the action of our friend and contributor the Rev. H. D. Roberts in joining the army. No ordinary place was open to him owing to his age. But he has strength and an indomitable cheerfulness of heart, and he can dig. And so he has gone from us as a corporal of navvies to make trenches and do all the hard drudgery of an army labourer. It is his bit, and his friends will think of him with honour for the spirit which has accepted the lowliest service, and possibly with a touch of envy because the years have dealt so lightly with him. Already he writes, "all former things pale into insignificance in this new universe." Probably among his pals, who are drawn from a very different stratum of life from himself, he will find as large a sphere for manly influence and true ministry as in his former pulpit at Hope Street Church.

THE STILLING OF DOMESTIC STRIFE.

IN one of the lectures which M. Paul Sabatier delivered in London last week, we were struck by some illuminating remarks upon the influence which the dangers and the great duties of the war have had upon the temper of the French people. They have not all learned to think alike, but old controversies have lost their bitterness. They have been pushed into the background because men have begun to care for something else, and to realise the strength of common loyalties and affections which were regarded too little in days of peace. The clamour of war has meant the stilling of domestic strife, not merely in obedience to the instinct of self-preservation, but because a new scale of values has been imposed upon the conscience and the heart. The simple and ultimate things are in the ascendant once more. Nowhere, perhaps, could this lesson be so impressive as in France, for the lines of separation went deep and far. The antagonism between clericals and anti-clericals, the mobilised forces of the Church on the one hand, and the claims of reason, criticism, and the secular life on the other, had in it elements of bitterness and social alienation which can hardly find a parallel in our own country; and the events of the last few years, which culminated in the Separation Law, only accentuated the cleavage. In no case is sectarianism in politics and religion so hard to overcome as when religious passions enter into it. But the wind of disaster and the sharp summons to sacrifice have suddenly stilled the cries of party and faction. Men who have been ranged in opposite camps all their lives have clasped hands in a common emotion. They care more for France than for their own party, and the call to be true to the cause of freedom and humanity, with all the stern self-dedication which it involves, is a deep bond of spiritual union.

The same thing has been happening in our own country, though, perhaps, hardly on the same scale, for we have not undergone such searching discipline. Here and there the spirit of faction still mutters and growls; or obscure groups of malcontents proclaim to a heedless world their obstinate preference for their own opinions. But for most of us old forms of strife have been stilled by the austere voice of duty. Watchwords which not long ago stirred us to enthusiasm or brought the word of anger to our lips, sound like the echoes of a vanished world. We have not surrendered our belief in the causes for which we toiled in the past; but the fact that we are Unionists or Home Rulers, Conservatives or Social Democrats, old-fashioned Church and State men or idealists of the newest school, matters very little in comparison with the ties which bind us to the common Mother, whose blood flows in our veins, whose welfare and security are more precious to us than anything besides. And it is the same with religion. How odd it seems that any one can still occupy himself with the issues of Kikuyu, or indulge the mighty passion of exclusiveness, or speak bitterly of any fellow-Christian who is bearing the same yoke of discipline as himself. These things we know ought not to be because they betray an uncontrolled appetite for secondary things, a spirit that is still untouched by the mighty visitation of God. The churches, with their clanking machinery and their trained instinct for separatism, still follow the familiar paths; but already we can catch a new accent in their message, in harmony with the demand of the people for spiritual reality and a religion which uses the common language of love and sacrifice.

Perhaps some of our readers will regard all this as one of the evils of the war which has simply distorted our vision and confused our minds. Differences, they remind us, exist; why then should we pretend to ignore them? Strife is one of the conditions of progress, and truth is only established when error is overthrown. We do not deny it; but we recognise none the less that among men, whose hearts are set upon the triumphs of goodness, there is such a thing as common ground. Our English citizenship, with all its acute divisions, is based upon a common patriotism; and our citizenship in the Kingdom of Heaven rests upon affections and loyalties of the spirit which are the same for us all.

There is a time to divide in vigorous protest against what we believe to be false or wrong; and there is a time to recover the abiding unity of the spirit. Our own life, in all its intenser experience, consists largely in a rhythmic movement from the universal to the particular, and then back from the particular to the universal. Our personal interests, our sectional impulses, must all find their place in the common life, and there are moments when, for the soul's health, they must be surrendered to its larger claims. Such a moment has come to us now. This testing hour has little to tell us about the things which separate us into classes and parties. It provides us with no new programme of sectional activities either in politics or religion. But, through the stilling of our strife, it has much to reveal about the common ground upon which we stand and the human heart by which we live.

Of course, no sane man believes that all the old disputes are settled. No doubt many of our divisions have been due to a thoughtless reverence for the traditions of the elders, or an obstinate belief in the infallibility of our own logic. These may well disappear under the influence of larger vision and a humbler mind. But others correspond to real differences in human nature, and variations in sensitiveness to the imperious claims of truth and justice. The old battles will be fought over again until we find some loftier conception which will do equal justice to Catholic and Protestant, to Individualist and Socialist, to the demands of law and the claims of freedom, to the ideal of human perfection and the tragedy of human guilt, and that day is not yet. But when we return to them it will be our shame and undoing if we simply furbish up the old weapons and renew the old party cries, and regard all these days of wonder and pain merely as an awkward interruption to our plans.

The stilling of domestic strife has done two things for us. It has given the quietus to many old disputes with their inherited antipathies. We can hardly imagine ourselves recovering any interest in them or slipping back into the old habits of thought and speech. It will add much to the zest and joy of living if our dead politics and our dead theology, and all the bitterness which they engendered, are gone beyond recall. We needed the sharp schism of the war to separate between the living and the dead, to make us ask whether we are contending for things of real value, and to deliver us from our too willing bondage to what is conventional and second-rate. And this tornado of death is also the beginning of new life. It is a time not for the thinker and the philosopher but for the man of action. We have no use for theories and explanations when life is crammed with emotion, and things of vital moment are happening before our eyes. Did the disciples try to solve the mystery of pain or discuss rival doctrines while Christ was dying on the cross? It is the birth hour of unsearchable riches of new experience for humanity, and for centuries to come men will ponder on its meaning, and carry the burden of its perplexity and the light of its revelation in their hearts. Historians will study it, thinkers will explain it, theologians will explore its mysteries of sorrow and triumph. For the crash will pass, and the familiar habits of thought and argument will be resumed. There will be fresh groupings around rival ideals in Church and State, and truth will still be won by conflict. But it need not be quite in the old temper. We can face the new world as new men for whom the former things have passed away. We can take into our devotion to particular duties and private aims, the wide vision, the large tolerance, the sense of union in the deep soul of goodness, which we learned in the days when the men of our land, laying aside their differences, were of one heart and one mind, and the voice of strife was stilled.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

AND the quest, the pursuit,
The attack and the conquest,
Of the Unknown goes on—
Goes on in the Joy of the Lord.
For beaten in Time
From the start to the finish,
So utterly beaten
Appeal is impossible,

The Spirit of Man,
Inquiring, aspiring;
Passionately scaling
Ice-bitten altitudes,
Neighbourhood of none
Save the austere
Unapproachable Stars.
Scapes from its destiny,
Holds on its course
Of attest and discovery,
So as to leave,
When the Lord takes it back to him,
The lot of the World
Something the prouder,
Something the loftier,
Something the braver,
For that it hath done.

W. E. HENLEY.

THE NECESSARY DEDICATION OF LIFE.

In whatever I may say touching the religion which has been the foundation of art, or the policy which has contributed to its power, if I offend one, I shall offend all; for I shall take no note of any separations in creeds, or antagonisms in parties: neither do I fear that ultimately I shall offend any, by proving—or at least stating as capable of positive proof—the connection of all that is best in the crafts and arts of man, with the simplicity of his faith, and the sincerity of his patriotism.... The more that my life disappointed me, the more solemn and wonderful it became to me. It seemed, contrarily to Pope's saying, that the vanity of it was indeed given in vain; but that there was something behind the veil of it, which was not vanity. It became to me not a painted cloud, but a terrible and impenetrable one; not a mirage, which vanished as I drew near, but a pillar of darkness, to which I was forbidden to draw near. For I say that both my own failure, and such success in petty things as in its various triumph seemed to me worse than failure, came from the want of sufficiently earnest effort to understand the whole law and meaning of existence, and to bring it to noble and due end; as, on the other hand, I saw more and more clearly that all enduring success in the arts, or in any other occupation, had come from the ruling of lower purposes, not by a conviction of their nothingness, but by a solemn faith in the advancing power of human nature, or in the promise, however dimly apprehended, that the mortal part of it would one day be swallowed up in immortality; and that, indeed, the arts themselves never had reached any vital strength of honour but in the effort to proclaim this immortality, and in the service either of great and just religion, or of some unselfish patriotism, and law of such national life as must be the foundation of Religion.

RUSKIN.

REMEMBER, O Lord, those who have asked remembrance in our prayers. Give rest to them that have fallen asleep before us, and heal them that are sick; for thou art the life and the hope, and the raiser up of us all; that so we may send up thanksgiving into highest Heaven, world without end. Amen.

MINGLE, O Lord, our humanity with thy divinity, thy greatness with our humility, and our humility with thy greatness. Amen.

(From Armenian Liturgies.)

M. SABATIER IN LONDON.

ON the evening of Saturday, Sept. 24, we were standing on the platform of Victoria Station waiting for the Continental train that was bringing to London an honoured visitor from France, M. Paul Sabatier, the biographer of St. Francis. He was coming across by special invitation to deliver four lectures to the teachers of London on "The New France." As we walked up and down the platform, recalling memories of the French masters of our school-days and contrasting the feelings of the English towards the Frenchman of to-day with the feelings of thirty years ago, we little knew that on that very day events had been taking place in France which had linked the two countries together in a crushing blow struck for the liberty of Europe and the world. One certainly noticed, as the train drew up, that there were fewer officers and soldiers than usual returning on leave, but this was hardly enough to lead one to think that the long suspense had at last been broken. Our visitor was equally unconscious of the great events of the day as he stepped from the train and returned our greeting. His fine head, clear-cut features and radiant eyes marked him as one of the intellectuals of France, a man of piercing thought, of high ideals and generous impulse. His pleasure at setting foot once more in London was evident and his greeting to his English friends was of transparent cordiality.

A day or two later I met him again at an informal interview with some of those who had organised the visit. As he talked one soon saw what was his dominant thought about his country. A wonderful thing had been happening during the past year. A spiritual awakening had taken place through the length and breadth of the land, and the France that till recently had been torn by dissensions and threatened with inner decay had been transformed into the glorious France of old, the home of ideals, of undaunted courage and undying devotion. This was the good news that he had come over to tell us.

The London teachers had been looking forward for some weeks to seeing and hearing the distinguished Frenchman who, when driven by German persecution from his pastorate in Strasburg, had found a refuge in Assisi and had then taken up the task of making known to the world the life of St. Francis. As he stepped upon the platform the outburst of applause which greeted him made him feel that he was among people who knew and admired him, and throughout his lectures, though some could probably not follow all he said, the feeling of rapprochement between the speaker and the audience was very marked.

At the opening of the first lecture he addressed an impressive salutation to the soldiers of all those countries who were fighting side by side for liberty. He spoke with feeling of all and with special warmth of England and France, but perhaps the most touching allusion was to Belgium, with her crown of thorns, who had gone forth to martyrdom for the sake of humanity. As he spoke one's thoughts turned to the broken form of some poor Belgian peasant lying on a bed of suffering far away from all he loved, bearing in patience his load of pain and sorrow.

Presently, with that inimitable touch which only the French language can give, he began a description of the scenes which took place in France at the opening of the war. He told us how the French peasants and the French nation had believed with all their soul in peace; how, when the blow fell, they were taken unawares, and how France rose to meet her fate ready to face destruction, provided her conscience was clear. The supreme test had come, and she did not flinch; but her heart was heavy, for she knew the power of the enemy, and she felt how weak she was herself. Then he told us how, in his home on the mountain slopes, he was pondering over his country's fate when suddenly news came which sent a thrill through every heart. "L'Angleterre marche avec nous!" "England has joined us!" Never, not even in the hour when peace is signed, will there be such joy as arose when those words were spoken. The pent-up feelings of all who heard them broke forth in a torrent of joy. Even as he spoke of it the speaker's voice almost failed him, and one realised what it must have meant to have lived through that rapturous hour. "And yet," he said, "it was not the help of England's strong right arm that was uppermost in our thoughts at that moment; it was the sense of moral support, the sense of comradeship in a common cause. We did not stand alone as champions of the right; England was with us. We felt that the enemy had foreseen much, but had not foreseen everything; they had not taken into account the power of the spirit. Their doom was sealed on the day when the conscience of the nations was mobilised against them."

It was touches such as these that made one realise his depth of feeling for his own country and for ours. At other times he would turn to a searching analysis of France's defects; he would describe the bitterness of partisan conflict, the sordid scramble for power, and above all, the throttling of the country's life by the vice of alcoholism. Till one heard the story from his own lips one hardly realised how deep a grip this evil had obtained; but it was good news to hear that already before the war a stern fight against it had been begun, especially by the teachers and in the schools, and that one of the aspects of the moral transformation which the war has affected has been the determination to cope vigorously with this national curse. Some of us discussed the question with him more fully at luncheon on the following day and learnt from him how important he felt it to be that strict legislative measures should be adopted. One of the most effective courses would be, he thought, to pass a law that no one connected with the liquor trade might be elected to parliament or to a municipal council. We were told that such a measure had already been put into operation in Canada. May we not, if so, call in the example of the New World to redress the moral balance of the Old?

M. Sabatier's final lecture was devoted to Alsace. Though not an Alsatian by birth, he lived among them so long that he came to know them well and to love them, and as he told us how through the long years of German domination they had kept their soul unsubdued and their loyalty to its old ideals untarnished, one felt how impossible any other solution would be than the restoration of Alsace to France. We heard how, each Christmas night, when the family gathers round the festal tree, a little tricolour is brought out and placed upon the boughs; we heard how every year on a night in June the students gather round the statue of the patriot Kléber, and as the hour of midnight strikes on the cathedral tower, form in a silent procession in honour of his memory; we heard how, when the German bishop takes the service in the Cathedral, he is powerless to move his audience, but as soon as the French priest is among them the walls ring with the chants of the people's voices. "Alsace," he said, "is the heart and the conscience of France." Through persecution and oppression she has sustained the fight for liberty for forty years. The day is not now far distant when she will come back to join her sister pioneers, and will take the lead in the spiritual uplifting of the motherland. Then will the New France, side by side with a new England, prepare the way for a New Europe.

BERNARD M. ALLEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING IN SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Paton's address at the British Association, which was published in The Inquirer on Sept. 25, followed one which was delivered by the Rev. A. A. David, D.D., Head Master of Rugby, in support of military training in schools. Instead of this training for boys Mr. Paton puts his faith in football and other games. It is said that Wellington claimed that Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton, and to-day we have to thank the playing fields of our schools for the valour of our forces on sea and on land. Where duty calls the man to action in defence of his country he will respond without having been a soldier as a boy. This was exemplified in a remarkable manner on the day Mr. Paton's address was delivered, in the announcement that Captain Wm. Thos. Forshaw had been awarded the Victoria Cross "For most conspicuous bravery and determination in the Gallipoli Peninsula from the 7th to the 9th August, 1915, when holding the north-west corner of the vineyard he was attacked and heavily bombed by Turks. It was due to his personal example, magnificent courage and endurance that this very important corner was held." Captain Forshaw was a master at the North Manchester School (preparatory to the Manchester Grammar School of which Mr. Paton was the High Master). He was educated at the Barrow Secondary School and the Westminster Training College. He is about twenty-seven years of age, was a prominent Rugby football player, and keen at tennis. In May, 1914, he obtained a commission in the 9th Manchesters (Territorial Force). He did not take up soldiering prior to three months before he went out, and thus the spirit he showed was acquired in the playing field, and not on the military drill ground.

Military training for a man and for a boy are absolutely different things. If you train a boy of 15 or 16 to arms, in the great majority of cases no power on earth can prevent him from idealising the whole business. At twenty-four the mind will have been formed and men at that age can take it as they take a surgical operation—a grim business, but one with which they must go through. The introduction of compulsory military training in schools could not possibly affect the present war, for the greatest pessimist cannot imagine that Germany can hold on till our boys become men. Then, what of the future? Surely it is not conceivable that when this world war is over the civilised nations will fail to inaugurate an International Law which shall be a completion of the Hague Conventions and make the Signatory States responsible for maintaining and enforcing the Conventions. Had this been done in 1907 Germany would never have been allowed to violate the neutrality of Belgium and Luxemburg. War, as Wellington knew it, was child's play compared with the horrors of the present war, and yet of war as he knew it Wellington said, "Nothing except a battle lost can be half so melancholy as a battle won."

In accepting the challenge of the Head Master of Rugby to discuss military training in schools, the High Master of Manchester pointed out that the present time was most inopportune for such a discussion. He might have said as inopportune as a fire in a high wind, when only great courage and the best appliances could possibly overcome it. With great courage and true principle Mr. Paton was so successful in the discussion that I venture to believe the idea of compulsory military training in schools gained no convert. One of the most important points raised by Mr. Paton was the failure of our histories to give due prominence to methods, other than those of war, for settling international differences. How little is known of the Alabama Arbitration. Of any great battle you can obtain prose and verse on all sides, but in all London to-day you cannot buy a volume telling the story of the settlement of the Alabama Claims, which was perhaps the most important international event of the Nineteenth Century. We all know that peace hath her victories no less than war, but we also know that the victories of peace are less renowned than those of war. This should not be so, and a debt to the Nineteenth Century will remain undischarged so long as we are without a noble monument to the Statesmen who won the victory of the Alabama Arbitration, a victory without a tragedy, and a conflict in which those who lost share the glory with those who won. It will enable us to form some conception of the importance of the Alabama Arbitration if we try to realise what the difference would have been if the United States and the United Kingdom had resorted to war for a settlement of the Alabama Claim. We desire no monument the less to the noble dead who have given their lives in defence of civilisation, but we do desire to bear in equal remembrance those noble souls who made that civilisation worthy the great sacrifice, and who strive to so complete it that the time may come when the sacrifice will no longer be required.—Yours, &c.,

MARK H. JUDGE.

7, Pall Mall, S.W., October 5, 1915.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to say that it will materially assist our preparations for the forthcoming Triennial Meetings (26th to 28th inst.) to have a complete list of all "members of the Conference" (i.e. Ministers, duly appointed delegates, and members of the Committee) who expect to attend. In addition to those who have asked for hospitality, there are probably many others who live in London, or will make their own arrangements, who intend to be present. I shall be glad to have their names as soon as possible, in order that the papers, &c., may be sent to them. I need hardly add that while the right of voting is limited to "members of the Conference," all members and friends of our Churches are cordially invited to attend the meetings. The full programme will appear in your advertising columns next week.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES HARWOOD,

Secretary.

60, Howitt Road, N.W., Oct. 6, 1915.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. R. J. ORR.

WE regret to announce the death of the Rev. R. J. Orr, M.A., which took place at Airmount, Clonmel, on Sunday, September 26. He was the third and last surviving son of the late Rev. James Orr, of Clonmel. He was educated at Queen's College, Cork, and subsequently (1862-65) at Manchester New College, London. After brief ministries at Bridgewater, the North End Mission, Liverpool, and Preston, he returned to Ireland in 1874. For sixteen years he was minister of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church, York Street, Belfast, and after his retirement in 1890 continued to act for many years as clerk to the Presbytery of Antrim. For the last few years of his life he lived with his sisters at the old home, beloved by his neighbours and honoured for his unselfish goodness. Mr. Orr was never married, and his own simple needs enabled him to indulge his passion for doing good by stealth. He was an indefatigable writer of verse, odd, humorous, with a personal flavour which was sometimes of excellent quality. The initials R. J. O. were long familiar to the readers of the Northern Whig. To all who knew him he has left many gracious memories of friendship and kindness.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital is one of M. Vander-velde's Union of Committees in London, and works in close co-operation with the Belgian Army Medical Authorities. Its object is to provide the Belgian Military Hospitals in France with sufficient surgical instruments, medical and nursing requisites, bed-linen, and clothes for the patients. It also aids the Convalescent Depots for Belgian soldiers, and maintains a Hospice for civilian refugees in Calais.

38TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Owing to an error in copying the total last week should have been £7,246 3s. 5d. instead of £7,237 12s. 5d.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	7246	3	5
Miss Hunter, Miss Perrie, and a "Widow's Mite"	0	6	0

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. Raymond Allen	0	4	0
Miss Leigh Smith (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winsor (ninth monthly donation)	1	0	0
Mr. W. H. Hall, (second donation)	5	0	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering (fifth collection)	1	11	0
Mrs. Bartram	1	0	0
Prof. and Mrs. Herford	2	0	0
Proceeds of Entertainment given at Hampstead by M. and Madame Defauw	6	2	3
Collection at Harvest Festival and Sale of Fruit at Westgate Chapel, Wakefield, per Mr. C. Quarmby	6	13	6
72, Compayne Gardens, Belgian Hostel Fund, per Mrs. Jolowicz (four weeks' donation)	7	0	0
Miss Anne Garrett (third donation)	5	5	0
Anonymous (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. M. Davies	0	10	0
Mr. Rayner Storr	5	5	0
Mrs. Nicholls	2	2	0
Mr. Wm. Harris	1	1	0
Miss Hutton (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Edwardes (second donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. H. Lang-Jones (second donation)	1	1	0
Mrs. Mayer	1	0	0
Mr. Geo. Banks (ninth donation)	1	0	0
Miss D. G. Langelaan (second donation)	0	10	0
M. L. H. (fourth donation)	0	6	0
Miss Dangerfield (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. J. E. Hilditch (third donation)	0	5	0
Miss R. A. Reid (second donation)	1	0	0
J. G.	0	10	0
Mr. Jas. Brent Price (second donation)	0	5	0
Miss Mary Fretwell (third donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly donation)	1	0	0
Miss Annie E. Lloyd	0	5	0
Mrs. Williams	2	2	0
Mrs. Robinson (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. Jas. Samuelson	1	1	0
Mrs. Jas. Samuelson	1	1	0
Mrs. Barnes and family (second donation)	1	0	0
Mr. Chas. Wicksteed (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. John Sale (third donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Rigby	1	0	0
Westgate Chapel, Lewes, per the Rev. J. M. Connell	3	16	0
Mrs. Calkin Lewis (second donation)	1	1	0
The Rev. Cyril A. Greaves, D.C.L.	1	0	0
Mrs. Talbot (second donation)	1	1	0
Mrs. Alexander Scott	5	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Rymer (second donation)	5	0	0

	£	s.	d.
To the memory of the late Capt. A. G. Rollaston (Dudley), from his parents and sisters	5	0	0
A Friend, Ilford	5	0	0
Miss Emma Fryer (second donation)	5	0	0
Mr. H. J. Emerton	5	0	0
Miss Gertrude Jolly (third donation)	5	0	0
Miss de Zouche	10	0	0
Col. Curtis	1	1	0
Organisers, Children's Care Committee, L.C.C., per Mrs. H. G. Nussey (monthly donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Thorburn (second donation)	3	3	0
Dr. Blurton	1	0	0
Mr. J. M. Kelley (third donation)	1	0	0
Miss Norton (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss Drewry	5	0	0
	£7,400	11	2

Parcels have been received from:—
 Members of the Women's Liberal Association at Cirencester (per Mrs. C. Trotman), 218 children's garments; Mrs. H. Enfield Dowson; Miss Dora Roscoe; Lady Mayoress of Leeds' Committee (per Mrs. Williams), 650 articles; Miss Margaret Ashton; Miss Arthur; Miss Preston; Miss A. Langley; Miss Almgill; Mrs. Stephen; Mrs. S. Martineau; Mrs. F. E. Baines; "A Friend" (per Mrs. Wallis); Miss E. A. Eveleigh; Mrs. Blomfield Jackson; Mrs. Williamson; Mrs. Gilbert; Miss Freda Speller; Hornsey Secondary School (per Mrs. Piggott); Mrs. Capper; Mrs. Dickson; N. and W. Finchley Branch of the Hornsey Women's Liberal Association (per Mrs. Wilmshurst Davis); All Souls' Working Party (per Mrs. Pickering); Mrs. Freeston; Mrs. and Miss Dixon; Mrs. Sheppard; Mrs. H. Woodall; the Pupils of the Park School, Preston, 5 parcels; Mrs. F. Skelton; Mrs. Kenrick Champion; Wimbledon War Workers' Depot (per Mrs. Vincent Green); Miss Short; Miss H. L. Crosskey; J. G.; Miss Morley; Miss Minnett; Miss C. Fosdick (per Mrs. Ellingham); Mrs. Worthington; Miss Long; Miss Winkworth; Mrs. Williams and household and friends; Ladies of the Gloucester Unitarian Church Sewing Society (per Miss Gresswell); Clarence Road Church, Kentish Town (per Miss Cooper); Mrs. Webb; Miss Herford; Mrs. Barnes; Miss Mary Dendy; Miss Sally Bellhouse; Miss Bruce; Miss Swaine; Miss Solly; Mrs. H. H. Edwards; Mrs. C—B—Cave; Mrs. Titterton; Mr. J. G. Jackson; Mlle. Tholien; Mrs. Hood; Mrs. Bartram.

It will be a great convenience if all senders of parcels will enclose their names and addresses and a list of contents in each parcel.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

Shirts.
 Socks.
 Vests } woven or of a natural coloured
 Pants } flannel. Patterns can be supplied.

Cardigans.
 Slippers for ward and garden wear.
 Towels.
 Sheets and pillowslips
 Handkerchiefs.
 Bag mittens.
 Mufflers.
 Playing cards, draughts, chess, dominoes.
 Writing materials.

Further contributions of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LONDON AND THE SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

ANNUAL MEETING AT ILFORD.

THE twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Provincial Assembly of Non-Subscribing Ministers and Congregations of London and the South-Eastern Counties was held on Tuesday, October 5, at the Unitarian Christian Church, Ilford. The Business Meeting was at 3.30, the President, the Rev. J. Wood, in the chair. The Hon. Secretary, the Rev. Gordon Cooper, presented the Annual Report, which briefly records the results of patient and steady work continued throughout the year in circumstances which have been rendered more difficult by the war. It is obvious, as the report points out, that all enterprises of a missionary character must temporarily be postponed, and the erection of a church at Southend, on a site generously given by Mr. Sloman, cannot be proceeded with at present. The proposal to hold some week-night services at some of the larger towns in the Province for which valuable help was promised by Dr. Hunter and other well-known preachers, and the arrangements to give lectures at other places, have also had to be abandoned, but it is hoped that these schemes will be carried out when the war is over.

The treasurer's statement was submitted by Mr. Edgar Worthington, who appealed for an increase of funds. The Rev. W. H. Drummond followed with a short report of the work carried on by him as minister of the Assembly, in the course of which he paid a cordial tribute to the value of the work of the lay preachers in several of the country churches.

The President, in moving the adoption of the report, said:—"We meet to-day under the shadow of a great calamity—a calamity which affects the whole civilised world, and penetrates to every corner of human life. Nothing escapes its baleful influence; a thousand good causes and enterprises of pith and moment are checked and held up, and compelled to mark time, and our own little society suffers in like manner. We have not done what we would; it has not been found possible to undertake any new missionary work; the war has absorbed our time, our energy, and our service. Many of our churches have found it hard to hold their own, and, worst of all, they have been robbed of much of their young life—of bright promising youths, now lying in far-off graves in foreign lands, to whom we looked to take their father's place. All honour and eternal glory to them, for they made the supreme sacrifice, counting not their lives dear unto them in the day of their country's need. They died that the soul of England might remain a treasure unimpaired. We mourn their loss, yet their great sacrifice gives a new value to the churches in which they were reared, and where they knelt in prayer. Thank God, though the churches may have largely failed to impress on the world the message and the spirit of faith they profess, they have not failed in giving their best and dearest to rescue the world from cruelty and wrong that the permanent elements of human welfare may be maintained." After a brief reference to one or two passages in the report, the President dealt at some length with the problem raised by the condition of the small churches, which in the south is especially acute, for it is not with them, as a rule, as with the smaller churches in the north, that they are in the first stages of their growth, but rather that they have, in many cases, left their period of vigorous life behind, and are already marked with decay. Such churches are not, of course, all alike, and the reasons for their decline vary a good deal. Sometimes it may be attributed to the depopulation of the country districts and smaller towns owing to changing social and economic conditions, and sometimes to the dying off of old substantial families. The growing indifference to public worship everywhere, and the example which is set by those who spend their week-ends in motoring or golf, must also be taken into consideration. When it is asked, how are these churches to be treated? the answer given by some is that it is better not to prolong their struggles, but to close them altogether, while others oppose this, and would not under any circumstances close the door of a chapel consecrated by tradition and the worship of a living congregation. There is a good deal of sentimental attractiveness about the small church, and it is true that it contributes something to the cause of liberal religion, as the small stream contributes to the volume of the river flowing to the sea. Now and again, also, the larger churches get the benefit of the work which the smaller churches have done. But suppose the life of the small church has really dried up, that the torch gives more smoke than flame? Suppose the tradition and the sentiment clinging to it inspire no effort, and no living soul is moved by them to sacrifice and service? Ought we to be asked to keep them alive by doles and grants, employing money for the purpose which might be spent perhaps in missionary work in other places?

There was, Mr. Wood continued, only one chance for the small churches, though it was difficult to persuade them of this; they must give up their cherished independence, and learn the lesson of co-operation and federation. He was not girding at the small communities. On the contrary, he thought it a beautiful idea when a few earnest, sincere souls, attracted to the great realities of truth and liberty, and feeling the claims of intellectual veracity in the irreligious life, gathered together Sunday after Sunday to receive the blessing promised to two or three who meet in Christ's name. He was at such a gathering only a few Sundays ago. There were only eighteen present, but there was a depth of devotion, a sense of reverence, and a simplicity of utterance which made the day memorable. Such a service ought to be quite possible in other places. There was a wealth of literature available, and it was a mistake to suppose that you could not have a living church, a church of the spirit, without a professional minister. There might be a church full of life and vigour without a pulpit at all. But the little church has its dangers. Differences of opinion count for more than they do in a large church, where the angles are worn down by attrition. The masterful man is a greater danger in a congregation of 20 than in a congregation of 200, and the petty quarrels of a small community might be a scandal to a denomination. The small church also suffers greatly from a sense of isolation, for churches need each other just as much as stalks of wheat need each other in the field if they are all to stand against the winds and storms. Therefore the remedy is obvious—join hands with others, renounce the bug-bear of independence, and learn the much greater virtue of co-operation. Several small churches agreeing together could share the services of a good Minister between them, or a small solitary church in the neighbourhood of a large church might come under the latter's wing, and receive its sympathetic support and the occasional services of its Minister. The necessity for this he had preached before, but usually to deaf ears, and curiously enough the small churches were found less willing to enter into such co-operation than the large. But his experience both as President of the Assembly and of the National Conference in visiting the churches up and down the country had left him more firmly convinced than ever that one of their greatest needs was a wise federation.

In conclusion, Mr. Wood uttered a word of warning about the tendency in many directions to ignore the true function of the church by multiplying the number of institutions and societies connected with it. The latter were all good in their way, but not one of them belonged to the essence of the idea of the church. They could—and often were—carried on quite as well by people outside, and they ought not to involve the neglect of the true verities—God and the soul, peace and good will, the ideal things of which we dream, the beautiful realities of the spirit. The most practical thing in human life is the vision, and the greatest thing on earth is the dream, and it is by the vision and the dream that the Kingdom of God will come.

The Rev. F. K. Freeston, in seconding, expressed the pleasure which it gave the Assembly to see Mr. Wood in the chair, and their gratitude for the help which he had given them during the past twelve months. It was a special delight to them all to meet in the little church at Ilford, for they had taken a great pride in the hard work and high ideals of their friends in that congregation. Referring to the President's address, he said that what Mr. Wood had urged about the federation of the churches was a repetition of what Dr. Martineau himself had said when the Assembly was started. He had pleaded that the big congregations should draw nearer to the small ones, and the people in London to those in the country districts. The appeal had never had a better backing than at the present time. Just now they were all feeling that it was not their theology that mattered. It never counted for less; but, on the other hand, their churches and chapels never counted for more. They had discovered that they lived for each other and were nothing without each other. Just as we have realised the solidarity of society, so they were realising in their religion that the private beliefs of the man who stays at home are not enough. It was the Church idea that they wanted, the binding of themselves together, and that was why the emphasis was being laid upon church worship, and church fellowship, as it had never been before.

The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, referring to the report of the Auxiliary Fund (Ministers' Pension Fund) urged upon the ministers the special necessity at the present time of insuring if they had not already done so.

Mr. Fyson proposed that the thanks of the Assembly be given to the officers who had served during the past year, and that Mr. Wood be elected as President for another year, Mr. Edgar Worthington, Treasurer, Mr. Gimson, Auditor, and the Rev. Gordon Cooper, Hon. Secretary. The Rev. J. A. Pearson seconded, and the motion was carried. It was announced that the Rev. J. Wood had been elected to the Board of Managers of the Auxiliary Fund, in place of the late Mr. G. W. Chitty. The Rev. A. H. Biggs was appointed preacher for 1916, the Rev. J. H. Weatherall being elected supporter.

The Rev. J. H. Weatherall, in proposing that the Revs. J. Wood, R. K. Freeston, J. Harwood, Dr. Blake Odgers and Mr. Edgar Worthington be re-elected as representatives on the Southern Advisory Committee, made the rather sweeping statement that there were no strong churches known to him on the Essex Hall Roll. The London churches seemed to be full of fatalists who have no conviction that the church should be a leader of life. The church has apparently to follow the social habits of the people, as if London people were made of specially sanctified clay, and under no circumstances could you interfere with their way of life. It was the lack of faith which was being punished in the condition of the churches. If a church is anything it is a leader of life. They wanted a new standard of what church efficiency meant. They had to be filled with faith, and to feel that they had something to give to the world without which it would starve. It was not enough, he urged, to talk week after week to a few convinced hereditary supporters of their own type of religious thought. The Rev. F. H. Jones seconded the resolution, expressing at the same time his dissent from Mr. Weatherall's criticism, which hardly did justice to such a church as the young and vigorous one in which they were holding their meeting.

The names of Dr. Hargrove, the Rev. J. Burton, and the Rev. S. Burrows was added to the list of members as ministers resident in the Province. Mr. Cooper announced that a warm invitation had come from the congregation at Hackney to hold their next annual meeting there in 1916.

A cordial welcome was given by the President to the representatives of Kindred Societies, to which Miss Alleyne, of the Liberal Christian League, and Dr. Herbert Smith responded.

Tea was served in the school-room at the close of the Business Meeting. The Rev. J. Wood expressed the thanks of the visitors to their hospitable Ilford friends, to which the Rev. A. H. Biggs, the Minister, replied in cordial terms.

The evening service, at 7.30, which was preceded by an organ recital, was conducted by the Rev. A. H. Biggs, the preacher being the Rev. A. Farquharson. Taking for his text the words, "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice" (Philippians iv. 4), he dwelt on the necessity for cultivating the spirit of courage and good cheer at all times, even when the whole world is full of strife and turmoil.

THE YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meetings of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, in connection with which the bicentenary of the Greengates Chapel, Malton, was celebrated, were held at Malton on Sept. 30th. The proceedings began with a service in the chapel in the afternoon, when the preacher was the Rev. R. Nicol Cross (Leeds). The annual meeting followed, and after tea in the adult school a public meeting was held in the chapel in the evening.

Dr. Charles Hargrove (London) presided at the business meeting. The annual report was presented by the secretary, the Rev. W. R. Shanks, who, in the absence of the treasurer (Mr. J. Hess), also submitted the financial statement, which showed a deficit on the year's working of £181. Against this, it was reported, there was a sum of about £235, the proceeds of a bazaar, to draw upon. Officers were elected as follows: President, Mr. Grosvenor Talbot; vice-presidents, Dr. Hargrove, Mr. G. E. Verity, Mr. F. J. Kitson, Mr. J. T. Kitching, Mr. C. H. Boyle, Mr. A. Whitworth, Dr. S. Moor, and Mr. J. Nicholson; treasurer, Mr. J. Hess; secretary, the Rev. W. R. Shanks; plan secretary, Mr. F. Coleman.

Dr. Hargrove again presided at the evening meeting. A former pastor of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, the Chairman referred to his recent departure to London, saying that although he had left Yorkshire in body, his heart was in the county, where he knew he had preached in every chapel in the union. He proceeded to say that Unitarians were sometimes faced with the question as to whether it was worth while continuing the work. But far better little light than none. Could they say the congregations were satisfactory? They were not what the ministers or the seatholders wanted. They wanted to see the seats full, but they could not get that. It might be that the end of the war would give a great awakening to the souls of men, and that they would want a religion that commended itself to them as a truly human faith. That was the faith Unitarians were at least keeping alive and preaching to whosoever would hear.

Mr. Grosvenor Talbot was hardly inclined to agree with the chairman, and said he believed that Unitarianism not only had done and was doing a great deal, but would do far more than it had done before. Many years ago in their history the society was called "The Tract Society." They were issuing tracts to tell the people what Unitarianism was, and they had controversial lectures, and had to struggle against repugnant Calvinistic doctrines. He thought to-day all those doctrines had departed, and now they had to fight to show the world that the truth in religion was a thing that could be found out and discovered more and more. Unitarianism had not to fight against anything to-day, but had to fight for something. To-day they had to thank Christianity, and more particularly the liberal part of Christianity, for what, he thought, was a great demonstration of what Christianity had done in this country. They had men of all classes who had hurried to take up arms, who had not gone forth to fight for ambition or gold, but had gone forth because they felt and knew they were fighting for liberty, truth, and all those things that made for godliness. That power, he believed, had come to their use from the teaching of the ministry and the chapels. The great war had demonstrated largely that we were a Christian nation, and willing to fight for Christianity and those great principles Christ came into the world to teach.

The Rev. C. J. Street (Sheffield District Association) gave an encouraging account of the work of this association, which he said had opened four new churches during the past year. In three of the towns, Bolton-on-Deane, Doncaster, and Mexborough, the Unitarians had the largest congregations in those places on Sundays. He was not troubled, added Mr. Street, about the day of small things. That was not his affair. If they did not get support they could not help it. They must go on and do their duty. Small congregations sometimes had a larger influence than big ones. Their Puritan forefathers did not anticipate Unitarianism, and they would be very much astonished if they knew what kind of gospel was preached in that church now compared with what was preached in their own times. But though they did not advocate Unitarianism, the Puritans showed they valued freedom and sincerity.

The Rev. R. A. Dickson, who recently seceded from the Congregational Church, and has taken up the pastorate of the Unitarian Chapel at Huddersfield, remarked that the great work they had to do as religious teachers to-day was to bring their practice up to the standard of their present knowledge. Their practice lagged lingeringly behind; conscience was still ahead of conduct. It was not that they needed to know more, but it was that they needed to live up to what they knew.

On the motion of Mr. F. Coleman, seconded by the Rev. J. Wain, the Malton friends were thanked for their hospitality, and a vote of thanks to the speakers was accorded on the motion of Mr. J. Manning, the lay preacher, who recalled how eleven years ago when he went to Malton the congregation numbered six or seven. The Sunday school now had 40 children in attendance.

The Rev. C. W. Wendte writes to us from Boston, U.S.A.:—"As I have withdrawn my official connection with the American Unitarian Association, I would request my correspondents and friends to send any letters of a personal character, or which relate to the International Congress of Free Christians and other Religious Liberals and the National Federation of Religious Liberals, the secretaryships and general care of which I shall retain, to me at my residence, No. 165, Hunnewell Avenue, Newton, Mass., U.S.A. Mail matter sent to 25, Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., U.S.A., will reach me, but may involve some delay."

A Lecture on "War and Peace: Their Meaning in Human Evolution," will be given by Mr. Edward Carpenter at a meeting of the Humanitarian League at the Caxton Hall, Westminster, October 15, at 8 p.m. The Lecture has been arranged by the Humanitarian League. Admission is free.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Cambridge.—The services of the Cambridge Unitarian Free Church will be resumed on Sunday, October 17, when the Rev. Bertram Lister will preach. The Secretary, Mr. H. Sandon, of Queen's College, will be glad to hear from any one coming up to Cambridge this term who is interested.

London, Blackfriars.—The usual Harvest Thanksgiving Services at Stamford Street Chapel were held last Sunday. The minister reports a steady rise in the attendance at the Afternoon Class, in whose syllabus of visiting speakers we note with interest the names of the Rev. Gilbert Sadler and Dr. Evans Darby. The Open Air Mission closed last Tuesday evening a series of very successful meetings held throughout the summer near Waterloo Station.

Melbourne.—The Melbourne Argus announces the death of Mrs. Webster, which occurred on August 11 at the residence of her brother, Mr. Henry Gyles Turner, "Bundalohu," Tennyson Street, St. Kilda, and adds this personal reference: "Mrs. Webster, then Miss Martha Turner, arrived in Melbourne in 1870 on a visit to her brother. Born in London in 1839 she was educated at a High School in Dijon, Normandy, and early developed high intellectual qualities. Her first visit to Melbourne was turned into a permanent residence by the unanimous desire of the Melbourne Unitarian Church that she should accept the office of pastor. She filled that pulpit acceptably for twelve years, 1871-83, during which time several of her discourses were published. Her exceptionally clear enunciation, her sympathetic voice, her unaffected delivery, and the lucidity with which she treated subjects of great moment, won her much commendation both from the public and the press. She married Mr. John Webster in 1879, and in 1883 resigned her pastorate to pay a visit to England. Since her return she resided in the interior of Gippsland until October a year ago, when she came to St. Kilda for medical advice and treatment," unhappily without avail.

Oldham.—A special meeting of the congregation was held at the Unitarian Chapel on Sunday evening, October 3, to receive the resignation of the Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A., who has accepted an invitation from Sale. The resignation was accepted with much regret, and an expression of high appreciation of his work during the six years of his ministry at Oldham. At the morning service sympathetic reference was made by Mr. McLauchlan to the death of Lance-Corporal Ammon W. Whitehead, who was formerly Secretary of the Chapel. At the conclusion of the service the organist played the 'Dead March' and the congregation stood in token of sympathy.

Southampton.—The Quarterly Committee Meeting of the Southern Unitarian Association was held on Friday, September 24, and the congregation of the Church of the Saviour took advantage of this favourable opportunity to welcome the Rev. and Mrs. Victor Moody to Southampton at an "At Home" in the evening. Mrs. Cogan Conway presided, and short speeches were given by the Rev. V. D. Davis (on behalf of the Southern Unitarian Association), Miss E. J. Spencer (as Secretary of the church), the Rev. Reginald Hewitson, B.D., an old college friend of Mr. Moody, and newly appointed Wesleyan minister in the town, Councillor Perryman, and Dr. E. H. Stancomb. Mr. Moody, in replying, urged the necessity of maintaining in the churches the enthusiasm, world-outlook, and sense of conviction which characterised the early Methodist movement, and said that he felt his motto would always be John Wesley's famous saying, "The world is my parish." He was confident that the religious movement they represented might play an important part in the vast reconstruction, social and religious, which must follow the war.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

FOOD IN WAR TIME.

Among the public lectures in connection with the Chadwick Trust arranged for the autumn and winter session, the three on "Food in War Time," by Professor D. Noel Paton, M.D., B.Sc., of Glasgow University, in Hampstead, should be very popular. The problem of food in war time is not different from the problem with which we are faced always—how to get the best value in diet for the energy or money expended. But it is being brought home to us much more forcibly just now owing to the necessity of maintaining our efficiency unimpaired, and reducing our expenditure at the same time. The first lecture, on "Food and Work," has already been given; the second, on "Good Food and Bad Food," will be delivered on Monday, Oct. 11, and the third, on "Food and Drink," on Monday, Oct. 18, at Hampstead Central Library, Finchley Road, at 8.15 p.m.

EXPERIMENTS IN HERB-GARDENING.

Herb-growing bids fair to become a profitable industry owing to the scarcity of the medicinal plants which can no longer be imported from Central Europe. As the result of a leaflet issued last winter by the Board of Agriculture, some members of the Women's Farm and Garden Union determined to turn their attention to herb-growing, and their experiments have persuaded them that considerable profit might be made if a sufficient number of people would take it up. One of the herb-growers, having communicated with a firm of wholesale druggists as soon as she had a few hundred-weights to sell, received an order for several tons. She calculated that it would take her two years to raise a crop saleable in such quantities. The herbs required include henbane (dried and fresh leaves), belladonna leaves (dried), broom tips (dried), dandelion root (fresh), horehound plant (dried), and colt's-foot (dried).

THE ORIGINALS OF SQUEERS AND SMIKE.

A letter written by Charles Dickens to Mrs. S. C. Hall, the writer on "Irish Life," which has recently come into the possession of a well-known firm of antiquarian booksellers, clearly proves that in writing 'Nicholas Nickleby' he was not drawing on his imagination for the episodes relating to Dotheboys Hall. The letter, which is written from Doughty Street, and dated December 29, 1838, runs as follows:—"I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note, and the interesting anecdote which you tell so well. I have laid it by in the MS. of the first number of Nickleby, and shall keep it there in confirmation of the truth of my little picture. Depend upon it that the rascalities of those Yorkshire schoolmasters cannot easily be exaggerated, and that I have kept down the strong truth and thrown as much comicality over it as I could, rather than disgust and weary the reader with its fouler aspects. The identical scoundrel you speak of, I saw—curiously enough. His name is Shaw; the action was tried (I believe) eight or ten years since, and if I am not much mistaken another action was brought against him by the parents of a miserable child, a cancer in whose head he opened with an inky penknife, and so caused his death. The country for miles around was covered, when I was there, with deep snow. There is an old church near the school, and the first gravestone I stumbled on that dreary winter afternoon was placed above the grave of a boy, eighteen long years old, who had died—suddenly the inscription said; I suppose his heart broke—the camel falls down 'suddenly' when they heap the last load upon his back—died at that wretched place. I think his ghost put Smike into my head, upon the spot.

* * * * *

"I went down in an assumed name, taking a plausible letter to an old Yorkshire attorney from another attorney in town, telling him how a friend had been left a widow and wanted to place her boys at a Yorkshire school, in hopes of thawing the frozen compassion of her relations. The man of business gave me an introduction to one or two schools, but at night he came down to the Inn where I was stopping, and after much hesitation and confusion—he was a large-headed, flat-nosed, red-faced old fellow—said with a degree of feeling one would not have given him credit for, that the matter had been upon his mind all day—that they were sad places for mothers to send their orphan boys to—that he hoped I would not give up him as my adviser—but that she had better do anything with them—let them hold horses, run errands—fling them in any way upon the mercy of the World—rather than trust them there. This was an attorney, a well-fed man of business, and a rough Yorkshireman.... I throw myself single-handed upon your good nature, and beseech you to forgive me this long story—which you ought to do as you have been the means of drawing it from me."

A HUMANITARIAN BOOK SERIES.

Although it appeared at a very unfavourable time, 'Killing for Sport,' a collection of instructive essays by well-known humanitarians like Mr. George Greenwood, M.P., Edward Carpenter, Henry S. Salt, and H. B. Marriott Watson, attracted a considerable amount of attention in the press, and the Humanitarian League has done the public a service in publishing such a volume. The Committee have been giving much time and thought to the preparation of a series of similar books which shall set forth their principles as fully as possible, and we understand that these will be published as opportunity occurs. The first will be a new and revised edition of 'Animals' Rights Considered in Relation to Social Progress,' promised this autumn, and it is hoped that sufficient financial help may be forthcoming to enable copies to be sent to a number of libraries, schools, clubs, and other institutions, as has been done in the case of 'Killing for Sport.'

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.

HISTORY OF THE RENAISSANCE: The Protestant Revolution, and the Catholic Reformation in Continental Europe. By EDWARD M. HULME. Eight Maps. Demy 8vo. 10s. net.

The scope of this able and erudite history book is sufficiently indicated by its title. [Just out.]

JOHN HUSS: His Life, Teachings, and Death, after Five Hundred Years. By DAVID S. SCHAFF, D.D. Demy 8vo. 10s. net.

The five-hundredth anniversary of the death of John Huss is a propitious time for the publication of so comprehensive a study of his life and influence as this book. [Just out.]

THE CHURCH: A Treatise by John Huss. Translated with Introduction and Notes by David S. SCHAFF, D.D. Demy 8vo. 10s. net.

Dr. Schaff's translation gives the author's best-known book to the English-reading public for the first time. [Just out.]

THE ELEMENTARY FORMS OF THE RELIGIOUS LIFE. By Prof. EMILE DURKHEIM. Translated by J. W. SWAIN. Medium 8vo. 15s. net.

"An exhaustive investigation of primitive religion by the distinguished Paris professor."—Times.

BASIS OF MORALITY. By A. SCHOPENHAUER. Translated by A. BRODRICK-BULLOCK. Crown 8vo. New and Revised Edition. 4s. 6d. net.

TOWARDS INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENT. By JOHN A. HOBSON. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

"Cool, dispassionate and temperate in its analysis, careful and thorough... its most striking quality is its optimism."—Daily News.

ENGLAND'S GUARANTEE TO BELGIUM AND LUXEMBOURG. By C. P. SANGER and H. T. J. NORTON. Demy 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.

A full discussion of the legal aspect of the treaties by which the neutrality of Belgium and Luxembourg were guaranteed. [Just out.]

TOWARDS A LASTING SETTLEMENT. By G. LOWES DICKINSON, H. N. BRAILSFORD, J. A. HOBSON, VERNON LEE, PHILIP SNOWDEN, M.P., A. MAUDE ROYDEN, H. SIDEBOTHAM, &c. Edited by CHARLES RODEN BUXTON. Crown 8vo. Cloth. 2s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

MYSTERIES OF LIFE. By STANLEY DE BRATH, M.Inst.C.E. Large crown 8vo. 4s. 6d. net. This book is an illustration and practical application of the fact that the greatest truths are simple. [In the Press.]

RUSKIN HOUSE, 40, MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

IRISH PILLOW LINEN in bundles of Remnants, sufficient to make six full-size Pillow Cases, only 7s. 6d. Postage 6d. Genuine offer. Catalogue free. Send a postcard to-day. HUTTON'S, 5, Larnie, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought.—Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 9, 1915.

* * * * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3824.
NEW SERIES, No. 927.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE of Unitarian, Liberal Christian,
Free Christian, Presbyterian and other Non-Subscribing or Kindred Congregations.

PROGRAMME

OF THE

Twelfth Triennial Meetings,

WHICH WILL BE HELD IN

LONDON,

ON

OCTOBER 26th, 27th, and 28th.

TUESDAY, October 26th.

4.30—6.30. Tea and Reception by the President and Mrs. Rathbone.

7.30. Religious Service at Essex Church, conducted by Rev. C. Craddock. Preacher, Dr. L. P. Jacks.

A Collection will be made on behalf of the National Conference.

WEDNESDAY, October 27th.

9.30. Communion Service at Stamford Street Chapel, Blackfriars, conducted by Revs. Dr. Hargrove and F. K. Freeston.

10.45. Address by the President of the Conference.

11.15. Discussion of Report on Public Worship, opened by Rev. Joseph Wood and Dr. Mellone.

3.0. Triennial Business Meeting.

5.0.—6.30. Tea.

8.0. Address by Prof. Gilbert Murray on "Ethical Problems of the War."

Others than Ministers and Delegates (whose names have already been sent), should apply for Tickets for this Address (enclosing stamped and directed envelope), to Rev. James Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

THURSDAY, October 28th.

10.0. Religious Service, conducted by Rev. J. C. Ballantyne.

10.30. Discussion of Report on Public Worship resumed by Mr. W. Byng Kenrick and Rev. F. H. Vaughan. The General Discussion will close at 11.45, when Miss Clephan (President of the Sunday School Association), Rev. J. Morley Mills (President of the Manchester District Sunday School Association), and Rev. J. Arthur Pearson (Editor of the Sunday School Monthly), will speak on Sunday School Work and the Religious Education of Children and Young People.

N.B.—All the Meetings, when not otherwise stated, will be held at Essex Hall.

JAMES HARWOOD, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

October

17. Rev. FRANK KERRY FREESTON.

24. Rev. GILBERT THOMAS SADLER, M.A., LL.B. (of Wimbledon).

31. Rev. W. J. JUPP (of Letchworth).

November.

7. Rev. WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

HIBBERT TRUST.

ONE SCHOLARSHIP on this foundation, of the value of £120, tenable for One Year, will be awarded in December next, provided that a Candidate of sufficient merit presents himself. Candidates are required solemnly to declare in writing that it is their intention to exercise the office of Minister of Religion amongst those who profess Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form, and who do not require for themselves or their ministers subscription to any doctrinal articles of belief. They must also furnish satisfactory evidence of age, graduation, &c., in accordance with the regulations, which may be obtained from the Secretary of the Trust.

Names and addresses of candidates should be in the hands of the Secretary by November 1st, and the required declaration, certificates, testimonials, and all other information must be in the hands of the Secretary not later than Saturday, November 6th.

FRANCIS H. JONES, Secretary.
University Hall, Gordon Square,
London, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDOCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | MISS CECIL GRADWELL,
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charge low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

BEFORE THE WAR—AND AFTER.

Six Lectures by

Prof. R. C. F. DOLLEY, M.A.
(of University College, Nottingham),

At ESSEX HALL, on Thursdays, Nov. 4 to Dec. 9
At 7.30 p.m.

TICKETS (for Course, 1s.; for Single Lectures, 3d.), and Syllabus from the Hon. Sec., Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, Hackney, N.E.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, October 17.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11 and 7, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W., 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORESENSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place. Thanksgiving Services, 11.15, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 7, Rev. ARTHUR GOLLAND, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15, Dr. C. HARGROVE; 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.

Ilford High Road, 11 and 7.

Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND. Evening Service at 6.30 in future.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. MUNFORD.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNO-WETH POPE.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. E. CAPLETON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.; 6.30.

Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.

South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. F. W. ROSS.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BÉGG; 6.30, Mr. T. P. SPEDDING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.; 7, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.

Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. FRED. HALL.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

Cambridge Assembly Room, Downing Street 11.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKE.

{ DEAN ROW, 10.45 and { STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. TRAVERS HERFORD.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. DR. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. F. TURLAND.

MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. DR. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINGLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.

MARRIAGE.

SUTTILL-ELLIS.—On October 9th, at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, by the Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., Roy, second son of Henry S. Suttill, of Pymore, Bridport, to Margaret Lucy, second daughter of Henry Ellis, of Potter's Bar.

BRIGGS-IMPEY.—On October 12th, very quietly, at the Friends' Meeting House, Longbridge, Harold Nettleterville, elder son of the late Thomas James Briggs and of Mrs. Briggs, of Lickey End, Bromsgrove, to Rosamond Levitt, second daughter of Robert Levitt Impey, J.P., and Mrs. Impey, of Woodlands, Alvechurch, Worcestershire.

DEATH.

HIND.—On September 26th, in France, from wounds received in action, September 25th-26th, John Maguire Hind, Civil Service Rifles, aged 20 years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Hind, 29, Muswell Road, N., and grandson of the late Charles and Ellen Hind.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

A LADY, who has had varied experience, desires re-engagement as COMPANION. For particulars and reference apply—Rev. James Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

NO SALARY.—Lady of Liberal Views would help invalid or elderly lady temporary or permanent, housekeeping, nursing, &c. Prefer relieving nurse for war, professional status. Midlands, West, South.—"M., INQUIRER OFFICE, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	503	CORRESPONDENCE:—	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
CHEERFUL ACCEPTANCE	505	The Work of the Belgian Hospital Fund	507	Belgian Hospital Fund	508
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	506	John Pounds House	507	Provincial Assembly of London and the South-Eastern Counties	509
HELP FOR THE FIRING LINE	506	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		The Eastern Union of Unitarian and other Free Christian Churches	510
WHAT WE NEED IS DEEPENING	506	The Pentecost of Calamity	508	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	510
		The Field of Honour	508	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	511

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WE expect soon to have a crop of fresh news from the Hospital centres in France for our readers. Meanwhile, it is with special pleasure that we publish the letter from Miss Cole Hamilton which appears in our present issue. It is a tribute to the work of the Fund from one who knows its work on the spot. In a private letter received from her this week, she writes, "Your Fund is so excellent that it deserves all the help it can get." We, on our side, desire to take this opportunity of expressing our warm admiration of the work which is being carried on for the Belgians by the members of the First Aid Yeomanry Corps, and of thanking them for the generous sympathy and help which they have given us in various ways. The horror of the war has only strengthened the ties of human fellowship in good works.

* * *

MRS. ALLEN has begun a short campaign of speeches in different places on behalf of the Fund, so far with the happiest results, and she has been successful in spreading knowledge of our needs in quarters where THE INQUIRER might find it hard to penetrate. For instance, she addressed the members of the Social Union in connection with the Baptist Central Mission in Bloomsbury on Tuesday evening. A great deal of interest was aroused among the audience, which consisted largely of girls and young women who have to earn their own living. The response at the close, and the evident desire to send gifts which cost something in time or money, showed how the message had gone home. The large generosity of people of small means has been one of the beautiful features of our work from the beginning.

* * *

WE are compelled to write this week before Sir Edward Grey's important statement in the House of Commons on our policy in the Balkans. But it is quite clear that it is not going to be one either of scuttle or weak ineffectiveness as some of our pessimists, in an unusually black mood, began to prophecy a few days ago. The French Prime Minister, M. Viviani, stated on Tuesday that the Allies have decided on a strong line of action. They will not desert Serbia in her hour of need, or permit her isolation, and, after weighing the difficulties, they are convinced that they can do this without any weakening of power in other directions. In this action he was able to assure the Chamber that the Government was in perfect accord with the Commander-in-Chief of their armies in France.

The understanding between the British Government and the Government of the Republic [he said] is complete, and I cannot express it better than in the following form:—

France and England, in accord with their Allies, are now fully agreed to send help to Serbia, who has asked for our assistance, and also to ensure for the benefit of Serbia, Greece, and Roumania respect for the Treaty of Bucharest, of which we are guarantors.

The Anglo-French Governments are at one as to the importance of the forces to be employed, in conformity with the views of their military authorities.

Russia has expressed her anxiety to join her Allies in sending help to the Serbian people, and to-morrow her troops will fight side by side with ours.

Gentlemen, with our Allies we have done our duty. Never has accord between Allies been so complete and so close. Never have we been more confident of our common victory.

* * *

SOME disappointment has been expressed that a similar announcement was not made simultaneously in the House of Commons. It is useless to speculate about the reasons unless the Government decides to divulge them, but there is no reason why we should grudge this position of priority to our Ally. For many reasons it is appropriate, because in many ways the decision is a harder one for France than for ourselves. The first consideration for France must be the defence of her own frontiers and the recovery of her invaded territory. It is our interests rather than hers that are attacked in the Near East. This is so clear that there would have been little matter for complaint or surprise if her point of view had been more domestic than it is. France has risen at this difficult hour to meet the debt of honour. In spite of some hesitating voices in her own press, she has shown the large statesmanship which acknowledges that for the Allies there are no divided interests. The problems of the war are one, and concern us all equally.

WE have dealt elsewhere with the weakening influence of dolefulness or exaggerated fears as we face a new situation. Some writers in the press have been quick to show a clean pair of heels, and stand in sore need of our message of cheerful acceptance. Here we must register our emphatic protest against the unmannerly attacks upon Sir Edward Grey. We are all disappointed at what has happened, but that is no reason why we should lose our temper and feel that we must hit somebody. So far as there is any argument behind these attacks it seems to be of this elementary order—it was Sir Edward Grey's business to keep Bulgaria on our side, he has not done so, therefore, Sir Edward Grey is entirely to blame.

* * *

THE tasks of diplomacy are seldom so simple as this. When a mathematical problem goes wrong we know that some one has blundered. But in the conflict of wills and the attempt to compose antagonistic interests it is often the honourable and far-seeing man who has to accept defeat. To talk of a diplomatic débacle in the Balkans as though for us it were a matter for shame and confusion of face is, to say the least, unsuitable language. It implies that high-minded men, unless they are fools, must always win in a contest of persuasion. It is possible that in many ways we might have handled the Balkan situation more wisely. The documents when they are published may contain many things which will not add to our self-esteem. As our readers know we have long held strong views about the danger of entrusting the work of diplomacy to a small caste, in which birth and ample means often count for more than intelligence. But at the present moment it seems to us to be foolish and unpatriotic to undermine confidence with vague words of blame when the facts are not before us, and no one is prepared to state how we could have won a diplomatic victory in Bulgaria without compromising essential principles of honourable dealing.

* * *

MEANWHILE, two things in this tangled situation are quite plain. We have not stooped to base intrigue for our own ends as Germany has done. We did not bribe and cajole without regard to honesty of intention or the equity of our promises. We refused to have anything to do with a policy of mere grab and plunder. But King Ferdinand, a man of tortuous character and evil ambition, has never shown any respect for the spirit of generosity and justice. He wanted solid gains to satisfy his own dreams of domination, and when the Germans dangled the bribe before his eyes he accepted it. To him it does not seem the action of a political gambler. The German successes against Russia have impressed him. He believes that Germany will be able to deliver the goods. Against German bribes and the solid argument of the Russian reverses how was our diplomacy, with its respect for national aspirations and its inability to play fast and loose with principles of equity, to prevail?

* * *

THERE are welcome signs that the rather lurid atmosphere of the past few days is already passing away. We must not assume that Germany has an unlimited supply of men for an Eastern adventure. She has begun to use again the bombastic phrases of the world-conqueror, which is always a cheerful sign. No doubt this tall language about the road to India is meant to impress us, but it may be intended chiefly for home consumption, in order to cover up the inconclusive results of the Russian campaign with dreams of Oriental magnificence. Germania furens has often spoken in this way before. Paris, Calais and the Channel ports, and Petrograd were all to fall before her conquering hosts. We are not much impressed by the preliminary stage effects of her new effort. It is menacing but not paralysing. On the most sober view she has quite as much to fear from us as we have to fear from her, and she knows it. In an unguarded moment she has thrown off the pretence that she is only trying to defend herself against a world of jealous foes, and assumed the truculent airs of military glory. We shall see the whole situation in truer perspective, if we remember that this new adventure has been dictated by the necessity of keeping us out of Constantinople far more than by grandiose dreams of an empire covering two Continents.

* * *

THE appointment of Lord Derby as chief organiser of recruiting is excellent. He is himself in favour of compulsion, and no one can say that he is likely to be unduly favourable to the voluntary system. On the other hand, few men in the country have been so successful in attracting volunteers. The military situation in the Balkans has put some fresh heart into the agitation for conscription, but there is a general feeling that there must be fair play for voluntarism for a few weeks. Lord Derby must be given his chance. The difficulties of a change are so great that we may be sure he will save the situation if he can. On the other hand no good citizen is going to risk defeat rather than yield. At the present moment it is a question, not so much of principle as of public prudence. If the Government tells us that conscription is necessary because there is a considerable surplus of our manhood which cannot be secured on any other terms, we shall have no inclination to take up an intransigent attitude. It has become a matter for careful calculation, and violent rhetoric should be avoided both on the one side and on the other.

* * *

WE are told sometimes that so many young men still throng the streets of our large towns because they are engaged on necessary business and cannot be spared. The misfortune is that this is often a matter purely of private judgment. An employer calculates that his business will suffer if his staff is further reduced. The possibility that national duty may require the closing of his shop or warehouse altogether never enters his head. He is of the same mind as the man who writes to the newspapers to tell us how gladly he would serve his country, if only he could afford it. Do people of this kind realize what is happening in other countries in this life-and-death struggle for freedom? Have they heard of the deserted shops in Paris and other French towns and the notice fixed to their shutters that they are closed because the proprietor has gone to the war? Some of the arguments for compulsory service make no appeal to us at all, but we cannot deny the force of this one, that it would put an end to this state of tangled argument and moral indecision, and limit the baneful influence of private aims in face of urgent public duties.

* * *

THE no-treating order in the London area is one of the strongest and best pieces of temperance regulation which we have had since the beginning of the war. It strikes at the root of one of the most prolific sources of drunkenness, and goes a long way to eliminate drinking from its pernicious association with good-fellowship and conviviality. We only wonder why it has been delayed so long. Certainly it has not been because the need was not cruelly plain to anybody with eyes to see. There must be a valiant struggle at the close of the war to keep what we have gained. Why should there be any thought of going back to bad habits and subjecting men afresh to forms of temptation which have been their ruin in the past? It is not enough to give alcoholism in our country a temporary check, it is a vice which must be killed.

CHEERFUL ACCEPTANCE.

WE are not fatalists, though armies have often gone forth to conquer in the faith that everything has been decreed beforehand by the will of Heaven. We know how much depends, in war as well as peace, upon our own intelligence and foresight. If there are blunders in diplomacy or strategy, if through weakness of will or lack of political imagination we fail to put the needful strength into our task, we must blame ourselves and not our circumstances. Without some candour in self-criticism there can be no recovery of power. None the less we advocate a policy of cheerful acceptance as the way of wisdom at the present time. Let us, for a moment, consider the situation. We are engaged in war, and this means that we are exposed to the vicissitudes, surprises, and changing fortunes of war. And it is a war in which the enemies who are ranged against us are strong through long and deliberate preparation for attack and without a scruple of honour or humanity to restrain them. In these circumstances the path of victory cannot be either straightforward or easy. We must be prepared for delays when we are eager to move forward at top speed, for a fresh crop of difficulties and fears at the moment when success seems to be inclining to our side, for the soreness and chagrin of diplomatic defeats inflicted by weapons which only a dishonoured nation can use. When we took up the burden of this war most sensible people knew that these things must happen, and they tried to prepare themselves to meet them without panic or complaint or any loss of cheerful faith in the triumphant goodness of our cause. Some of us, perhaps, have found it a hard strain to keep these good resolutions, and there have been weeks of grey skies and drooping spirits when we have failed.

The new situation in the Balkans is a serious one. Things have not turned out as we had hoped. German intrigue playing upon the mean passions of the King of Bulgaria has scored a temporary success. So much must be granted. But it is only the man of weak and unbalanced mind, who falls into panic or ill-tempered complaint about our ineffectiveness. This man and his favourite newspaper have done the same thing often before, whenever public feeling has suddenly grown tense and there was need for sanity and encouragement. Fortunately they do not control the course of the war. The difficulties are very grave, there has never been a moment since August of last year when that was not the right word to apply to them. We have had a sharp reminder that we must be prepared to accept all the risks of our respect for honour, our support of the cause of peoples weaker than ourselves, and our devotion to public liberty. None of us want to have Bulgaria on our side at the price which Germany has paid for her support. An alliance with King Ferdinand on his own shifty terms might possibly have brought a swifter decision to our arms, but we should have betrayed our cause. We are right, then, to face this new factor in the war without dismay. We realise its gravity. We know that it must impose fresh burdens upon us and may prolong our suffering. But we accept it as part of this grim world-wide struggle between good and evil. It adds strength to our determination to put this monstrous spirit of oppression and duplicity in chains, and we are not afraid of the issue.

To some of us this attitude of cheerful acceptance is not very hard when we are dealing with human affairs on the great scale. They touch our own interests rather vaguely. We are not political or military experts, and we see the wisdom of trusting our leaders. It is when our cheerfulness and courage are put to a sharp personal test that we begin to know whether they are deeply enough rooted to stand the strain. "Put forth thine hand now and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face." Have the words any echo of meaning in our lives? Can we give Job's answer, when the storm beats against our house and what is dear to ourselves is taken away? We are not a dramatic people. We do not curse God in such circumstances as men of fiercer passions and simpler piety might have done. But we fall away into murmurs of discontent. The sunshine goes out of our faith. We fancy that we have received an incurable wound. And then the mind becomes an easy prey to the spectres of doubt. Has it all been a terrible mistake? we ask. Is freedom itself worth this bitter price? Are we not right to protest in hot anger against such useless sacrifice? This mood of rebellion, which weakens resistance and embitters sorrow, has no place in the hearts of our people. It is a striking testimony to their deep religiousness that suffering has ennobled them. They receive the sharpest blows without flinching, as those who know that there is no place for vain regret when love and duty point the way. The wives and mothers of our land do not lose faith in the cause and droop in despondency when they must make the last surrender of all. In their silence and the quick abandonment of themselves to healing works of mercy they are as brave as our soldiers in the trenches. They know what Wordsworth knew when he wrote these strange and haunting lines:—

Divine must be
That triumph, when the very worst, the pain,
And even the prospect of our brethren slain,
Has something in it which the heart enjoys:
In glory will they sleep and endless sanctity.

In ordinary days words like these may appear overstrained and unfeeling. But now we share the mood in which they were conceived. We can accept cheerfully the full burden of public anxiety or private sorrow when we see it as part of the demand of Duty, from which there can be no turning back without dishonour, no shrinking without betrayal. Every month seems to raise the price which we must pay for freedom. So be it; it only makes freedom more kingly in our eyes. New debts of honour confront us before we have discharged the old. We do not grumble, for to pay them is our privilege, and we are not spiritual bankrupts yet. Let diplomacy be as skilful as any of us can desire, and our statesmen act with the far-sighted prudence which leaves nothing to chance—there will still be dark and anxious days, sharp stabs of misfortune, moments when we hold our breath in suspense. All this we must expect. There is nothing for us but to go on doing our duty. And duty will reveal its hidden joy when we remember that it is God's will for us, and that our faithfulness to this cause through good and evil report, and every sacrifice we make on its behalf, have upon them the unfading consecration of religion.

The land we from our fathers had in trust,
And to our children will transmit, or die ;
This is our maxim, this our piety ;
And God and Nature say that it is just.
That which we would perform in arms—
we must !

We know the arduous strife, the eternal laws

To which the triumph of all good is given,
High sacrifice and labour without pause,
Even to the death—else wherefore should the eye

Of man converse with immortality ?

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

UNTO each man his handiwork, unto each his crown,

The just fate gives ;

Whoso takes the world's life on him and his own lays down,

He, dying so, lives.

Whoso bears the whole heaviness of the wrong'd world's weight

And puts it by,

It is well with him suffering, though he face man's fate ;

How should he die ?

Seeing death has no part in him any more, no power

Upon his head ;

He has bought his eternity with a little hour

And is not dead.

For an hour if ye look for him, he is no more found,

For one hour's space ;

Then ye lift up your faces to him and behold him crowned,

A deathless face.

On the mountains of memory, by the world's well-springs,

In all men's eyes,

Where the light of the life of him is on all past things,

Death only dies.

SWINBURNE.

"THE sword, as the sword, can give no rights.....Military policy merely will not perform all that is needful, nor mere military virtues.....England, as well as the rest of Europe, requires what is more difficult to give it, a new course of education, a higher tone of moral feeling, more of the grandeur of the imaginative faculties, and less of the petty processes of the unfeeling and purblind understanding that would manage the concerns of nations in the same calculating spirit with which it would set about building a house. Now a state ought to be governed upon calculations and from impulses similar to those which give motion to the hand of a great artist when he is preparing a picture, or of a mighty poet when he is determining the proportions and the march of a poem ; much is to be done by rule ; the great outline is previously to be conceived in distinct-ness, but the consummation of the work must be trusted to resources that are not tangible, though known to exist."

Wordsworth (from a letter to Captain Pasley, March 28, 1811).

O GOD, -who makest cheerfulness the companion of strength, but apt to take wings in time of sorrow ; we humbly beseech thee that if for our own unworthiness, or in thy sovereign wisdom, thou sendest weakness, yet for thy mercy's sake deny us not the comfort of patience.
Lay not more upon us, O heavenly Father, than thou wilt enable us to bear ;
and since the fretfulness of our spirits is more hurtful than the heaviness of our burden, grant us that heavenly calmness which comes of owning thy hand in all things, and patience in the trust that thou doest all things well. Amen.

HELP FOR THE FIRING LINE.

SEVERAL friends have expressed considerable interest in the work that the Belgian Hospital Fund has been doing for the Belgian wounded in the fighting line. From time to time we receive personal requests from doctors at the front to supply them with a few of the most necessary instruments and appliances. A type of satchel has accordingly been specially prepared, after consultation with the Belgian doctors at Calais, who have had experience of what is needed. The satchel contains the following items :—

Boric acid tablets, iodine crystals, alcohol, antispasmodic mixture, collodion, morphia, strychnine, ergotinine, ammonia, cotton wool, field dressings, lint, triangular bandages, Mead's plaster, tape, scissors, forceps, probe, hypodermic syringe, thermometer, safety pins, tourniquet, aluminium cup, arm and thigh splints.

The satchel itself is compact in shape and is slung from the shoulders.

The following extracts from doctors' letters will show how greatly these satchels are appreciated :—

A.—"I greatly appreciate the discrimination with which the different instruments and medicaments for this satchel have been selected. It is quite an indispensable companion for those who are called to give their services to the unfortunate wounded at the front, and not the least of its merits is that it contains all these invaluable drugs and requisites in a remarkably compact form in a case which can be so easily carried. I am convinced that this truly admirable satchel will prove of the greatest service, and will bring comfort to many suffering men. May I, madame, send you, in all sincerity, my warmest thanks for this beautiful gift, and add my hope that we shall soon see our arms victorious and little Belgium rejoicing, side by side with glorious England, in a well earned peace ?"

B.—"The satchel is truly superb, and contains in a compact form all that is needed for the first dressing of a wound.
It gives me great joy to possess it."

C.—"The satchel arrived in the nick of time, as we are ordered into the trenches again to-morrow. From our hearts we send you our warmest thanks and shall always feel grateful for your help."

D.—"You would scarcely believe what a boon your gifts of medical satchels are to the wounded on the field of battle in giving them first aid and comfort. They contain all that is necessary to tend them properly on the spot and quickly.
I have proved this again and again."

WHAT WE NEED IS DEEPENING.

I WAS reading not long ago the biography of one who as a young man gave much promise, starting with lofty ideals and aims, but who died in early middle life without having fulfilled the noble promise of his youth. In one of his letters he relates a dream he had of being one of a company in a great hall, filled with guests, eating and drinking and making merry. To a mysterious stranger who entered the hall, he said,
"Is not this a picture of life, shallow, hollow, and unsatisfying ?" To which the grave stranger replied : "You are mistaken. This is only the surface of life. What you need is deepening."

What you need is deepening. To how many men and women everywhere that requires to be said. The need of deepening may not be felt by themselves, yet it is just what they need. Their life is largely the story of superficiality.

In their feeling and thought and experience, in their affections and friendships, in their pursuits and pleasures, in their work and service, in their very religion, how superficial and shallow they are! Their being is full of wonderful possibilities, and their passing days full of large opportunities of knowing and loving, of doing and serving, but they make little or no effort to realise them. The great depths of their nature and life are to them practically non-existent. What they need is deepening. They must have deeper experiences. They must take time to know themselves and to know God.

Our young men and women require to be constantly reminded that what they need is deepening—deepening in moral and religious feeling, deepening in thought and purpose, deepening in sympathy with all highest and best things. To remain where they are, in the shallows and narrows of their nature and life, playing on the surface of things, content with petty and superficial interests—means laying up for themselves disappointment, weariness and bitter regrets. Always the penalty of the superficial life is the sense of emptiness which it brings sooner or later.

Our older men and women require to have the same message addressed to them—"What you need is deepening"—the deepening of the inner life, the deepening of character, the deepening of spiritual experience. This deepening is not something that is affected by the mere lapse of years. It is, indeed, the tendency of life as it advances, unless its ideal aspects are vigorously followed, to run shallow. We are in danger of growing superficial, hard, commonplace, vulgar, worldly, unspiritual. At no period do we stand more in need of all the influences which deepen the life—quicken the mind, nourish the finer affections and sentiments, and strengthen faith in the Invisible and Eternal.

It is a message also to the Churches—"What you need is deepening." The work of the Churches needs everywhere to be made much deeper work. It needs to be deepened more than to be extended or diversified. Most serious is the criticism which may be justly made of the quality of much of the work that is being done in the name of religion. "It is very varied but very thin; too superficial to be genuine." It is pre-eminently the preacher's function to speak to the depths of life. Alas! that he should so often neglect this function in seeking after the poor and fleeting success which is to be had by appealing to superficial tastes and cravings, and in giving to men not what they truly need but what they want and wish. The meaning of much of the religious unrest of the day, of the dissatisfaction which many serious and thoughtful people feel with the ecclesiastical administration of religion is that the Church's message and work do not go deep enough, and do not find them in the depths of their nature and experience. What men need is not entertaining but deepening. The Church exists to hallow and deepen human life. We must not only be broad Christians but deep Christians. What we need is deepening.

JOHN HUNTER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE WORK OF THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I be allowed a little space to tell your readers of the work which is going on here among the Belgian convalescents? This camp is situated in the depth of the country about twenty miles from Tours. There are 5,000 Belgians in the camp, 700 of these being convalescents. The regular soldiers have their work to occupy them. But the convalescents had nothing to do, and discontent was rampant. Last winter conditions of life were terrible in the wet and cold, with no comforts and few of the necessities of existence. It is all very well to be in the midst of lovely country, but when you are wretchedly uncomfortable, unhappy and weak, with nothing to distract your thoughts, there is not much consolation in looking at the view, and this was all that these men had to amuse them. The lonely pathetic look on their faces will never be forgotten by those who have seen it. The Belgian Government has done much to make the living conditions better, and Mrs. MacDougall, head of the First-Aid Yeomanry Corps, was asked to start a club for the convalescents. The French Authorities very kindly provided and fitted up a large stone hut, and on September 13 two opening concerts were given, and the work began in earnest. We hope that this hut will help to lift the heavy load of depression which all Belgians suffer from at times.

Our work is in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A., and the hut is run largely on their lines. Tea, coffee, cocoa, refreshments, soap, &c., being sold at moderate rates, and notepaper given away. A piano, gramophone, and games are provided. Both the former get hard work, and the men are very quick at picking up new games. The convalescents are admitted by ticket, as it would be impossible to have 700 in at once. Invalid food is given free on doctor's orders. Two mornings a week are reserved for epileptics and fools. We find our busiest time is in the evenings. As I write, there is a babel of voices, the piano is being thumped, and the gramophone has just finished "Tipperary." Judging by noise, numbers, and liquid consumed, the hut is a success. We were told lately that during the first fortnight it was open there was only one arrest among the convalescents; formerly there were about twenty a day. As well as the work in the hut, we visit the hospital and go round the different wards, giving pillows (for they had none), hairbrushes, games, chocolate, notepaper, &c., to the sick and consumptives, who are too ill to come and benefit by the hut. I hope that soon we shall be able to provide a gramophone for the hospital and consumptive ward. The doctors know that we have stores of shirts, socks, blankets, invalid food for the use of the sick; and anything they ask for is given. It is in this last branch of our work that we have been so ably helped by the Belgian Hospital Fund. They were our staunch friends at our hospital in Calais, and since this hut started have sent us both blankets and invalid food. This Fund works so quietly that only those who like ourselves have worked for the Belgians can know the immense amount of good it has done and is doing. I should like to take this opportunity of thanking its supporters most heartily on behalf of the First-Aid Yeomanry Corps.—Yours, &c.,

M. S. COLE HAMILTON.

Camp de Ruchard, Indre et Loire, Oct. 8, 1915.

JOHN POUNDS HOUSE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—For many years you have been good enough to insert for me an appeal to your readers for the John Pounds House. I refrained from asking this last year, as since the war commenced I know the many urgent calls our kind friends have had upon their purses. Now our little Home is suffering from want of funds, and the increased prices for food &c., compel me to ask for help. We have fixed Wednesday, Oct. 27, for our Public Annual Meeting and Pound Day, and, in announcing this, beg very earnestly for pounds of anything useful, or money. Boots and shoes, new or old, are always welcome.

After twenty years of hard and happy work among some of the poorest girls in Portsmouth, work which has been full of real human interest in spite of its many great difficulties and disappointments, I have learnt to know something of their needs, and that with many only the opportunity is lacking to make them respectable, useful women, and eventually good wives and mothers. Without this opportunity they remain dirty, slovenly, and unable to do one thing well. Should they marry, both house and children are neglected, and often they drift to something worse. With some girls we can do little, their early environment and heredity prevent it, but even with these "there is no lost good," they have learnt something. Many, however, come to us rough and with no notion of cleanliness, but in a few months you would not recognise the slum girl in the neat, well-mannered young servant—it is this which makes us take heart and try again. Every girl taken has some special claim for our help. We have just now the two daughters of a labourer whose wife died leaving him with four children whom he placed with a working woman, but soon found the girls were over-worked and neglected, and came here for help and advice. With gratitude he accepted our offer to take them in and train them for service. He pays weekly a small sum; they are doing well. We have the two daughters of a costermonger, motherless, neglected and ill-treated at home. The aunt when bringing the younger one to me said, "Please take her. I am afraid for the child, her father drinks and ill-uses her shamefully." We have orphans, illegitimates, children of drunkards, and those in grave moral danger. It is for these I ask for help, that we may carry on our much needed work.—Yours, &c.

MARY ROGERS.

John Pounds House, St. Simons Road,
Southsea, October 10, 1915.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE PENTECOST OF CALAMITY. By Owen Wister. London: Macmillan & Co. 2s. net.

THIS small book will make a wide appeal because it is by the author of 'The Virginian.' To many of us it will be specially welcome because it is by an American, and says several things about the present situation, which many of us feel but hardly care even to whisper in the ears of a friendly neutral. Mr. Wister had a keen admiration for Germany before the war, with its highly organised life, its tidy and prosperous exterior and its palatial cities. He paints an almost idyllic picture of these things, but only to deepen the shadows of her moral downfall. To him as to other thoughtful men all over the world the tragedy of the war is deepest of all for Germany, for she has lost her soul and become shameless, while France and England, touched by the Pentecost of Calamity, have been awakened and transfigured. But the chief significance of his essay is to be found in the last pages, where he discusses the American attitude and gives voice to his own moral disquiet under a régime of cautious silence and deferred judgment. For him moral neutrality at the present moment is a crime against humanity. "I want no better photograph of any individual," he writes, "than his opinion of this war. If he has none that is a photograph of him." Mr. Wister also sets his face against the idle dream that America can separate herself from the rest of the world and remain peaceful and prosperous, sound in body and mind, while freedom and morality are fighting for their existence elsewhere. "Since August, 1914, we have stood listening to the cry of our European brothers-in-Liberty. They did not ask our feeble arm to strike in their cause, but they yearned for our voice and did not get it. Will history acquit us of this silence?"—"To speak of the Old World and the New World is to speak in a dead language. The world is one. America can no more separate herself from the destiny of Europe than it can escape the natural laws of the universe." These are not the censorious words of a stranger, but the sad reflections of an American citizen, who has been wounded in the house of his friends. "Perhaps nothing but calamity will teach us," such is his final reflection, "what Europe is thankful to have learned again—that some things are worse than war, and that you can pay too high a price for peace; but that you cannot pay too high for the finding and keeping of your own soul."

THE FIELD OF HONOUR. By H. Fielding Hall. London: Constable & Co. 3s. 6d. net.

THERE is a touch of irony in the spectacle of the author of the 'Soul of a People,' with its apotheosis of gentleness, turning his literary skill to the stern tasks of the present hour. But Mr. Fielding Hall has too keen an eye for reality to lull his readers with dream-land visions of peace when all our duty lies elsewhere. In the present volume he has given us four short sketches with a prologue and an epilogue in verse. They are all very simple, and might easily in less practised hands have become sentimental, but there is dignity in Mr. Hall's writing and a throb of genuine emotion, and through it all there is a sense of the "harmony which is hid within the crash and discord of great pain and suffering." It is his object to show how the call of duty and the fellowship of pain can ennoble commonplace lives and make them conscious of a high destiny. Incidentally he chides the impatience of some of our critics with his clear insight into national character. He sees, for instance, that the slowness of recruiting in some districts is due to deep-seated characteristics, and is not to be conquered by scolding. "For a young man to throw up his career and enlist," he writes, "is a very serious step. And he is not accustomed to decisions of this nature. Most men's careers are the result of outward forces, their education their parents' orders, circumstances, and not of decisions made by themselves. The immense majority of mankind never have had cause to make a great decision, never have done so. Yet at these recruiting meetings young men were suddenly urged to give up at a moment's notice their careers and their lives on a bare assurance that the country needed them, not for aggressive but for defensive war. It was trying them very highly. How true and sound the Englishman's heart is the answer proved. All honour to the lads who led the way." But there is here no refuge of easy excuse for the faint-hearted. Mr. Hall writes in the deep conviction that the individual must listen to the call of the whole. For every man and woman, who is worthy to live at all in these testing times, there is a place to be filled on the field of honour and all private interests of life and fortune must go into the second rank.

WE have received the October number of the Social Service Quarterly, which is the organ of the National Conference Union for Social Service. Among the contents are "A Word from the President," by Miss C. Gittins; the address on "Spiritual Fellowship and Social Comradeship: the Harder Lesson," which was given by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed at one of the morning devotional meetings at the Swanwick Conference—a timely reminder that the conflict between the members of different churches is no longer on the theological or ecclesiastical, but on the social and ethical area; and an account of the Swanwick Summer School by the Rev. H. H. Johnson, secretary of the Union for Social Service. An article on Hope Street Church (Liverpool) Social Problem Circle is also contributed by Miss Harriet Johnson. Attention is called to the "Questionnaire," which appeared in the April issue, and is reprinted in leaflet form, relating to the directory of social service which it is desired to compile for purposes of organisation. The replies will be regarded as strictly confidential, and nothing will be made public save where express sanction has been given. The questions relate to the organisations connected with the churches for the study of social problems, the number of members of the congregations engaged in any form of social service, the methods of co-operating with charitable agencies in the district, and other points of interest about which it would be well to have the fullest information available.

THE Poetry Bookshop announces the publication on November 15 of 'Georgian Poetry, 1913-1915,' edited by E. M. This is a similar volume to 'Georgian Poetry 1911-1912,' now in its twelfth edition.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital is one of M. Vander-velde's Union of Committees in London, and works in close co-operation with the Belgian Army Medical Authorities. Its object is to provide the Belgian Military Hospitals in France with sufficient surgical instruments, medical and nursing requisites, bed-linen, and clothes for the patients. It also aids the Convalescent Depots for Belgian soldiers, and maintains a Hospice for civilian refugees in Calais.

39TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	7400	11 2
Mrs. Vickery (second donation)	1	1 0
"X." (ninth donation)	1	0 0
Mr. and Mrs. Haslam (third donation)	0	5 0
Eric Haslam (aged 6 years)	0	0 6
Mrs. Haslam's maid	0	0 6
Miss Eliza Withall (second donation)	1	0 0
Miss Julia Lloyd (second donation)	0	10 0
Mr. Chas. Wicksteed (third donation)	10	0 0
West Grove Branch Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (third donation)	0	3 6
Mr. F. Maddison (seventh donation)	0	10 0
Mrs. K. Cook	1	10 0
Mrs. Jevons	2	0 0
Mrs. Edwin Ellis (third donation)	2	0 0
Mr. Jas. Buckley	5	0 0
Memorial Church and Red Cross Society, Liscard, per Mrs. Johnson (seventh donation)	3	8 7
Miss Rowlands, Liscard (second donation)	1	0 0
Mrs. Tetley	0	10 0

	£	s.	d.
Messrs. Grimsdale & Sons, Ltd.	5	5	0
Mrs. Worthington ..	5	0	0
Miss Priscilla Tablimer ..	0	5	0
W. B. D. ..	2	2	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence (fourth donation) ..	25	0	0
Miss Durning - Lawrence (second donation) ..	20	0	0
Mr. S. W. Davies ..	0	10	6
Miss Pritchard (third dona- tion) ..	5	0	0
Miss Mary Hill ..	1	0	0
Miss A. H. Nicholson ..	1	1	0
C. A. C. ..	0	2	6
The Rev. H. Enfield Dowson	5	0	0
Miss Marion Hibbert (second donation) ..	2	2	0
Mrs. George Musgrave (second donation) ..	25	0	0
Harvest Services Collection at Cross Street Chapel, Man- chester, per Mr. G. W. Rayner Wood ..	5	16	0
The Misses Gillespie and Miss Colton (eighth donation)	7	6
"D." (third donation) ..	10	0	0
Bootle Free Church, Liver- pool, per the Rev. W. Short (fifth monthly collection)	1	13	9
Mr. F. W. Turner ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Mielziner ..	0	2	6
Wiggston Grammar School for Girls, per Miss Heron ..	1	0	0
Mr. David Healey ..	10	0	0
Mrs. David Healey ..	10	0	0
Second-Lieutenant W. D. Healey ..	5	0	0
Bloomsbury Social Union, collection at meeting on October 12, per Mr. Free- man ..	1	12	0
Mr. John Horner ..	0	10	0
A. Y. A., Deal (eighth dona- tion) ..	0	5	0
Nurse Copeman (fourth dona- tion) ..	0	10	0
Miss Lamb (fourth donation)	2	2	0
Junior Girls' Guild of the Old Meeting House, Dudley, per Mrs. Glyn Evans) ..	4	0	0
Miss Sarah Ann Gregg (eighth donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. Harrison ..	5	0	0
Miss Palmer ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Hicks (third donation) ..	1	1	0
Miss Mary E. Swaine (ninth donation) ..	3	0	0
	£7,600	18	0

Parcels have been received from:—

Anon.; Miss Colfox; Mrs. Nellen; Miss Jenkins; Miss K. Harris; Mrs. Haslam; Miss Lillian S. Preston; Miss M. C. Compton; Mrs. E. L. Cox; Mrs. Fellows Pearson; Miss Leigh; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Mrs. Raymond Allen; Mrs. Ridley Bax; Mr. S. W. Davies; Miss E. B. Drewry; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Mrs. Geo. Musgrave; the Rev. H. and Mrs. Wooding; Mrs. J. Taylor Jones; Mrs. Wicksteed; Miss Dorothy Marshall; Mrs. Jellie; West Grove Cardiff Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Fox); Sister Dorothy; Miss Swallow; Monton Branch Women's League (per Mrs. Nahson); East Ham Secondary School (per Miss J. H. Wicksteed); Mrs. Rye, M.B.; Miss Mavis Jupp; The Misses K. and N. Kingston; Anon.; Mrs. Rodick; Miss Mary Dendy; Mrs. Grundy; Miss C. R. Holland; Miss M. B. Lamb; Miss K. F. Lawford.

It will be a great convenience if all senders of parcels will enclose their names and addresses and a list of contents in each parcel.

LIST OF ARTICLES REQUIRED.

Shirts.
Socks.
Vests | woven or of a natural coloured
Pants | flannel or flannelette, Patterns can be supplied.
Cardigans.
Slippers for ward and garden wear.
Towels.
Sheets and pillowslips.
Handkerchiefs.
Bag mittens.
Mufflers.
Playing cards, draughts, chess, dominoes.
Writing materials.

Contributions of Money and Clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LONDON AND THE SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

THE MINISTER'S ANNUAL REPORT.

THE following is the report of the Minister of the Assembly, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, which was omitted for reasons of space in our account of the annual meeting of the Assembly at Ilford last week:—

Everything has been changed by the war. We are all feeling the truth of this statement in all departments of work and not least in our religious activities. And yet in one sense there has been little change. Sunday by Sunday the congregation meets for worship and joins in the familiar acts of praise and prayer, endeared to them by long usage, perhaps with a new intensity of feeling and with a deeper sense of personal weakness and need. Ministers have become conscious that the first call is upon their personal sympathy, while bookishness and gifts chiefly of an intellectual order have fallen into the background. The pastoral office, which in any true conception of the Christian ministry must take an equal place with the pulpit, has assumed an unwonted importance. The church is being tested not by its power to preach brilliant sermons on the war, but by its gifts of healing and quickening sympathy, its ministry of comfort and charity alike to those who are called to face hard duties and to the anxious, the bereaved, and the lonely. There has never been a time in living memory when events forced us, as they are doing now, to put all our words and our inherited doctrines to the searching test, not of logic or historical criticism, but of human experience. Face to face with the last extremity of human need, have we the message of a great salvation?

At all times the best work of the churches of this Assembly is simply the work of religion. Their chief energy goes into the quiet tasks of ministry, which are common to all forms of organised Christianity. They have, however, something which distinguishes them from others, and gives them a reason for their separation, their own accent, their own tradition, their own special witness to the things of Christ and God. We know that they have something of their own to contribute to the gladness of the world and the final unity of holiness and truth. But the national emotions, in which we all share, have for the moment almost obliterated many of the familiar lines of grouping. It is not so much what is distinctive in our party or our church, as what is common, which engages all our thoughts. Now these quiet intensive methods, just helping men to pray, to feel the presence of God, and to keep their hearts clean and wholesome by the working of His grace, do not provide material for a report. There are no programmes of fresh enterprise, no records of success. Beneath the familiar surface the heaven is at work, and possibly we may see the fruit of its transforming energy after many days. It is, I believe, in this spirit that our ministers are trying to meet the needs of the hour, and they find no small consolation for the abandonment of cherished plans in the larger demands which are made upon their sympathy and the closer intimacy between soul and soul.

And so what shall the Minister of the Assembly say to you this year? Most of the ordinary material for a report does not exist. Is it not enough in these times to say that we have all tried in our widely scattered churches to do our work with diligence and to guard and cherish every spark of religious life? Extension has not been possible, but I hope that the coming days will show that a deeper note has not been lacking in worship, and that many people, whether in a large city congregation or the small group in a village church, have been helped.

The report of the Committee draws special attention to the admirable and self-sacrificing work which has been done by the lay-preachers. I must join my word of gratitude to theirs. They serve several small congregations, which otherwise would not be able to maintain their services at all. Guildford, Halstead, Northiam, Westcliff, Southend, Tunbridge Wells, and Billingshurst have been helped in this way during the past year. The work has been rather more exacting than usual, as the number of men available has been reduced by the various demands of the war. Two members of the Lay Preachers Union are on active service, Mr. A. G. Tarrant in the Royal Engineers and Mr. Victor Fox in the R.A.M.C. One member, Mr. A. W. Whitehead, a corporal in the Finsbury Rifles, has to our great sorrow, been killed in action at the Dardanelles. To his widow and relatives we have already sent a message of admiration for his fine example of courage and deep sympathy in their loss. During the year the Union has had an excellent president in Mr. John Kinsman of Ilford, and a most diligent and helpful secretary in Mr. S. D. Greenfield.

A good deal of my time has been given as usual to visits of friendship to our scattered country congregations. I have reason to believe that my visits are a source of help and pleasure to several ministers. The congregations also welcome these visible tokens of fellowship with a larger life. On several occasions during the past year difficulties have been discussed, advice has been sought, or I have had the privilege of a short conference with the church committee. A congregation in a country town or agricultural district in the southern counties must often bring special difficulties and disappointments to the minister. Several of them have lingering traditions of better days. Their decline has been due generally to a shifting of the population or the disappearance of the small group of families who once made them their special care. The minister must sometimes feel that he is fighting a losing battle. It requires a large measure of faith to go on cheerfully and to work obstinately and patiently for a revival. If the revival comes it is admirable and worthy of all praise; if it is defeated or delayed let us be slow to blame the minister, remembering that some difficulties would sap the energy of most of us. It is a pleasure to pay this tribute to our country parsons, and for myself to thank them once again for their readiness to accept me as a friend and for many a cordial welcome into their pulpits and their homes. On these simple human lines, which do no violence to our independence, and for this reason are the only ones open to us, we promote the ideal of corporate union and closer fellowship in common aims.

My report for the year amounts, then, to this, that in most exceptional circumstances we have abandoned nothing, and the work, so far as I know, has nowhere gone back. Will you forgive me if I close on a rather personal note. The war has brought its special duties to most of us, and I am afraid that I am no exception to the rule. It seemed natural that I should take the secretaryship of the Sustentation Fund temporarily in order to liberate the secretary for military duties which I could not undertake myself. The Belgian Hospital Fund is another piece of war service which has come to me, and its success, which no one anticipated in the early days, has involved me in a good deal of labour. My visits to France and my personal contact with all its activities enable me to speak about its work and to press home its appeal. Several of our congregations in different parts of the country have offered me opportunities of doing this. I am sure that you will not think me unreasonable, or neglectful of the best interests of the churches of the Assembly, if I wander beyond the confines of the Province on rather more Sundays than usual during the next six months. Whatever any of us can do we must do to help the need of the hour. I am past the age when I can do the hardest and most worthy thing which is demanded of the manhood of our nation—to defend our liberties and the security of our homes. But I can do this other thing without much neglect of my ordinary work. I confess that it is an immense consolation to me in my incapacity to do anything else. But it is also the fulfilment of the claims of pity and charity, which form part of the innermost core of the religion which our Assembly exists to promote.

THE EASTERN UNION OF UNITARIAN AND OTHER FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

THE Annual Assembly of the "Eastern Union" was held at the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, on Thursday, September 30, and was attended by representatives from the various Churches in East Anglia and by delegates from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the National Conference and the Central Postal Mission. The Executive Committee met at twelve o'clock, after which luncheon was served in the Martineau Hall. In the afternoon visitors were taken to various places of interest in the city. The annual business meeting took place at four o'clock, and was presided over by the President of the Union, Mr. A. M. Stevens, of Norwich, who offered a welcome to the visitors from neighbouring churches. The Annual Report submitted by the Rev. Lawrence Redfern showed that progress had been made during the past year in the face of great difficulties. Several of the churches were still without a settled minister, and the thanks of the committee were due to the laymen who had supplied these vacant pulpits from time to time. It was reported that the Ipswich congregation had just invited the Rev. J. W. Saunders to become its minister, and that the invitation had been accepted. It was hoped that with the filling of this vacancy the work of the Union would be greatly strengthened. The Treasurer's Report, submitted by Mr. Hamblin, of Ipswich, and the report of the Sunday School Union read by the Rev. W. H. Sands, of Framlingham, were also adopted. There had been an increase in the attendance at the various Sunday Schools during the past year. The thanks of the Committee were due to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for the grant of £10 for special missionary work. The report of the Postal Mission prepared by Miss S. S. Dowson showed that in spite of the war and lessened opportunities of advertising good work had been done.

Short addresses were given by Mr. Ronald P. Jones, representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the National Conference, and by Miss Tagart and Miss Lake representing the Central Postal Mission. Mr. Ronald Jones pleaded for a renewal of enthusiasm and zeal in the Unitarian communities of the Eastern Counties, and pointed out that the first duty of a church was to encourage earnest religious worship to which social institutions must play a secondary part. A hearty vote of thanks was given to the retiring President, Mr. A. M. Stevens, for his services to the Union during his term of office, and Mr. G. J. Notcutt, of Ipswich, was elected President for the coming year. On the motion of Mr. R. Hamblin a vote of thanks was given to the visiting delegates, and to the Norwich people who were acting as hosts for the day.

In the evening a religious service was held, conducted by the Rev. S. H. Mellone, Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, who delivered a sermon on the type of Christian character produced by Liberal Christianity.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birmingham.—The Rev. Lawrence Clare commenced his ministry at the Church of the Messiah on Sunday, October 3, when he preached at morning and evening service to large congregations. On Wednesday, October 6, a Meeting of Welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Clare was held in the Upper Schoolroom at 8 P.M., when there were upwards of two hundred persons present. The guests included the Rev. Thomas Graham, Home Missionary, and Miss Graham, the teachers in the Sunday Schools, and others occupying official positions in connection with the Church institutions, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, Minister of the Old Meeting Church, and Mrs. Lloyd Thomas, the Rev. S. R. Gibbon, minister of the Moseley Church, and Mrs. Gibbon, the Rev. Charles Thrift, minister of the Fazeley Street Mission, and the Rev. J. Morgan Whiteman, minister of the Hurst Street Mission. The guests were received by Mr. E. P. Beale, Chairman of the Vestry Committee, and Mrs. Beale, and introduced to Mr. and Mrs. Clare. Mr. Beale welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Clare on behalf of the congregation, followed by Mr. Joseph Kimberley, on behalf of the Sunday Schools, and Mr. G. W. Challenor on behalf of the Men's Sunday Morning Class, and by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas on behalf of the Old Meeting Church and other churches included in the Midland Christian Union. Mr. Clare replied, acknowledging the greeting of the congregation, and appealing for their affection and support in carrying out the work of his ministry. At the close of the speeches refreshments were served in the Congregational Room and afterwards a short musical programme was rendered by the organist, Mr. Clarence Raybould, and members of the choir.

Dudley.—The Junior Girls' Guild at the Old Meeting House, Dudley, under supervision of Mrs. Glyn Evans, has collected together the sum of £8 for war funds by the making and sale of linen and crocheted tea cloths. £4 have been sent to the Belgian Hospital Fund, £2 to the Christmas Pudding Fund, and £2 to the Serbian Fund.

Dundee.—The Hibbert Journal Club in connection with the Free Religious Movement, which was started for the discussion of articles in The Hibbert Journal, has this session made a departure by reason of the willingness of many friends in various denominations in the city to give papers or addresses on topics of general interest. A capital syllabus has been drawn up, and the club membership stands at about eighty. The opening address was given by the President, the Rev. H. Dawtre, on 'Truth in Art and Religion.' A good discussion followed. At the Harvest Thanksgiving Services, which were held on September 19, and were well attended, the collections for the day amounted to £21 10s.

Harvest Festivals.—Further reports of Harvest Festivals have reached us from Ballyhemlin (preacher, the Rev. Alex. Gordon), Coseley (preacher, the Rev. I. Wrigley, of Lye), Newport, Isle of Wight, Nantwich (preachers, the Revs. J. Park Davis and G. Pegler), Portsmouth (preacher, the Rev. T. Bond), and Stratford (preacher, Mr. S. P. Penwarden).

Liverpool.—The Liverpool Battalion of the Boys' Own Brigade, held their Annual Church Parade at Hope Street Church on Thursday, October 7, the service being conducted by Dr. Stanley A. Mellor. Dr. Mellor took for his text the words, "Be strong," part of the Brigade motto, and emphasized the importance of being strong not only in body but more especially in mind and soul, illustrating his point by drawing a picture of Jesus of Nazareth who, though frail in body and stumbling under the weight of the cross, was yet the strongest man who ever lived. There were about seventy-five boys and officers present.

London, Islington.—The Rev. J. Vint Laughland, who has recently returned from America, commenced a six months' engagement as minister of Unity Church on Sunday, October 10, when he conducted the Harvest and Anniversary Services.

Manchester Associate Branch of Women's League.—Over two hundred persons assembled at Gorton on October 2 for the Autumn Meeting of the League, representing the following branches:—Ansdell, Burnley, Bury (Bank Street), Chesham, Blackley, Chowbent, Denton, Dukinfield, Failsworth, Gee Cross, Gorton, Heywood, Monton, Oldham, Padiham, Pendleton, Rochdale, Stalybridge, Stockport, Todmorden, and Warrington. During the afternoon Mrs. Collins Odgers, of Liverpool, gave the paper on 'The Dweller in the Innermost,' which she read at the Annual Meeting in London during Whit Week. After tea the Secretary, Miss Storrs, gave a Report of the Annual Meeting, and the President, Miss Johnstone, spoke of her recent visit to London, and again made a very strong appeal on behalf of the Belgian Hospitals. A vote of thanks to Mrs. Odgers for her paper was proposed by Mrs. Halstead of Ansdell, Miss Barker of Todmorden seconding it. Service was conducted in the evening by the Rev. A. Thornhill, M.A., who preached a very appropriate sermon on 'The Position of Woman in the Church.'

National Conference Guilds Union.—The Fourteenth Annual Report of the Guilds' Union which has just been received, reviews the work of the past year with a spirit of undiminished hopefulness, although during the past twelve months many disappointments have had to be faced, and several projects abandoned. In a few cases the present unrest has had a depressing effect on Guild activities, but on the other hand, some branches have done better work than usual. The members of the Midland Guilds' Union are specially congratulated on the fine spirit in which they have carried out their year's programme. At the beginning of the war, at the suggestion of Mr. T. M. Chalmers, Secretary of the Sunday School Association, the Council issued a letter to all the Guilds urging them to do everything they could in the relief of distress. From letters received and reports subsequently published, there is reason to believe that Guild members have been second to none in works of mercy which the war has made necessary. The Secretary, the Rev. H. Fisher Short, prepared a paper which, in his absence, was read by Miss Short at the Oxford Summer Session of Sunday School Teachers, also one on Junior Guilds, which was read at a Conference of the Midland Guilds' Union, and, in addition, he has contributed a monthly message to The Unitarian Monthly. It was, unfortunately, found necessary to discontinue the publication of Church, School, and Home, but a leaflet on 'How to Make a Children's Guild' has been extensively circulated among the churches, and this has led to a number of inquiries, and a few invitations to address special meetings on the Guild idea. It is recognised that the Union, at a time when the personal faith of many Christians is undergoing a severe test, is confronted with a challenge which it ought to take up with courage. Upon every Guild member is laid a mighty trust, and in the loyalty shown to the ideals for which the Union stands lies the hope of the future. The leaflet, giving a list of suggested subjects for Guild papers and Reading Circles, as well as details of the new prize essay scheme, can be obtained, together with the Report, from the Extension Secretary, the Rev. H. Fisher Short, the Parsonage, Park Lane, Wigan, or the General Secretary, Miss Minnie Twist, 34, Harbury Road, Birmingham. The former will be very glad to give further details of Guild work to any church wishing to form a Guild in connection with the young people of the congregation.

Nelson.—A public recognition and Welcome Meeting was held on Saturday, October 9, in connection with the settlement of the Rev. H. Bodell Smith as the first minister of the Nelson Unitarian Church. A large assembly of friends, including several from Colne, Burnley, Padiham, Accrington, Rawtenstall, and Newchurch, was present. The meeting was presided over by Mr. David Healey, J.P., of Heywood, Treasurer of the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission (District Association). Mr. J. T. Mosedale, one of the pioneers of the Nelson movement, voiced the welcome of the church, and Mr. A. Macauley that of the Sunday School. Mr. J. R. Cameron, of Accrington, spoke for the North and East Lanes. Unitarian Mission; Mr. J. T. Whittaker, of Newchurch, for the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Sunday School Union; the Rev. T. Munn, of Padiham, for the ministers of the district and Mr. J. Rickard, J.P., for the town of Nelson. Other speakers included the Revs. T. J. Jenkins (Newchurch), W. McMullan (Rawtenstall), and A. Cobden Smith (Colne), Messrs. — Shackleton, G. Reynolds (Secretary), and F. Hartley (Treasurer). The Rev. H. Bodell Smith suitably responded. Others on the platform included the Rev. J. Hinkins, M.A., of Accrington, and Mr. E. W. Smith, M.Sc., of Birmingham (son); several ministers of other denominations wrote regretting their inability to be present, and the Revs. D. L. Nichol (Congregationalist), of Brierfield, and H. Rolfe (Baptist), of Nelson, joined the gathering at tea. The interior of the church has been tastefully renovated, and the re-opening services on the following day were attended by large congregations.

North Midland Churches Roll of Honour.—The Executive Committee of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association have prepared a special issue of the local periodical containing a list of members of families connected with congregations and schools in the Association serving with the colours. This Roll of Honour is intended for free distribution among the members of the constituent congregations. The numbers given are as follows:—

Belper (Field Row Chapel) ..	19
Boston (Spain Lane Chapel) ..	3
Chesterfield (Elder Yard Chapel) ..	45
Derby (Friar Gate Chapel) ..	32
Gainsborough (Beaumont Street Chapel) ..	4
Hinckley (Great Meeting) ..	38
Ilkeston (High Street Chapel) ..	1
Kirkstead (Presbyterian Chapel) ..	1
Leicester (Great Meeting) ..	49
„ (Free Christian Church) ..	9
Lincoln (High Street Chapel, church was closed 1912 to Oct., 1915) ..	1
Loughborough (Victoria Street Church) ..	5
Mansfield (Old Meeting House) ..	40
Newark (Free Christian Church) ..	4
Northampton (Kettering Road Church) ..	11
Nottingham (Christ Church) ..	5
Nottingham (High Pavement Chapel) ..	68
—	335
—	—

Sheffield.—The Rev. C. J. Street writes as follows:—"I see in your report of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union Annual Meetings at Malton I am made to say that we have opened four new buildings in the Sheffield district in the past year. What I said was, within the past four years. I wish the other statement was true, but the facts as they are seem quite encouraging."

South East Wales Unitarian Society.—The Quarterly Meeting of the Society was held on Monday, October 11, in the Parc-y-Velvet Chapel, Carmarthen. The chapel has been closed for many years, but it has recently been beautifully decorated and renovated under the guidance of Mr. Ronald P. Jones, and the meeting was held a fortnight later than usual to synchronise with the re-opening. Services were held on the previous day, conducted by the Rev. T. P. Spedding, Missionary Agent of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and Prof. Moore, whose indefatigable labours have been largely instrumental in bringing about such a satisfactory result. About fifty people were present in the morning and twice that number in the evening. The cost of renovating the church, it may be mentioned, has been about £250, of which £100 has still to be obtained. The proceedings on Monday began with a Conference in the afternoon presided over by the Rev. Simon Jones, attended by representative of affiliated churches and several of the Cardigan churches. Papers on 'The Greatest Need of our Unitarian Churches To-Day,' were read by the Rev. T. Arthur Thomas, of Llandyssul, the present Secretary of the Association and editor of Yr Ymofynydd, and the Rev. E. T. Evans, Aberdare. A discussion followed, opened by the Rev. D. G. Rees (Gellionen), in which the Rev. T. P. Spedding and the Rev. R. J. Jones, among others, took part. A vote of thanks to Mr. Thomas and Mr. Evans was proposed by Mr. L. N. Williams, seconded by Mr. W. Pritchard. The business meeting was held at 5 o'clock, and at 6.30 a brief devotional service was conducted by the Rev. W. J. Phillips. At the Public Meeting Prof. Moore took the chair, and excellent addresses on 'The Mission of the Unitarian Churches in the World of To-Day' were delivered by the Revs. Simon Jones, E. O. Jenkins, T. P. Spedding, and Mr. John Lewis. The Rev. Philemon Moore, the last speaker, expressed the pleasure with which he and the friends at Carmarthen welcomed the members of the South East Wales Unitarian Society to their restored church.

Unitarian Home Missionary College.—The new session, 1915-16, of the Unitarian Home Missionary College was opened on Wednesday, October 6 by the Principal, the Rev. S. H. Mellone, M.A. D.Sc., who gave an address on 'Christianity and War in Ancient and Modern Times.' Apologies for absence were received from Mr. F. W. Monks, Mr. H. Marsden, Mr. J. Taylor-Jones, and the Rev. Dendy Agate. Among others there were present Messrs. D. A. Little, J. Wigley, and G. H. Leigh, and the Revs. E. L. H. Thomas, R. Lee, H. Barnes, J. McDowell, W. G. Cadman, H. Haycock, J. Worthington, C. Biggins, H. Taylor, E. W. Seeley, J. Ellis, H. McLachlan, W. S. McLauchlan, C. Peach, E. Thackray, and G. A. Payne (Hon. Secretary). Two new students were admitted. The Principal said that the College was making itself felt as a helpful and a hopeful force in our churches.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

BLIND DIVERS.

Diving, strangely enough, is one of the occupations in which men who have lost their sight at the front are being trained under the auspices of the Blinded Soldiers' and Sailors' Care Committee. Mr. C. Arthur Pearson shows that it is not quite so unsuitable as it sounds. The diver who is building breakwaters and piers works in the dark, for even if the water is clear his work disturbs it and renders it impossible for him to see anything through it. The diver is one of the best paid of workmen. He has an attendant to look after him while below and when he returns to the surface. The occupation is one which it is believed, will prove to be extremely suitable to intelligent blinded soldiers and sailors who have had some mechanical training.

WAR AND THE HOLY LAND.

It is with an unpleasant shock that one realises how completely war has changed the Holy Places in Syria and Palestine. According to the accounts given by refugees in Alexandria, all the convents in Jerusalem of the different denominations of the Allied Powers have been transformed into barracks. Recruits exercise in the Plain of Samaria and on the Mount of Olives, where, it is said, German officers have installed posts of observation. A shooting range has been set up on Mount Golgotha, all the roads are choked with convoys of munitions and foodstuffs, and thousands of peasants have been requisitioned to dig trenches along strategic positions in the Holy Land.

WOMEN AND HEALTH AUTHORITIES.

As there will this year be no elections to Town Councils and Metropolitan Borough Councils on Nov. 1, most of the Councils now re-assembling after the summer holidays will shortly be filling casual vacancies, as provided by the National Registration and Elections Act. The Women's Local Government Society points out that legislation last year greatly widened the field of selection of men and women for service on Town and County Councils by admitting non-electors with a "residential qualification" of twelve months within the electoral area. This long-desired reform renders practically available the services of married women, and of other women living at home, as completely as such services are available for the administration of the Poor Law, and it is urged that it would be to the advantage of the nation to secure the co-operation on every Public Health Authority of two or more women of judgment and experience. Every year brings new enactments that strengthen the argument; for instance, Health Authorities have now been empowered to establish Maternity and Infant Welfare Centres, and for these it is certain that the supervision of women is required. Representatives of a ward in which a vacancy occurs and their fellow Councillors may be glad to have suggested to them the nomination of some suitable woman whose election would reflect credit on the Council.

GRAIN AND LIQUOR.

The following extract with regard to the wastage of foodstuffs in the production of alcoholic liquors is from a pamphlet published by the War Savings Committee:—"Immense quantities of food materials such as barley, wheat, and maize are used in this country for the manufacture of beer and spirits. As beer and spirits are almost valueless as food, and can only be classed as luxuries pure and simple, all this grain is lost for food purposes. If this grain were available for food, both for man and beast, the prices of bread and meat would be lowered. It has been estimated that the average expenditure on alcoholic drinks in this country amounts to something over 6s. 6d. per family per week. If every family in the land were to cut their drink bill down by, say, one-half and invest the saving on this one item in the War Loan the amount would come to £80,000,000 per annum. The plain inference from this is that the Government, which is controlling supplies in so many directions at the present time, should strictly limit the amount of grain to be used in the production of alcoholic liquors. As Mr. Guy Hayler points out, if only half the grain now wasted in this way were saved, some forty million bushels would be available for the food of the people. We have the most satisfactory examples from Russia, France, Norway, and Germany to go upon, and the latest information from Sweden shows that the government of that country in response to demands from the people, have issued an order limiting the manufacture of brandy by half the former quantity. Surely we shall not continue to lag behind other countries in a matter of such vital importance!

THE SECRETARY OF THE PEACE SOCIETY.

It is a pleasure to know that although the Peace Society is losing the services of Dr. Evans Darby as Secretary, a position he has held for twenty-seven years, the Committee has elected him a vice-president and invited him to accept a seat upon the Executive Committee in order to secure a continuance of his ripe experience and wise counsel. Dr. Darby, who was born at Langharne (Wales) more than seventy years ago, is an authority on international law and his work on 'International Tribunals' has been recognised by the Hague Conferences as one of the principal works of reference on this subject. He is a vice-president of the International Law Association and a member of the International Bureau of Peace, and in pursuance of his duties he has visited almost every part of the civilised world. It will be a source of satisfaction to him that he leaves the Peace Society, financially and otherwise, in a much more vigorous condition than it was when he became its secretary, and that it is consequently better equipped for the difficult work which lies ahead.

THE PEASANT ARTS FELLOWSHIP.

The Peasant Arts Fellowship is resuming its meetings on October 22, when Mr. Godfrey Blount will open the session with a lecture on a subject which he has made particularly his own, "The Meaning and Making of Toys." Subsequent lectures will be "Art and Life in a Northern Factory Town," by Mr. H. Barrett Carpenter (Nov. 19); "Russian Peasants and their Religion," by the Rev. H. J. Fynes-Clinton (Dec. 17), and "Rural Education," by Mr. Christopher Turnor (Jan. 14). The meetings will be held at 7.30 p.m. in the Conference Hall, University of London Club, 19, Gower Street, W.C.

Board and Residence, &c.

LONDON.—Board - Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. Best position. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

A BERYSTWYTH.—NITHSDALE, PORTLAND STREET. Board-Residence, or Private Apartments, suitable for invalids, one minute from sea, terms moderate.—Miss BAIRD.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments, S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

BRIGHTON.—Close to Sea.—Quiet private house. Bed sitting rooms and general room, with board. Terms moderate.—Miss LUCY KENDALL, 20, Charlotte Street, Marine Parade.

TYPEWRITING.

MISS A. BECKS, 50, Rupert Street, London, W. (near Piccadilly Circus), undertakes all kinds of Copying, Shorthand, and duplicating. Speed and accuracy. No wrong spelling, misplaced apostrophes, &c. Indistinct MS. intelligently deciphered. Moderate prices (special reductions for regular work). Pupils taken.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists.

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

APPLES.—Blenheim Orange, 45lbs. 8s. 6d., 21lbs. 4s. 6d., excellent cooking, 6s. and 3s. 6d. Cox's Orange Pippin (small), 10s. 6d. and 5s. 3d. Carriage paid in England and Wales.—FRANK ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston, Herts.

IRISH PILLOW LINEN in bundles of Remnants, sufficient to make six full-size Pillow Cases, only 7s. 6d. Postage 5d. Genuine offer. Catalogue free. Send a postcard to-day. HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (Old) Bought. —Up to 6s. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 11s. on silver; 14s. on gold; 36s. on platinum. Immediate Cash. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed.—S. CANN & Co., 69A, Market Street, Manchester. Bankers, Parr's. Mention INQUIRER

Printed by THE ATHENEUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 16, 1915.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3825.
NEW SERIES, No. 928.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1915.

[ONE PENNY.]

NATIONAL CONFERENCE of Unitarian, Liberal Christian, Free Christian, Presbyterian, and other Non-Subscribing or Kindred Congregations.

PROGRAMME of the TWELFTH TRIENNIAL MEETINGS, which will be held in London on OCTOBER 26th, 27th, and 28th.

TUESDAY, October 26th.

4.30-6.30. Tea and Reception by the President and Mrs. Rathbone.

7.30. Religious Service at Essex Church, conducted by Rev. C. Craddock. Preacher, Rev. Dr. L. P. Jacks.

A Collection will be made on behalf of the National Conference.

WEDNESDAY, October 27th.

9.30. Communion Service at Stamford Street Chapel, Blackfriars, conducted by Revs. Dr. Hargrove and F. K. Freeston.

10.45. Address by the President of the Conference.

11.15. Discussion of Report on Public Worship, opened by Revs. Joseph Wood and Dr. Mellone.

3.0. Triennial Business Meeting.

6.0. Address by Prof. Gilbert Murray on "Ethical Problems of the war." Others than Ministers and Delegates (whose names have already been sent), should apply for Tickets for this Address (enclosing stamped and directed envelope) to Rev. James Harwood, 66, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

THURSDAY, October 28th.

10.0. Religious Service, conducted by Rev. J. C. Ballantyne.

10.30. Discussion of Report on Public Worship resumed by Mr. W. Byng Kenrick and Rev. F. H. Vaughan. The General Discussion will close at 11.45, when Miss Clephan (President of the Sunday School Association), Rev. J. Morley Mills (President of the Manchester District Sunday School Association), and Rev. J. Arthur Pearson (Editor of the Sunday School Monthly), will speak on Sunday School Work and the Religious Education of Children and Young People.

N.B.—All the Meetings, when not otherwise stated, will be held at Essex Hall.

JAMES HARWOOD, Secretary.

NOTICE.

In order to enable persons under present conditions to reach their homes at an earlier hour, it has been decided to change the time of Professor GILBERT MURRAY'S Address on Wednesday Evening from 8 o'clock to 6 o'clock.

'THE INQUIRER.'

THE ISSUES OF
OCTOBER 30th and NOVEMBER 6th

WILL CONTAIN

The Official Report of The National Conference of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Churches.

WHICH WILL BE HELD ON

October 26th, 27th, and 28th.

Orders for extra copies should be sent in at once.

'THE INQUIRER.'

13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

October

24. Rev. GILBERT THOMAS SADLER, M.A., LL.B. (of Wimbledon).

31. Rev. W. J. JUPP (of Letchworth).

November.

7. Rev. WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.

14. Rev. RICHARD HENRY LAMBLEY, M.A. (of Horwich).

The Evening Services will not be resumed for the present.

HIBBERT TRUST.

ONE SCHOLARSHIP on this foundation, of the value of £120, tenable for One Year, will be awarded in December next, provided that a Candidate of sufficient merit presents himself. Candidates are required solemnly to declare in writing that it is their intention to exercise the office of Minister of Religion amongst those who profess Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form, and who do not require for themselves or their ministers subscription to any doctrinal articles of belief. They must also furnish satisfactory evidence of age, graduation, &c., in accordance with the regulations, which may be obtained from the Secretary of the Trust.

Names and addresses of candidates should be in the hands of the Secretary by November 1st, and the required declaration, certificates, testimonials, and all other information must be in the hands of the Secretary not later than Saturday, November 6th.

FRANCIS H. JONES, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon Square,
London, W.C.

UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY

On Thursday next, Oct. 28, at
ESSEX HALL.

Meeting of the Council at 2.30 p.m.

General Meeting at 3 p.m. PAPER BY

Mr. R. MORTIMER MONTGOMERY, K.C.,

"Legal Records of an Ancient Chapel for Two Hundred Years."

A few exhibits will be shown and described.

UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH,
Horwich.

BAZAAR,

November 24th, 25th, 27th, 1915.

To raise Funds to meet cost of repairs to fabric and pay off debt. Upwards of £200 required. The congregation appeals earnestly for assistance to raise this amount. This appeal is endorsed by the N. and E. Lancashire Unitarian Mission. Donations of material and gifts of money will be thankfully acknowledged by R. H. LAMBLEY, M.A., MONTCLIFFE, or W. B. BURGESS, 109, CHORLEY NEW ROAD.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
Bishop's Stortford.

Head Mistress: MISS ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: MISS ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

BEFORE THE WAR—AND AFTER.

Six Lectures by

Prof. R. C. F. DOLLEY, M.A.
(of University College, Nottingham),

At ESSEX HALL, on Thursdays, Nov. 4 to Dec. 9

At 7.30 p.m.

TICKETS (for Course, 1s.; for Single Lectures, 3d.), and Syllabus from the Hon. Sec., Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, Hackney, N.E.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence. — For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont Street, Liverpool.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, October 24.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. HALL.
 Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W., 11, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort Road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT; 7,— Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. M. WESTON, D.D., Ph.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11. Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford High Road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.
 Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOTH POPE.
 Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63, Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.
 Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.
 Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.; 6.30, Rev. G. M. ELLIOTT.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond Road, 11, Rev. F. W. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland Road, 7, Mr. J. BEGG.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Mr. S. MOSS; 6.30, Mr. J. S. MACKIE.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham Road, South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE ASSEMBLY ROOM, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. F. MUMFORD, B.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKE.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.)
 DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Mr. FRANK TAYLOR.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Supply.
 HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. LAMBLEY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FRANCIS WOOD.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook Street Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 SOUTHEND, Crowstone Gymnasium, North View Drive, Westcliff, 11; and 6.30, at Darnley Road Church.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. VICTOR MOODY.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Road Institute, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11, Rev. H. E. B. STEIGHT, M.A.

BIRTH.

HUXLEY.—On the 16th of October, at 27, Westbourne Square, W., the wife of Leonard Huxley, of a son.

DEATHS.

BRETTELL.—On the 15th inst., after a short illness, James Alfred Brettell, of Yew Tree House, Quarry Bank, and of Colley Gate, Cradley, aged 58 years. Deeply mourned. Interred at Park Lane Chapel, Netherend, Cradley, on Tuesday, the 19th inst.

TALBOT.—On the 17th inst., at 19, Woodlands Road, Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Maria Emma, the dearly loved wife of Sir William Henry Talbot, of Manchester, in her eightieth year. Friends will please accept this the only intimation.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

A LADY, who has had varied experience, desires re-engagement as COMPANION. For particulars and reference apply—Rev. James Harwood, 60, Howitt Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

NO SALARY.—Lady of Liberal Views would help invalid or elderly lady temporary or permanent, housekeeping, nursing, &c. Prefer relieving nurse for war, professional status. Midlands, West, South.—“M.” INQUIRER OFFICE, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed “Inquirer.”

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, “Inquirer” Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	515	Towards International Government	519	Our Men at the Front	521
A DANGER	517	Life of John Viriamu Jones	519	Ministers and the Army	521
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES	517	PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	519	National Conference	522
FEELING THE FAR THING	518	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	522
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Belgian Hospital Fund	520	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	523
The Work of Canon Barnett	518	Manchester College, Oxford	520

NOTICE.

The Official Report of the National Conference of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Churches, which will be held in London, October 26th, 27th, 28th, will be published in THE INQUIRER on Oct. 30th and Nov. 6th. The Report will not be issued separately in book form. Orders for extra copies of the two numbers should be sent in at once.

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14, Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

FROM time to time the country may work itself up into a state of feverish anxiety; but our Belgian Hospital Fund never suffers from nerves. It just goes steadily on. Occasionally we issue a special appeal and then there are many signs of quickened generosity; but the real strength of our work lies in the steady flow of gifts week by week, which are thus ready for all the daily unsensational needs as soon as they arise. This week we have received our monthly lists from Calais, some of them fairly heavy. The orders have been placed already, and all being well they will be shipped next week. This is the regular routine which the fine support we have received enables us to follow, so far without any failure or refusal. May it continue so to the end.

* * *

By the time these words are in the hands of our readers a deputation from the Fund will be in France. We hope to visit some convalescent depots in a new district, where we are told that there is urgent need of our help. The news of the work which we are doing has travelled, and there is in consequence a pleasant air of expectancy and welcome about our visits. We shall go this time with a special view to inspecting urgent needs for the winter, and we promise our readers that we will not be slow to report our doings on our return and to tell them exactly what amount of additional help is needed.

* * *

SIR EDWARD GREY'S speech on the new situation in the Balkans last week was unexciting, and many people have gone so far as to describe it as meagre and disappointing. But what did these critics expect? The edge of it had been a little blunted by the earlier pronouncement by M. Viviani in the French Chamber, and no one out of Bedlam can really ask for serious diplomatic disclosures at the present moment. It is clear that with Greece and Roumania still hesitating, and probably only open to the argument of superior military force, the whole situation is one of great delicacy. Unless we believe that it can be handled better by some one else than by Sir Edward Grey we must trust him, and give him the support of a strong public opinion which he needs. For the rest the public has received the assurance, which it has a right to demand, that help on an adequate scale will be sent to Serbia without delay.

* * *

THE new situation makes big demands upon us. It will mean more men, more money, and possibly a longer war. We had better set to work at once without wasting time and strength in grumbling. Of course we shall settle down to it in a week or two, that is our way; but meanwhile some of our newspapers and public men seem bent upon indulging themselves in an orgy of discontent. It is mostly temper, combined with a certain amount of genuine alarm about the situation. If only they would tell us cheerfully and confidently what we ought to do, or put one indefinite charge into a concrete form, there would at least be something for the public mind to bite on. But these vague charges of incapacity, coupled with dark hints that they could tell a great many damaging things if only they had a mind to, are nothing less than monstrous folly. They weaken our strength at home and lower our reputation abroad, and at the same time they misrepresent the real temper of our people. We are not so anxious for a scapegoat, or so incapable of steadiness of mind, or so obsessed by the mistakes of the Government that we cannot remember their splendid achievements, as some of our pressmen give us credit for.

* * *

LORD DERBY has adopted the attitude on recruiting which we anticipated last week. A firm believer in compulsory service on its own merits, he is determined to give the customary way of raising the men required every possible chance. In other words he is going to be loyal to his job, and is justly angry at any attempt to queer the pitch. Under his guidance the whole country is being organised for a campaign of persuasion. The slackers' are not going to have an easy time of it. All that public opinion can do will be done. In this effort strong support has been received from the organised forces of labour. They are justifying their opposition to conscription by trying to prove that the men can be got without it. The Joint Labour Recruiting Board has issued the following appeal:—

There are in the country at the present moment tens of thousands of men of military age and fitness who have not yet joined the Colours. Every effort must now be made to secure these men. Defeat in this war or even an inconclusive peace, would mean for us not only the loss of prestige as a nation and the certainty that the conflict would be renewed in a few years' time, but the loss of those personal liberties and privileges which have taken centuries of effort to win.

* * *

A GOOD many official particulars of the recent Zeppelin raid in the London area have been given to the public. All local directions have, of course, been suppressed, but Londoners know where to look for these slight but grim touches of the horrors of war. The whole thing was a brutal and heartless business. The loss of life and the damage to property have no military significance. When bombs are rained from the sky it is clearly a matter of chance where they fall. Their most likely destination is the homes of the people, their probable victims women and little children and men incapable of military service. Naturally there is an outcry for more effective measures of protection, and we hope that London will soon be as immune from this kind of attack as Paris has been for a considerable time. Meanwhile, the public can do a great deal to help the authorities and to protect themselves. There is no reason why people should be crowded together in a single building in what may be called the danger zone. A heavy responsibility rests upon the organisers of evening meetings and entertainments. It would do none of us any harm if they were abandoned altogether for the present, and we remained quietly in our own houses. Many people have adopted this course already, and in so doing have set an excellent public example.

* * *

WE are sorry to notice that there has been some clamour for reprisals. It found voice in a meeting last week in the City, which seems to have made up in violent rhetoric for what it lacked in dignity and sound judgment. In part this demand is the expression of natural feelings of anger which will pass away; but it finds support in some quarters because it is believed that the Germans will go on raiding us until we make them smart for it. This opinion we believe to be mistaken. Reprisals might equally well spur them on to be more savage and prolific in outrage. In any case we have no desire to compete with them in frightfulness. This is evidently the belief of Lord Bryce, who protests in a letter to The Times against the policy of tit-for-tat, because it is both bad policy and bad morality.

